The conduct at the game here February 1 was atrocious in several instances, although it is probable that a small group of spectators contributed the major portion of the hissing and booing. There are always a few boorish individuals who cannot enjoy an athletic contest unless they hurl personal insults at the opposition. But it must be admitted that the game represents another black mark on the University students' far from unsullied "sportsmanship" record.

Duke has expressed its willingness to forget the past and proceed on amicable terms. We should at least meet them halfway. Saturday night we are scheduled to play Duke on their floor; this game will offer Carolina students an opportunity to partially make amends by exemplary conduct for the unfortunate exhibition here.

Shared Accomplishments

Not many days ago the papers carried tall headlines telling of Rear-Admiral Byrd's Antarctic expedition's being trapped in the polar sea by an immense floe of ice. The reports stated that Byrd and his men were behind a vast area of drifted ice through which no ship could pass, and that there was grave danger of their being forced to face another Antarctic winter with an insufficient supply of food.

The whole of America, which a few weeks ago had rejoiced at the news of Byrd's success, was cast into gloom upon reading the dark news. People everywhere watched and listened anxiously for the daily reports. The thoughts of everyone turned with trepidation toward the little party of Americans caught at the frozen bottom of the world. North Carolina no less than her neighboring states was fearful for the safety of the expedition; Chapel Hill was as much aroused as other towns and cities.

But up on Pittsboro street is a house whose occupants hailed news of the expedition with more personal concern than any group of people in Chapel Hill. On the wall of one of the rooms of this house hangs an autographed picture of Richard Evelyn Byrd, and the boys who live there call him one of the brothers, because he, like each of them, is a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity.

They are proud of him. They were proud of him when he flew over the North pole; they were proud of him when he flew the Atlantic; when he pushed off from New Zealand for the Antarctic; and prouder still when a few weeks ago he was the first man to fly across both poles.

All of which may seem to have no special point. But there is a point. It seems to us that the feeling of kinship these boys have with Byrd and his achievements is an example of the workings of one of the most valuable things membership in any fraternal organization can give a man. We are speaking of that unselfish feeling of shared accomplishments which men who are bound by a common tie have for each other. It is something that makes success more worth striving for, this thing of knowing that there are others besides your own selfish self to take pride in and share with you the glory of achievement.—J. The University Progresses

Plans were laid for the one hundred and thirty-sixth session of the University of North Carolina under circumstances which were decidedly unfavorable. The prevalence of hard times is still causing the Board of Trustees and the officers of administration considerable worry and uneasiness. Reports from the office of the registrar show, however, that the present enrollment is in excess of that of a year ago. This is positive proof of one thing—the state of North Carolina is progressing. The progress of its university is, of course, in direct proportion to the success of its people and their interest in the cause of higher education.

That the scarcity of money and the lamentable agrarian discontent have placed a damper on the progress of the state cannot be denied. But be this as it may, the fact of the present large enrollment proves conclusively that the spirit which underlies the activities of the people of the state has not been materially adulterated. True it is that appropriations for the University have been cut down, but this is undoubtedly a temporary measure devised by the people of the state in a time of depression. It is yet far from time to think that the people of North Carolina have lost any of their interest in their state university.

Although the progressive spirit of the people has been a potent factor in steering the University through the present period of depression, great praise is due the administrative officials of the institution. Their efforts in securing gifts from wealthy alumni have served a very worthy purpose—that of supplementing state appropriations.

When the people of the state of North Carolina cease to back their university, it will decline from year to year; but as long as they stand behind it some provision will be made to supplement small appropriations, and material growth will be a certainty.. —J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

DOWN WITH USELESS ORGANIZATIONS

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

I have been on the University campus for five years, and during the course of that time I have had an unusual opportunity to watch the mad scramble for collegiate honors, the unreasonable effort on the part of a number of otherwise sane students to sell their hours of study for a mess of pottage.

Extra-curricular activities in themselves are admittedly harmless. Yet I have never seen the campus which did not overdo them, or the student who, once caught in the swim, was not well-nigh drowned. In the rush for honors, with their attendant list in the Yackety Yack at the end of the year, the sense of values is lost. Perfectly good time is given up to join this, become a member of that, expend hot air here, and attend endless meetings somewhere else.

There is something in the idea of contact with other students or with faculty advisers of activities, but these contacts can be made just as readily in the classroom or study. The training of which one hears is negligible, and in fact non-existant in the case of honor organizations.

Perhaps it would be a good idea for the campus if all such activities were abolished for a time. A welcome breathing space in which we could re-evaluate activities would be gained, and many useless organizations swept away. Such activities as the news organs of the campus should be continued, of course, for they serve a recognizable purpose. A clean sweep of a few of the more parasitical activities and organizations might serve to raise the standards of scholarship. If this can be accomplished, then surely the idea is not wholly without value.

ENDORSES MARGARET VALE'S LETTER

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

Just a word of hearty endorsement to the letter in your Sunday edition by Margaret Vale. It is with difficulty I have repressed the desire to congratulate Mr. Mebane on his breadth of vision and penetration as so clearly demonstrated in everything he writes. Only the realization that such people revel in being on the wrong side of the argument and in being denounced by the masses has prevented my saying something before. I hope the accusation of childishness didn't perturb John's phlegm. That would be asking too much.

CONCERNING AN "OLD-MAIDISH" CRITICISM

After reading "Embers of the Gleam" in the recent edition of the Carolina Magazine, I was very pleased with its fluent verse, delicate diction, and beautiful description. But I was no more pleased with these than I was spiritually enlightened by the story itself.

The worst was yet to come, for when I read a criticism in the Sunday Tar Heel an element of disgust came over me. I was disgusted because I thought no one could look upon a beautiful portrayal of such a wonderful thing, as a "sugar-coated pill" to be inadvertantly swallowed by the reader. I had thought this viewpoint might be held by an old maid in a small New England town, but even then I would give her enough credit to allow that it was purely hypocritical.

This supposedly destructive critic admitted the beauty of description in this tale, and not only denied the real subject's beauty, but called it repulsive.

He said, "the 'innate' is always genuine, the superficial 'affected.' Since beauty is the main object and since all the beauty seems concentrated around the 'superficial,' we may designate 'affectation' as the main characteristic of this tale." Then he asked if the innate should not always be the more beautiful.

My answer, in agreement with the critic, is yes. But why does he not see the beauty of the innateness (the natural human behavior) in this story? Judging from all he said, I blame it solely on the fact that he himself cannot see any beauty in nature for if he could why does he not see it here? Is he one who clamors for the bright spot, the clear color, forgetting that it is the shadows in the picture that make it so mysteriously lovely?

He contended, "it is impossible to associate beauty in its pleasurable excitement of the heart,' without a certain sense of distaste." Alas a spark of life! Here he contradicted himself. First he told us that he could not "swallow the pill," then he admitted that it is beauty "in its most elevated form." Is it that he cannot bear the frankness of the story? If so, he might better join the old maid in New England and perhaps discuss it in a low whisper so that none but they could hear. If the author had intended this story to give merely "a pleasurable excitement of the heart," why did he not describe the happenings in the room that night? I dare say it would afford some (since I have discovered there are such) much more "pleasurable excitement." Certainly if he were capable of portraying " ethereal beauty" (to use the critic's own words), he would be capable of handling, and handling well, a more delicately risque angle of the subject.

If one extracts from this story its exquisite diction, and

" We Are All Just Children of the Moon" say the Play-Likers of N. C. C. W., and as for the male population of the University they too say—"We are all just children of the MOON." The student council says it; the student body president says it. It must be so.

Ubem is a regular sport . . . he will wager any sum up to fifty cents, but he prefers to bet on the Duke football games because he thinks our team has a better chance to win. . . . On a tramp he made through the streets of Lucknow he accidentally fell into a sacred pool and it was several hours before his fraternity brothers found him sitting at the bottom of the pool reading a book of verse. . . . Although he much prefers to teach languages, he has chosen to teach astronomy because he has an ardent desire to learn something about astronomy. . . . Ubem's most vivid experience, to his mind, was the trip he once made on board a tramp steamer accompanied by Joseph Conrad, who profited by contact with Ubem to the extent that Ubem suggested the matter of practically all of Conrad's tales of the sea. . . . Schnitzelfritzner is at present working on an idea that Daniel Boone really stole the honor of his discovery and exploration of Kentucky from the Schnitzelfritzner family, and if successful in his research intends to prove that the loess of China far exceeds that of Siberia in weight. . . . . .

MATMEN SET FOR CONFERENCE FOES

Wrestlers Will Meet Davidson Tonight To Begin Series Southern Tests

Victorious in its one Southern Conference test and repulsed by Navy and Princeton after great fights in tough intersectional meets, the University wrestling team last night concluded two days of hard work and is all set for tonight's test with Davidson in the Cats' gym.

The Tar Heels put up a brilliant exhibition at Princeton Saturday night. With seven matches gone and one to go, Carolina was leading 13-12, only to lose a time decision in the heavyweight division. The Tar Heels sent Houghton, a scrappy 165 pounder, against Bill Barfield, Princeton's 200-pound captain and football star.

George Stallings, brilliant 125-pounder, and Fred Ferguson, staunch 175-pounder, won falls to keep their season's record unmarred. In three meets these men have scored 13 points apiece, having won falls against Navy and Princeton, and time advantages against V. P. I.

The intersectional foes are gone from the Tar Heel schedule. Beginning with Davidson there tonight, Carolina meets in order N. C. State here Saturday, V. M. I. there February 22, Duke here March 3, and participates in the Southern Conference tournament at Lexington March 7 and 8.

Carolina won its one Southern Conference test, having a good margin over V. P. I., and the showing made against Navy was creditable. The showing against Princeton was especially fine, as the Tigers have a strong team and have beaten Duke 28-3.

Co-op work is working against the Tar Heel grapplers. When George Thompson gets back February 22, Cowper and Moore, varsity 165 and 155 pounders respectively, will be forced to leave for the same reason that has kept Thompson out this winter. These losses will offset the return of the star heavy, and the loss of these men will be felt.

Coach Chuck Quinlan thinks the matmen are headed for better days. Captain Wayne Woodard, 135-pounder, has been out of shape much of the season, but is rapidly returning to form, and much is expected of him in later meets.

The Tar Heels expect to enter a strong team in the Southern Conference tournament, which is to be held at V. M. I. in Lexington, Va., March 7 and 8, and there is a wealth of good men on the squad to enter. Among the best are Bell or Usher, 115 pounds; Tsumas, 145 pounds; Moore, 155 pounds; Cowper, 165 pounds; Houghton, heavy, as well as the undefeated Stallings and Ferguson.

The strong Question Mark team smothered Law School No. 2 yesterday afternoon in a rather one-sided battle, 44-17. H. Beam led the scoring for the Question Marks with 13 points. He was closely followed by Jackson with 12 and McDermid with 11. Story and Kellogg accounted for Law School's 17 points.

The lineup:

Ques. M. (44)		Law Sch. (17)

Tar Heels Bow Before A 26-28 Defeat By State

J. Brown Stars For State; Marpet And Neiman Turn In Good Work For Home Team.

Trailing 16-10 at the end of the first half, N. C. State came back strong after the intermission to defeat Carolina 28-26 last night in the fastest game seen in the Tin Can this year.

Although both teams had scored via the foul route before the end of the first minute, the game opened slowly. The score at the end of the first five minutes was 3-2 with Carolina leading. All five points came as results of fouls. J. Brown threw the first goal from the floor and State went into the lead, but Marpet tossed in a long one a few seconds later to recapture the lead for the Tar Heels. The rest of the half was all Carolina with Marpet as the big gun in the attack and Harper leading the defense.

State came back after the half and, playing an entirely different brand of ball from that displayed in the first half, took the lead midway and went on to win. Harper opened the scoring after three minutes of play, but Johnson, Morgan, and J. Brown accounted for five points in the next two minutes to bring the score to 18-15. Dameron sank a charity throw. In the next three minutes J. Brown went wild and sank three goals from the floor and Haar added one to send State into the lead 22-19. Morgan and Brown added six points to State's total while Neiman was garnering two for Carolina and with four minutes to play the score stood 28-21. Carolina rallied at this point and, with Neiman scoring all five points, brought the score to 28-26 with less than a minute to play. Here State got control of the ball and ended the scoring.

J. Brown for the victors was the outstanding man on the floor In addition to scoring more than half his team's points, he played a sound floor game. He was ably assisted by his entire team with Morgan and Johnson showing up best. Marpet on the offensive and Harper on the defense were Carolina's mainstays during the first half. Neiman took over the burden of the offense during the second half, but the defense apparently collapsed until it was too late to stop the Terrors. Edwards showed up well during the short time he played.

The lineups:

State (28)		Carolina (26)
J. Brown (15)		Dameron (5)
	L. F.
Haar (5)		Neiman (7)
	R. F.
Morgan (5)		Harper (2)
	C.
Rose		W. Brown (4)
	L. G.
Johnson (3)		Marpet (8)

Substitutions for Carolina: Green, Edwards and Alexander.

Referee: Crawford (Davidson).

S. I. C. SPORTS

(By Browning Roach)

Last week's conference play ended with only two teams, Alabama and Washington and Lee, remaining in the undefeated class. Sewanee, which held third place last week with two victories and no defeats, dropped down to fourth by reason of losses to Tennessee and Washington and Lee. Wins over V. P. I. and V. M. I. saved Sewanee from being relegated to the lower ranks of the conference and she is still conceded a chance at the title.

Alabama and Washington and Lee both clinched their grip on first and second places respectively by adding three scalps each to their belts. Alabama trimmed L. S. U. twice in succession and finished up the week's play by taking Tennessee down 29-14 Friday to ring up a total of eight in the win column. The Generals of Washington and Lee romped over Maryland, North Carolina and Sewanee in quick succession to keep their slate clear and continue close behind Alabama with seven victories and no defeats.

The Kentucky Wildcats sharpened up their claws and scratched through the defensive work of Clemson and Georgia Tech for two wins and replaced Sewanee in third place. Duke stepped up to fourth place by conquering for the second time this season N. C. State, the 1929 champions. State had previously defeated Georgia at Athens and the loss to Duke evened things up for the Red Terrors in the week's play.

Georgia, after dropping the tilt to N. C. State, took revenge on Clemson 39 to 24, making it the second loss of the Clemson quint for the week. Tennessee, after blasting Sewanee's perfect record Wednesday night, fell before Alabama, 29 to 24, and then climbed back to the victory column Saturday night in a close game which she took from her old rival, Vanderbilt, 23-21.

North Carolina made a four-game invasion of Virginia and Maryland and alternated on the victories and defeats. The Tar Heels trimmed V. P. I. 30-21 Wednesday, fell before Washington and Lee 39-24 Thursday, outpointed Virginia 40-37 Friday and winded up the week by trailing Maryland 34-26 Saturday.

Louisiana State oiled up its scoring machine after the twin loss to Alabama and turned Auburn back twice, 44 to 27 and 49 to 45. Mississippi led her home state rival, the Mississippi Aggies, by four points in two games and won 30 to 26 and 23 to 19.

Florida, Tulane and South Carolina took a rest from conference play. Neither Florida nor South Carolina has seen much conference activity this season, the former having lost the only contest in which she has engaged, while the latter has dropped two without having registered a win.

TAR BABIES TAKE WOLFLETS IN TOW

Both Teams Play Tight Game; Connor And Morris Star.

Playing their initial game on their home floor since the northern trip, the Tar Babies ended their losing streak by defeating the State College freshmen 27-13 in a preliminary game to the Carolina-State game last night in the Tin Can.

Morris opened the scoring by sinking a beauty, but Connor soon evened the score with a goal. The game see-sawed, both teams grabbing the lead and soon losing it. At 5-5 the Tar Babies broke away and at half time the score stood 13-5.

The Tar Babies continued their stellar playing in the second half and from then on the result was never in doubt. So tight was the Tar Baby defense that State could garner only one field goal, accounting for the rest of their points via the free throw route.

Red Connor, who substituted for Lineberger, who is laid up with a cracked wrist, played the outstanding game for the Tar Babies, working a great defensive and leading the scorers by 8 points. Henry also played well for the Tar Babies. Morris and Espey of the visitors turned in good work for their team.

Duke Sports Editor Condemns Spirit Here

Writing in the current issue of the Duke Chronicle, Herbert E. O'Keef, Jr., sports editor of the Duke paper, condemns the spirit shown at the recent Carolina-Duke basketball game. He is of the opinion that all the recent peace talk between Carolina and Duke has been of no avail. A rupture between the two institutions is inevitable, he says.

His column follows:

"For the past few weeks, the editor of the Daily Tar Heel has been agitating for better spirit between Duke and Carolina. After reading his impassioned editorials on the subject, we were converted to the idea. We liked it in its every aspect; in fact, we even believed that such a truce could be effected between the schools. But—

"The way in which the Carolina student body hissed the Duke basketball teams, both varsity and freshman, last Saturday night was enough to remove from our mind any hope that such a peace could be carried out. Not that we would not like to see better relations between the two schools, for we would, but when any student body lowers itself to the point of hissing and booing at a rival team, we do not feel like lowering ourselves to such a plane.

"Do not get the idea that we intend to low rate the spirit shown by the Carolina men who were playing, for we do not. The U. N. C. players showed as fine a spirit towards an opposing team as we have ever witnessed. But, we must say that the spirit shown by the students of that same institution was perhaps the rottenest we have ever been forced to witness.

"In the past four years we have witnessed many games. We have seen some exhibitions of poor spirit in those years. But, if we are ever again forced to witness such an exhibition as Saturday night's, we will feel like disowning our native state for allowing such a poor spirit to be shown at the state University.

"Editor Holder, we appreciate your efforts in this peace program. We would like to see better relations between Duke and Carolina. But, please remember this, "Charity begins at home," and so does good spirit! We meant this as constructive criticism; we hope that it will be taken as such."

'Cavaliers' Have Two Fast Veteran Backs; Crew And Nelson Play In Line.

MANY ROOKIES ON 'VOLS'

"Tennessee" and "Virginia" will meet this afternoon at 3 o'clock in the fifth of the practice games being played this winter in Kenan stadium. In the matter of games won and lost, "Tennessee" holds a slight edge over "Virginia." The "Vols" won from "Georgia Tech" 6-0 in the opening game January 29 and lost to "Georgia" 18-13 last Saturday, while "Virginia" lost to "Georgia" and "Georgia Tech" in the two games in which it has participated.

"Virginia," with Nelson, Crew, Eskew, Magner and Slusser, appears to have the largest number of veterans from which to build up a strong combination, but the "Tennessee" squad has some freshmen and regulars who have been showing up mighty well in the previous frays. In scoring a win over "Georgia Tech," the "Vols" uncovered an aerial attack headed by Chandler and Moore that proved troublesome to the opposition.

Jimmie Hudson, right guard for "Tennessee," and Dunavant, who has been holding down the same position for the "Cavaliers," are both out of town and will be unable to participate in today's clash, but their berths will be filled by Philpot and probably Eskew and a strong forward wall will be presented by each team.

In the backfield "Virginia" will center its attack around the veterans, Magner and Slusser, while Peacock and McNeil, two likely looking prospects from the freshman lineup will alternate in offensive play. "Tennessee," with Moore at quarter, Chandler and Daniels at half, and McAlister at full, will base its attack on the work of relatively new material.

The probable lineup will be:

Tennessee		Virginia
Grindstaff		Nelson
	L. E.
Roach		Oliver
	L. T.
McIver		Crew
	L. G.
Hodges		Greer
	C.
Philpot		Eskew
	R. G.
Rose		Underwood
Walker		Allen
	R. E.
Moore		Peacock
	Q. B.
Chandler		Magner
	L. H.
Daniels		McNeil

McAllister		Slusser

MRS. MOSHER IS ON LEAGUE PROGRAM

Wife Of Professor To Take Prominent Part In Women Voters Convention In Goldsboro This Week.

The program of the League of Women Voters is divided into work and study categories and the "work" in most cases suggests legislative action. The legislative program for 1930 will be proposed and discussed at the convention yesterday and today in Goldsboro by chairmen of standing committees.

Mrs. E. R. Mosher of Chapel Hill is chairman of the committee on education and is also president of the N. C. American Association of University Women. Mrs. Mosher will propose that the league work again for the attainment of the sixth grade as an added requirement in the compulsory education law.

Miss Harriet W. Elliot, chairman of the committee on efficiency in government, is professor of political science at N. C. C. W. She is a lecturer of note and is in demand both within and outside North Carolina. Among the measures which she proposes are a "permanent registration" law and an improvement in the new election law of North Carolina. Miss Elliot is also chairman of legislation for the Federation of Women's Clubs and a member of the Legislative Council of North Carolina Women.

Mrs. Chase G. Woodhouse, also of N. C. C. W., where she is vocational director, is internationally known for her work in home economics. She is director of the Institute of Women's Professional Relations, maintained by the American Association of University Women. As chairman of the committee on living costs of the N. C. League of Women Voters, she has made a year's study of the gas and electric rates in the state and will give the results at the convention luncheon on Tuesday, February 11. She has been in charge of the division of economics, bureau of home economics, United States department of agriculture, conducting research on the standards of living of business and professional families.

Mrs. Bulus B. Swift of Greensboro, chairman of the committee on child welfare, was formerly president of the Parent Teacher Association of North Carolina and is now spending all her time working for better conditions for children.

Mrs. Charles G. Doak of Raleigh is perhaps best known to the movie fans, as she broadcasts daily. She is chairman of the committee on women in industry and proposes work for a 10-hour day and 50-hour week law in North Carolina. Mrs. Doak, Mrs. Mosher, Mrs. Cowper, chairman of legislation, and Mrs. Swift, make up the committee on the working child, which will demonstrate a study group at work as a part of the convention program.

Mrs. W. B. Pruett of Belmont, chairman of the committee on the legal status of women, probably knows more about the laws relating to women than anyone else in the state. She is advocating a change in the laws regarding inheritance of property of spouses, so as to equalize the hights of husband and wife.

Mrs. C. W. Tillett, Jr., of Charlotte, chairman of the committee on international cooperation to prevent war, is known for her social, political and civic work. Her chief interest now is to urge U. S. adherence to the world court, and effective work by the London Conference.

DI SENATE AGAINST FREE PHILIPPINES

After more than usual discussion last night, the Dialectic Senate voted by large mapority against the bill, "Resolved: That the Philippine Islands should be granted complete independence." Senator Shreve, who introduced the bill, spoke on both sides of the question as an introduction. Those favoring the bill were Senators Rector, Rose, Ramsay and Gentry. Those opposing the bill were Senators Wright, Hamer, Dungan, Goode and Little. The bill was discussed from angles of world-wide interest, benefit to the United States, benefit to the Philippines, etc.

President McPherson reported that the debate held recently under the auspices of the two literary societies was considered a success. Four new candidates were proposed for membership, and will be initiated at the next meeting.

ASSEMBLY FAVORS CAMPUS POLITICS

The Philanthropic Assembly declared itself to be in favor of campus political frame-ups at its weekly meeting last night. The resolution "Resolved, that political frame-ups for student offices are detrimental and should be discouraged" was defeated by a narrow margin after a heated discussion, in which the merits and faults of frame-ups were stated. The discussion centered around the desirability of the presence of one or two political organizations on the campus.

Speaker Lang stated that the joint session of the two societies would be held in two weeks in the hall of the assembly. He named Representatives Baldwin, Yarborough, Montgomery and Carr as a committee to consult with him in the selection of a subject for discussion at the joint session. Speaker Lang called a meeting of the constitutional committee to meet with him Friday night. He announced the results of the Williams-Woodhouse debate, and thanked the assembly for their cooperation in sponsoring the debate.

W. W. Blackman, N. B. Woodard and C. A. Renn were presented for admission into the assembly. Speaker Lang extended them the privileges of the floor, and announced that the initiation would be held at the last session of the quarter.

finds "simply the fact that a boy and girl in a country town, spent the night together," I would advise one not to look for true happiness in life until one has sensed that abstract something around which all life is centered and on which all ideals, for which we work, fight, and live are founded.

Maybe the critic has been disappointed in love and has temporarily lost his ideals, for I cannot believe that one could be so materialistic and still find beauty in diction.

As for the "almighty Literary Supplement to the Daily Tar Heel taking on the general aspect of the Buccaneer," I would say that he who looks for smut looks not outside his own mind if he finds in a passive treatment of a beautifully passionate subject. —Mike Limp with success, except for the appearance of "only one important gap—that of the Reconstruction period, when Virginia was barren of great men . . . "

Saturday Review Of Literature Praises Virginia Plutarch

"Because he aimed at continuous narrative of deeds, Dr. Bruce has fixed his attention not upon subjective aspects of his various heroes, but upon what they contributed in action to American life. The emphasis upon action gives the book movement, sweep, and variety. It leaves it a little poor in one Plutarchian quality, the presentation of intimate traits of character . . . "

"In any such collection the sketches must be of uneven merit. Dr. Bruce is at his best in dealing not with his greatest men, nor with his least, but with those of middle rank. After all, nobody can treat Washington adequately in 35 pages . . . "

Concerning those men of "middle rank" the critic says that "in all . . . there were salient and picturesque qualities," and for examples mentions a few of the best sketches. Of the lesser characters presented in the "Plutarch" it is said: "Now and then it can be objected that Dr. Bruce is too favorable to his subjects . . . But it is pleasant to respond to the enthusiasm with which he writes of men who really deserve it."

In conclusion Mr. Nevins writes thus in compliment to the book, and to Virginia, the home state of its author: "It is an interesting and measurably impressive panorama which Dr. Bruce has spread before us. The reader, as he finishes it, will find himself wondering why it was that Virginia proved so far-sighted men of action . . . prolific of these energetic and Whatever it is, the Old Dominion has a proved record."

HOWARD SHAPLEY SPEAKS TONIGHT IN GERRARD HALL

Noted Astronomer To Deliver Annual Series Of Sigma Xi Lectures; Is Director Of Harvard College Observatory.

Doctor Harlow Shapley, director of the Harvard College Observatory and a noted astronomer will deliver the first of two addresses which have been titled "Flights From Chaos," this evening in Gerrard hall at 8:30.

This evening Dr. Shapley will present the address "Order among the Star Clusters and Nebulae" in which he will attempt to show that there is order in the universe and that the stars which do not seem grouped in any order are actually arranged according to a definite system.

Tomorrow evening he will point out how through study it has been shown that there is order in the universe all the way from the atom to the planetary organization and the galaxies.

In the series of addresses the object of Dr. Shapley will be to show how there is order and system existing in the entire universe rather than the seeming chaos which many suppose to exist.

The lectures by Dr. Shapley are sponsored by the North Carolina chapter of Sigma Xi, national scientific research society, which annually brings to the campus some scientist of renown to deliver a series of addresses.

Doctor Shapley studied at the University of Missouri, his native state, and there received the degree of A. B. and M. A. In 1914 the degree of Ph.D. was conferred upon him by Princeton, and the same year he became an observer at the Mount Wilson Observatory. In 1921 he became director of the observatory at Harvard College.

The Draper medal of the National Academy of Scientists for 1926 was presented to Dr. Shapley, and he has many other honors in the form of memberships in many well known scientific societies.

Dr. Shapley has done much research work in the fields of cosmogony and photometry, and has been prominently identified with advances in these fields, through which it has been possible for astronomers to determine the size, shape, and speed of stars as well as the distance they are from each other and the earth.

GLEE CLUB BOYS TO SING IN NEW YORK

At a meeting of the University Glee Club officers, held Tuesday afternoon, it was definitely decided that the club will go to New York City to participate in the National Intercollegiate Glee Club contest to be held on March 8. The decision was heartily endorsed by the entire club at its rehearsal.

The contest which will be held at Carnegie hall is open to all winners of the various sectional contests recently held throughout the country.

Details of the trip have not been worked out entirely as yet. The group will probably leave by bus two days before the contest, returning two days later, and there is a possibility of an appearance at Washington on the way to New York.

Mineral Specimens Serve As Greeting Card For Geologist

(By John Patric)

"This business of sending Christmas greetings and New Year greetings and Valentine greetings and Easter messages by telegraph," said Clemans, "wasn't always as prevalent as it is now, but it sometimes led to interesting situations."

The elderly "collegian who never grew up" seemed on the verge of one of his stories, and this writer crossed his knees and lit his pipe to indicate readiness to listen.

"We had two professors who were very friendly," said Mark Twain's relative. "One was a geologist and the other taught German. The latter secured a leave of absence and went abroad for a year. At Christmas the geologist sent a cablegram collect, to his friend in Germany, announcing that he was well.

"Some few days after the German instructor had returned, he was partaking of dinner at the home of his friend, and listening to stories of the new geological specimens acquired during the year.

"Two expressmen arrived at the front door bearing a heavy crate marked 'mineral specimen' in both English and German, for it had come from Berlin. The geologist eagerly paid the charges—though they were considerable—and, letting his dinner wait, pried open the crate." Here Clemans paused—the long pause that always presaged the end of his stories and were sometimes annoying.

"Well?" I was impatient. "What was in the crate."

"Oh, it was a mineral specimen, all right. Just a common ordinary big rock, and it had a label pinned on it: 'I am learning that you are well. Upon receipt of this welcome information, attached load fell from my mind.' "

Leavitt Will Return Shortly From Spain

Dr. S. E. Leavitt of the Spanish department, who has been spending an extended leave of absence in Spain is, according to his letters, planning to terminate his vacation at the beginning of the most pleasant season for touring.

Having passed the winter and a number of attendant difficulties, caused chiefly by a cold contracted in Madrid, Dr. Leavitt now reports Iberian conditions as being most favorable to visitors. He writes: "Weather mild, oranges cheap, food good, wine excellent, shows frequent, rate of exchange favorable—what more could anyone want?"

Dr. and Mrs. Leavitt are to leave Spain soon for a short visit in Paris. They will sail from there March 5 in order to arrive here before the beginning of the spring quarter.

Phi Zeta Nu annually taps for membership in the organization several men in the sophomore, junior and senior classes in electrical engineering who have shown themselves to be students of exceptional ability.

At the meeting tonight in addition to the tapping of the honorary fraternity there will be the semi-annual election of officers of the local branch of the A. I. E. E. and a talk by J. E. Lear, professor of electrical engineering, on "Illumination."

"Girls' Number" Of Buccaneer To Appear Middle Of Next Week

H. N. "Pat" Patterson, business manager of the Buccaneer, said yesterday afternoon that he expected no difficulty in selling the February issue of the Carolina comic, for, according to Editor Edson, it is to be the "hottest" issue of the year. All copy and drawings for the "Girls' Number" are the work of girls exclusively. The issue is to be dedicated to four of the most charming girls in the South.

Using the method of delivery, inaugurated by manager Patterson, which proved so successful in distributing the January issue, copies of the Girls' Number will go out on the evening of February 20.

"Be on the lookout for the issue," says Patterson. "It's going to be at a premium, and, according to the editorial staff, you can't afford to miss it."

In this issue the second Hall of Fame will be run. This feature began its career last issue, attracting a great deal of interest among the students. Just now there is much speculation as to who will be presented in the Carolina Who's Who for the month, this being true especially concerning the girl who will be run.

Library's Special Collection Widely Used By Students

The special collection of books, which was installed in the University library last October is proving very popular according to announcement from the circulation department.

There are approximately 700 books in the collection and over 500 are in continuous circulation. The collection is comprised of books of practically every class in the library. An important feature of this collection is that the books are non-technical, but of general interest, and written in English.

This group is constantly being supplemented, and those books seldom used are weeded out.

VALENTINE PARTY

The Country Club will give a Valentine party at the club house Saturday evening at 8:30. The program will include dancing and stunts.

DRAMA BUREAU TO SPONSOR CONTEST

Plans Announced For Dramatic Festival To Be Held Here In April.

From the University bureau of community drama comes an announcement giving the arrangement of elimination contests for the state dramatic tournament to be held here during the seventh annual dramatic festival on April 10, 11 and 12. As yet no decision has been reached concerning the selection of winners in the original play contest, another feature of the tournament.

According to the plans of the executive committee of the Carolina Dramatic Association, cosponsor with the drama bureau of the festival and tournament, two groups from each class will be selected to appear here in final competition for the state championship. The series just arranged is a preliminary trial, given in order to narrow the field of competitors and to facilitate final selections.

Groupings of the city high schools which have entered the contest have been arranged as given here. The name of the first city in the group is also that of the place where that particular contest will be held. In the western half of the state: Asheville (senior high school), Hendersonville (Fruitland Institute), Charlotte (Alexander Graham high school); Albemarle, Salisbury, Charlotte (Central high school); Winston-Salem, Madison, High Point; Morganton, Lenoir, Hickory.

In the east there are five city high schools competing, arranged as follows: Fayetteville, Hamlet, Chapel Hill; Spring Hope, Wilson.

County high schools in the west are: Swannanoa, Spruce Pines and Asheville (Grace high school); Henrietta and Paw Creek; Oakboro, Oakhurst and Derita.

The six county high schools in the east are placed in groups of two: Whiteville and St. Pauls; Severn and Conway; and Jackson and Nashville.

There are two little theatre groups in each section. In the west Reidsville will meet Greensboro in the latter city. Competing for eastern honors, Smithfield will meet in Goldsboro, competing with the Wayne Community Players.

There will be no preliminary contest among the senior colleges, since only Lenoir Rhyne and Queens College have entered. However, among the junior colleges, Mars Hill College will compete against the College of the City of Asheville in Mars Hill, and Rutherford College and Louisburg College will meet. The place of the latter contest has not yet been fixed, due to the fact that the two schools are so widely separated.

Realtors Seeking To Make Business More Scientific

First Real Estate Institute To Be Held In State Opens Here With Nearly 100 Attending.

BERGE AND ELLIS SPEAK

Speakers Say Great Deal Of Research Carried On And Many Surveys Made In Interest Of Improving Business.

The first real estate institute to be held in North Carolina opened here yesterday with approximately 100 realtors from all sections of the state in attendance.

The institute is being held under the auspices of the North Carolina Association of Real Estate Boards and the University extension division, with the national association of real estate boards cooperating. The institute covers a two-day course of intensive study of real estate selling. C. C. Smithdeal of Winston-Salem presided over today's sessions.

The lecturers yesterday were John A. Berge, of Chicago, sales counselor of the national association of real estate boards, and Guy W. Ellis, past president of the Detroit real estate board and special lecturer in land economics at the University of Michigan.

They pointed out that this was the second university in the country to hold a real estate institute, the other being the University of New Jersey, and that the attendance of today's sessions exceeded that at any of the four institutes held at New Jersey.

There is a national movement on foot to put the real estate business on a more scientific basis, Mr. Ellis emphasized in his lecture. This movement was inaugurated and is being sponsored by the national association of real estate boards.

"A great deal of research is being carried on and a great many surveys are being made," he said. "This data will be made the basis for an analysis that will eliminate a lot of guess work in our business.

"Realtors all over the country are indicating a desire to make their business more scientific, more akin to a profession, that they may render greater service to the buyers and sellers of real estate. The idea of this movement is not to teach slick-selling methods but to study more thoroughly the economic uses of land."

Mr. Ellis said the realtors of the country had strongly endorsed an effort of the national association to get courses on land economics introduced into all the educational institutions, with the view to getting the young men entering the real estate business a thorough groundwork. There are today courses on land economics and real estate in 632 such institutions, he said.

Mr. Berge, in one of his talks yesterday, stressed the view that "fifty percent of the stores, shops, offices, factories and other business establishments in our American cities are improperly located."

Some stores, for example, would be more profitable on the other side of the street or in another block some distance away, he said. Some firms are in locations where the rent is too high for their class of busi-

Kiwanis Club Votes Aid For Welfare Work

The teachers of the Chapel Hill high school and the Carrboro grammar school were entertained at the Kiwanis club meeting Tuesday night at the Carolina Inn. The music was furnished by Jack Wardlaw's Banjo Boys, while special stunts and comical quartettes were given.

During the business hour of the meeting the club voted to collect a large amount of clothing to be turned over to George Lawrence, superintendent of public welfare in Orange county. Mr. Lawrence will arrange for the distribution of these throughout the county to the families in need. The club also agreed to pay the expense of an operation for a local man who is now unable to work.

Disarmament Debaters To Be Chosen Tonight

Meeting in 201 Murphey hall tonight at 7:30 the varsity debate squad will turn to the tryout for the George Washington-Carolina debates, after several executive matters have been disposed of.

The query to be debated is: "Resolved, that the nations of the world should adopt some plan of complete disarmament of all forces, except those which are needed for police purposes." One affirmative and one negative team will be selected. One of these will be designated to meet George Washington here February 27, while the other one will meet the same institution at Washington at a later date undecided at present.

Police Officer Blake Recovers Flashlight

A few weeks ago Officer "John D." Blake, who patrols the University campus, lost his flashlight, somewhere or other.

H. D. Crockford, of the chemistry department, had been missing small articles from his home—playing cards, small coins, medals. Mrs. Crockford lost handkerchiefs and like items. They suspected a young negress, a servant in the household.

Early this week, Officer Blake, armed with a search warrant, invaded the home of the colored girl and found most of the items the Crockfords had missed, and the frightened servant promised restoration of the others. Officer Blake also recovered his missing flashlight.

Tar Heel Topics

Last year the women of the United States wore 264,000,000 pairs of silk hose. And, judging from the shapes seen in them, some women should have worn more.

"Small Powers Reject Plan To Abolish 'Terrow of The Deep'," headlines the Winston-Salem Journal. Our guess is that the proof-reader is going to come in for most of the terror arising from that headline.

Dr. G. W. Forster, head of the department of agricultural economics, says that North Carolina farm incomes in 1930 will probably be smaller than they were in 1929. According to recent newspaper reports, Dr. Forster is darn near prophesying a physical impossibility.

The new auditorium will be used for other purposes when the larger structure planned for the future becomes a reality, according to reports. We want to be the first to suggest that it be converted into a huge classroom, in which those who wish to sleep through the lectures may sit in the rear without being disturbed by the prof's articulations.

Headed For The Waste Basket

Impaled upon the hook on our desk in the Tar Heel office are several communications to the Readers' Opinions columns that will be consigned to the waste basket within a very few days, unless they are called for by the writers. It will be with a tremendous sigh of relief that we get rid of one of them, signed G. T. D.

In his communication, G. T. D. proposes a student boycott upon a certain establishment because it is "According to rumor the greatest paying enterprise in the state according to its size." We don't consider it the business of the Tar Heel to attempt to regulate the affairs of Chapel Hill business men, unless there is positive evidence that unreasonable prices are being extorted from the students and townspeople. And we certainly don't intend to permit anyone to create ill feeling between the University and the townspeople through the medium of the Tar Heel.

Hence it is that we have departed from our announced intention of printing all contributions to the Readers' Opinions columns, provided that they are neither indecent nor illegible, and that the correct name of the writer is made known to us.

A Suggestion For More Meaningless Offices Examined

In the Sunday issue of the Tar Heel one of the assistant editorial writers presented a plan for the creation of more campus offices; he proposed that officers be elected by schools instead of classes, thus making twenty additional officers; that a board of election commissioners be created; that a vice-presidency of the student body be created; and that cheer leaders be elected in the spring elections by the student body. Of the suggestions only the last is worthy of serious consideration in our opinion; certainly something should be done to improve the quality of the cheering and the enthusiasm of the student body for its athletic teams. If the remedy lies in the election of a student cheer leader in the spring instead of the fall, by all means let him be elected in the spring.

Already the campus is burdened down with meaningless officers and meaningless organizations. Only a few of the offices of the campus are worthy of distinction, and only a few give a man of ability an opportunity to show his metal. As political line-ups are being shaped so far the real fight in the campaign will be for the presidency of the student body and the editorships of the publications; these are the offices that mean something; these are the ones that boys are willing to work for.

In picking class officers the practice has been among the politicians to give them out to outstanding athletes or to men who can swing the vote of a particular fraternity or other group. As the offices are virtually meaningless there is no particular harm in this practice. What does the vice-president of the class, the secretary, or the treasurer do? How many students could name off hand the officers of their own class? If officers were elected by schools and colleges the present practice would continue. The only difference would be that the "machine" could get in more fraternities because there would be more offices to be given out.

Is there a surplus of ability on the campus and would that surplus be taken care of by creating more meaningless offices? The only offices that require any previous experience or any conspicuous ability other than political are the editorships of the publications and the presidency of the student body. No one would suggest that we elect two editors of each publication or two presidents of the student body. More offices in the schools would not satisfy men with literary aspirations. A man who had worked on the Tar Heel for three years with the purpose of becoming editor obviously would not be satisfied in his senior year by being elected president of the A. B. college.

Our student government is so constructed that one man can easily administer the machinery. If we overload a man with other honors and then make him president of the student body, his inability to do the work is more our own fault than the fault of the system.

A vice-president would be a useless addition to a student government that has simplicity as its foundation. Are our elections not being carried on according to the honor system now? Is it necessary that three more men be chosen to administer the honor system? If there is anything wrong with the way the elections are carried on, then there should be an investigation by the student council. So far as we are concerned as long as the election is run off according to the Australian ballot, then the job is done well enough.

Admittedly the bonds of tradition are hard to break; but our opposition to the proposed changes is based upon a consideration of the merits of the plans submitted. The whole proposition smacks of a political flavor. When more honors are created, then the value of each honor is lowered. A man has gained nothing when he becomes president of some loose organization such as a class or a school unless it be honor. We cannot increase the number of editorships or add another president of the student body. For the offices that mean something, the best man is usually elected.

—J. D.McN.

HOW WE MAY BECOME FAMOUS

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Do you want your name to be acclaimed in every university in these United States of America? Do you want your name to go down in the annals of collegiate journalism? Do you want at least a thousand Carolina students to carry your name in their bosoms with loving tenderness for many years to come? In short, do you want people to point you out on the street, and say:

"There is the man who discovered how to keep students awake in their 8:30 lecture classes!"

I see you are already teetering on the edge of your chair. Well, I shall not keep you in suspense any longer.

All you have to do is to run a cross-word puzzle in the weekday editions of the Daily Tar Heel. Do this, Mr. Editor, and your everlasting fame is assured.

From one who wages a desperate battle against lethargy every morning from 8:30 to 9:30.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

Every Saturday morning at 9 o'clock shopkeepers and loiterers along the north side of the downtown block of Franklin street see trooping into the yard of the Methodist church, which lies across the way, a noisy crowd of small boys. By ones and twos, and sometimes in groups of three, they drift in from all over the town. A mother brings two of them in a limousine, one comes on a bicycle and the others gather in on foot. If it is rainy there may be only a half-dozen, but should the day be fair there will be fifteen or twenty.

Waiting there for them they find Mr. N. Goodridge, better known in collegiate boxing circles as the weaving Noah Goodridge, rather than as a gentle scoutmaster. But such is the role he fills on those Saturday mornings when he is not out of town on a trip with the University boxing team.

The boys he handles are a bit too young to become regular boy scouts, so they have organized themselves under the name of pre-scouts. By an arrangement with their parents Goodridge meets them and takes charge of their activities twice each week, Wednesday afternoon and Saturday morning.

Keeping a group of small boys healthily interested and entertained for any length of time is no easy task, but Goodridge seems to know how to do it. His methods include a blending of subtle discipline, gentle persuasion, toleration, and an applied knowledge of what is good for small boys and what they like to do.

Sometimes he takes them on a tour of the campus, unfolding to them the mysteries of the new library, or showing them the interesting things to be found in the museums of the botany and geology departments. On particularly fine Saturdays the pre-scouts and their leader may take a long hike into the woods, and perhaps build a fire and cook lunch far up Morgan's Creek. Last fall Goodridge divided his boys into two midget football teams, and during the winter they played a great deal of basketball.

Not only is the troop connected with the University through its leader but through the boys themselves, most of whom are sons of faculty members. Chieftest among them is a son of Archibald Henderson, the tow-headed John, a good walker, and the hardest of the lot to weary out; but with an intellect and a collection of miscellaneous facts seldom found in a group of ten-year-olds.

D. D. Carroll, Jr., is another important member of the group. On a hike he usually brings up the tail end of the procession, but for any sport requiring quick thinking and ingenuity D. D. is the man. His drawling voice, pleasing to the ear, and infinitely slow, he often employs in telling his "podners" about his gay adventures in Europe.

Dr. Caldwell's red-headed son is another member of the band who likes to take time out from "cowboys and Indians" once in a while to tell of his travels abroad. Another dashing spirit is the young Van Hecke, the law professor's son, without whom the group would probably be a bit less daring. The weaving Noah Goodridge and his merry band of faculty members' sons are withal a company well worth being acquainted with.

A Thumbnail Sketch Of English Bagby

(By F. J. M.)

Editor's note: This is the seventh of a series of thumbnail sketches of prominent University men.

ENGLISH BAGBY . . . ever since he was a small boy, this Virginian who was born in 1891 has wanted to become a teacher . . . not an ordinary pedagogue . . . but a good one. While in Princeton, he had a dissatisfactory Psychology course; he resolved that he would someday teach that subject better himself . . . and he has been doing it for some years.

Princeton is his alma mater . . . and he received his Ph. D. from Johns Hopkins University . . . His thesis was written upon a very confidential subject for the U. S. government and strange as tho' it may seem, the university never saw the thesis that English Bagby prepared and for which he received the coveted degree.

During the war he was a 1st lieutenant in the Sanitary Corps . . . he never went abroad . . . but he did serve in Fort Worth, Texas, where as head of the laboratory down there, it was necessary for him to sleep in the lab, if he wished to save the $25,000 worth of "dope" that was said to be the coveted booty of a band of illicit traffickers in the stuff.

He first taught at the Virginia Military Academy, where he not only wrote the music for their school song but was also a major in the Virginia Volunteers . . . Yale was his next school . . . and after five years of New Haven life, he proceeded to Chapel Hill . . . which he likes so much that he refuses and has refused to leave.

He attributes his being what he is to a trip that he made around the world, shortly after his graduation from college . . . in the company of twenty-six Baptist priests. Some place in Germany, he was caught drinking huge quantities of beer and it wasn't until one of the 26 Baptist ministers dropped a quart bottle of whiskey on the steps of the hotel in Nazareth that amicable relations were again established within the party. . . Ever since that trip, he thinks that Damascus is his favorite city . . . with Venice coming a close second . . .

If he were not a psychologist, he would probably be an archaeologist or something like it.

He is not at all finicky . . . pays little attention to clothes and handles his eating tools in a manner opposite to that of most people . . . he admires squirrel stew . . . and hates custards.

He has just recently settled the tie question . . . which is a very troublesome problem in Chapel Hill . . . he has finally decided to choose two patterns . . . and have ten ties of each pattern made and wear them forever . . .

He dislikes travelling of all kinds except on steamships . . . five or six meals are served daily on board a big liner.

For some time, he has had an intense aversion to pajama pants . . . which accounts for his wearing night shirts.

Very recently, his wife stopped her attempts at improving him. The step was caused by Ellen Glasgow's "They Stooped to Folly" . . . and that book was recommended to English Bagby by his "intellectual god-father," Howard Mumford Jones . . . the psychologist was first impressed by Jones because of the many footnotes he managed to put on each page of his book on French and American culture . . . now English, while not trying to "Keep Up With the Jones'," follows a plan of reading that is suggested by them . . . the arrangement is working out very well . . .

Fishing and golf are his pastimes . . . Golf is a recent one . . . and has become quite a "fad" with him . . . he believes it to be the best sport of all and would like to see it as the major athletic recreation in the universities . . . he occasionally wins monetary stakes at golf, too.

He would like to go fishing with his daughter . . . she has a doll that serves as a good luck charm for him when he fishes . . .

Until he was twenty-one, he never touched a drop of intoxicating beverages . . . his father promised him a substantial reward if he didn't . . . on his 21st birthday he remained sober but shortly after took to drinking a rare and not too common a drink . . . rather liqueur . . Curacao . . . his room-mate at Princeton drank Benedictine.

Bagby believes that each man should distinguish himself in some direction . . . his claim to distinguishing may lie in habitually drinking Curacao . . . or the fact that he wrote the Alma Mater song for V. M. I. and several songs for the famous Triangle Club in Princeton . . . without knowing how to play an instrument . . . he whistled the tune and someone else recorded the precious melody.

Dramatics have always interested him . . . he is now more or less unofficial advisor to the Carolina Playmakers . . . he likes Harry Langdon for his psychological . . or lack of psychological characteristics . . . in New York, however, he sees "serious drama." The best play in his opinion was "Rain."

Although New Orleans is his favorite American city, he goes to Columbia University each summer and teaches there . . . in addition to patronizing speakeasies, . . . he likes Mario's on 46th street best . . . going to the Hotel Pennsylvania Roof . . . where he dances to Spitalny's music, which he doesn't think compares to Olsen's or Lopez' jazz bands . . . or he often goes to the Knickerbocker Whis Club to play bridge . . . he is very "fair" as a player . . . or at odd times he goes to the Natural museum of History . . . to see all about the American Indian.

English often forgets names and faces . . . and complains of his poor memory . . . he has been reading H. G. Well's Outline of History since the last six years and disagrees with the author . . . he can't be distracted . . . this habit he has from his Princeton days . . . when he used to study under the most trying surroundings . . . He likes hot baths . . . and won't take a cold shower . . . much less wear house slippers—he hates slippers—and walks about the house sometimes barefooted. He likes to wear a hat all the time . . . even in the house and if he weren't threatened with domestic strife if he were to become bald . . . he would wear his hat all the time and pay no heed to his baldness . . . Solitaire and cross-word puzzles are some of his intellectual pursuits.

If he had a year off in which he had nothing to do with psychology, he would spend one half the year in the British Museum, and the balance of his time in Venice.

He is a member of Sigma Xi and Phi Kappa Sigma fraternities, among other organizations.

Crack Loyola Five Scores 25-24 Win Despite Rally By Tar Heels In Last Half Chicago Team Noses Out 26-25 Victory In Last Minute Of Play.

MARPET LEADS CAROLINA

University Quint Gains Three Point Lead But Loses It Just Before Final Whistle.

Loyola added another victory to its string of 39 wins when it defeated the Tar Heels 26-25 last night in the Tin Can. Maintaining a lead that was seriously threatened only in the last few minutes of play the Loyola team made its list of victories for the past two seasons total 40 by its one-point margin over the Carolina aggregation.

The score after the first nine minutes of the second half stood 22-11, but Carolina scored 14 points in the next nine minutes of play, while the Loyola score was stationary.

Captain Chuck Murphy starred for the visitors both by his floor work and accurate eye. He totaled 9 points for his team to share honors for high scorer of the game with his teammate, Butzen. Arty Marpet was the outstanding Tar Heel on the floor and was high scorer for the Carolina quint. Dave Neiman showed spectacular form at times, while Tom Alexander showed up well at guard.

Sandy Dameron started the scoring of the game with a basket in the first minute of play which was closely followed by Butzen of Loyola. From then on the Chicago outfit led until the closing minutes of play when Dave Neiman shot two goals in rapid succession to overcome a four-point lead. Puny Harper then added another goal to place the Tar Heels in front with a two-point margin with less than four minutes to play. Arty Marpet added a free throw to bring the Tar Heels' total to 25, but Butzen brought the Loyola score to 24. With less than a minute to play Captain Murphy counted a goal to place his team in the lead by a one-point margin as the game ended.

The lineup:

Loyola (26)		Carolina (25)
Smith (4)	R. F.	Neiman (6)
Waesco (2)	L. F.	Dameron (2)
Murphy (9)	C.	Edwards (2)
Butzen (9)	R. G.	Alexander
Schulmann (2)	L. G.	Marpet (7)

Substitutions: Loyola—Durburg; Carolina—Harper (3), Greene (3), Brown (2).

Referee: Pat Crawford (Davidson).

What A Score

Manley walked all over Grimes yesterday afternoon to the score of 55 to 1. This is by far the most uneven game played this year in intramurals. Goldston ran up an individual score of 30 points, while Stewart followed with 15. Hodges made Grimes' lone score from the charity line. What makes the score seem still more unusual is that there were only four men playing on each side.

Manly (55)	Grimes (1)
Goldston (30)	Singletary
Egan (2)	Half Mile
Elliott (8)	Justice
Stewart (15)	Hodges (1)

"VIRGINIA" WINS WINTER CONTEST

Magner - Slusser Combination Scores Touchdown For Winners; Game Lacks Color.

(By Browning Roach)

Slusser's 55-yard run after receiving a 15-yard pass from Magner was good for the only score of the game and "Virginia" won from "Tennessee" 6-0 in the practice game in Kenan stadium yesterday afternoon. Magner's kick for extra point went between the bars but one of his own men was off-side and the point didn't count.

On the whole, the play was colorless, with the defensive work of both teams overshadowing their offensive. Only 10 first downs were made, six by "Virginia" and four by "Tennessee." A 15-yard run around end by Moore, "Tennessee" quarter, and McNeil's 15-yard off-tackle spurt, together with Slusser's 55-yard jaunt for touchdown were the only times any backfield man was able to penetrate the defensive lines for anything more than 10 yards.

In total yardage gained, the "Virginia" eleven had the advantage over the "Vols." The "Cavaliers" made 110 yards through the line and around end against 43 for the losers. Out of six passes attempted by Chandler for the "Vols," five of them went wild, while one fell into the hands of Lipscomb, veteran center for the "Cavaliers." "Virginia" was more successful in her aerial attack and completed four out of 12 passes, for a total of 49 yards.

Magner and Slusser, who replaced Thompson and Lassiter in the "Virginia" backfield, did most of the ball-carrying for the winners, while McNeil also was good for several short gains

FORMER TAR HEEL BOXER IS AIDING UNIVERSITY COACH

Add Warren, prominent North Carolina heavyweight contender, and a former Carolina fighter, is in Chapel Hill for a few days to help Coach Crayton Rowe train his heavies. Add is now fighting professional, and seems to be doing so with a vengeance. He has beaten some of the best men in the state, and announces that he expects to fight in the state in the near future.

While in the University, Add was the outstanding college fighter in the South, and one of the best in the country. He has a younger brother, John Warren, fighting under the Tar Heel colors now, and another, Millard Warren, fighting at Duke.

Warren is one of the many outstanding fighters developed by Crayton Rowe, Tar Heel boxing coach, Ox Shuford and Charlie Brown being others.

Add announced that he would help Coach Rowe here for a few days, and would return before the Southern Conference Tournament, which will take place around March 1.

Hal Hartley, another professional, is now in Chapel Hill working out. Hartley is a 165-pounder. He is working out daily in the Tin Can with Coach Rowe's Tar Heels, and has been showing both speed and punch. Hal is training to fight Bill Keeling at Lenoir on George Washington's birthday. He won from Keeling on a foul in the fifth round of their fight on January 13 at Hickory.

SIDELIGHTS

by Sports Editor

DUKE'S WIN OVED DAVidson last Monday night by a 33 to 30 count places them at the head of the Big Five teams in North Carolina. The Blue Devils have wrested the crown that was worn by the Tar Heels last year when they won the state title. Duke has now registered wins over every Tar Heel team in the running for Big Five honors, and have kept their slate clean in North Carolina basketball. State's victory over the University last Tuesday night tied them with the Carolina aggregation for third honors in the Big Five. Davidson, by virtue of a win over Carolina and a loss to Duke, are settled in second place. Wake Forest brings up the rear.

THE TAR HEELETTES are not scheduled to play any games at the Hill until they meet Leaksville on February 19th. The coeds will then take on the strong Greensboro girls. A return game with Fayetteville is scheduled for the gym on March the 7th, but these are the only games that have been definitely announced. Coach Carl Farris stated the other night that about 12 or 13 girls were showing up for practice and that they "usually" had enough to scrimmage. Several of the high school sextette have been dropping in to practice with the University co-eds so that enough would be present to scrimmage.

THE GOLF BUG seems to be gaining headway as fair weather sets in. The drying up of most of the mud puddles permits the aspirants for the 1930 golf team to try out the strokes they have been practicing on the golf-net in the Tin Can. The Chapel Hill golf course with its numerous bunkers and traps has been affording the would-be golfers plenty of chances to use their irons. The difficult course of the Chapel Hill Country Club seems to be monopolized by University students on fair-weather afternoons. Even the Durham courses (the Hill and Dale, and the Hope Valley courses) are becoming very popular with Carolina students, but it is unfortunate that University students have to travel to Durham for a nine-hole course.

SOCCER gains publicity again by the attempts which are being made towards the organization of an Associated football (soccer) league. At present the plans seem to be somewhat incomplete, but the general idea is to get five or six teams on the campus started playing soccer by the formation of the aforementioned league. Only two teams have been informally lined up at present, but several others are expected to be formed in the near future, according to one of the leaders of the new movement. Arrangements are being made for the erection of goal posts as well as the marking of the intramural field for the use of soccerites. The leaders of the new soccer movement of the campus recently announced that the formation of the new league was not merely to get the experienced players out for the games, but to introduce the sport to new men.

THE FUTURE (?) U. N. C. soccer team has been already offered a meet with the Asheville School at any date set by the Tar Heels. At present no definite date has been fixed, but it is the hope of some of the soccer enthusiasts that enough teams will be entered in the new soccer league which is to be formed to enable a match with the Asheville school in the near future.

Varsity Boxers Will Meet Florida Mittmen Saturday

Tar Heels Will Face Same Team That Won Second In Conference Last Year.

CAROLINA WORKING HARD

Rowe Will Send Entire Varsity Against Strong Team At Gainesville In Effort To Keep Slate Clean.

With only two days left before they meet the strong Florida Alligators, second in the conference meet last year, the undefeated Tar Heel boxing team is working hard to get into perfect condition for the meet.

Last year the Tar Heels beat the 'Gators 15 1-2 to 13 1-2 in the Southern Conference Tournament at Charlottesville, to win the championship of the South. With the Florida team composed largely of veterans Coach Crayton Rowe has been pushing his men to enable them to give the Florida aggregation the works, and the entire team is looking good.

The regular lineup will probably fight Saturday. This lineup consists of Vaughn, 115 pounds; Sheffield, 125 pounds; Goodridge, 135 pounds; Captain Archie Allen, 145 pounds; Obie Davis, 165 pounds; Warren, 175 pounds; and Koenig unlimited.

The freshmen mitmen will afford some entertainment to those who stay on the Hill this week-end when they fight Oak Ridge in the Tin Can Saturday. Although Coach Sapp has not announced his lineup against the cadets, his choice will probably be made from the following men: Gray and Levinson, 125 pounds; Gaylord and Lumpkin, 135 pounds; Jackson, 145 pounds; Patterson, 165 pounds; Landis, 175 pounds; Wilson and Miller, unlimited.

Landis has shown up well in preceding fights, having won by a knockout at Virginia last Saturday, while Wilson also won by the knockout route at Charlottesville. Levinson, shifty little 125 pounder, has been showing up well.

ORR BUYS OUT PARTNER

L. L. Orr, who, with Clarence Yarborough, recently established the Chapel Hill Motor Company, has purchased his partner's interest in the business and will continue its operation. The concern has its home just above the fire hall.

Wrestlers Win

The Tar Heel Wrestlers won from Davidson 14-12 last night at Davidson in a close and hotly contested match. Stallings won by a fall, while Albright, Tsumas and Cowper won by time advantages. Full particulars of the match will be found in tomorrow's issue of the Tar Heel.

FIVE TEAMS ARE YET TO LOSE IN INTRAMURAL PLAY

Sigma Nu And Phi Gamma Delta Leading The Fraternity League In Basketball Play.

THREE DORMS ARE TIED

Rounding out its fourth week of play with 120 games erased from the winter schedule, the intramural basketball league enters its fifth week with two undefeated fraternities, and three undefeated dormitories. Sigma Nu and Phi Gamma Delta lead the fraternities while Aycock, Old East, and Steele are tied for first place in the dormitory league.

Two double forfeits characterized last week's games. These occurred when both Lewis and Graham failed to produce teams on Friday at 4:00, and the Dekes and A. T. O.'s failed to show up at 5:00. This is the only defeat of the season for the Dekes, while the others have all registered losses.

The number of teams in the running for the league and campus titles has dwindled down to less than ten in each league. The intramural officials wish to call attention to the 10 points deducted for every forfeit. According to the intramural officials there has been an unusually small number of forfeitures in the basketball league this year in comparison to previous seasons. This is in spite of the increase in number of teams entered at the beginning of the league.

The most closely contested game of last week was the D.

Inter-collegiate champions!

The most popular cereals served in the dining-rooms of American colleges, eating clubs and fraternities are made by Kellogg in Battle Creek. They include ALL-BRAN, Pep Bran Flakes, Rice Krispies, Wheat Krumbles and Kellogg's Shredded Whole Wheat Biscuit. Also Kaffee Hag Coffee—the coffee that lets you sleep.

THE corn flake flavor championship is won year after year by Kellogg's. On campuses from coast to coast they sweep the field. Why? Try them!

Pour milk or cream into a brimming bowl of Kellogg's Corn Flakes, crisp and golden. Relish the matchless flavor of the first spoonful. Savor the satisfaction of the last. Then you'll know why they're champions!

Particularly good with fruit or honey added. Ask that Kellogg's, the original Corn Flakes, be served at your fraternity house or favorite campus restaurant.

MANAGER SMITH IS GRID TEAM BACKER

E. Carrington Smith, genial manager of the Carolina Theatre, is a sport fan. Mr. Smith is willing to go further than merely lending his verbal support and interest to the athletic teams of the University, however, contrary to the usual procedure among college sport fans.

He has announced his intention of entertaining the entire winning football squad Saturday afternoons at the first evening show. If no game is played on Saturday, Mr. Smith has said, due to rain or snow or any other cause, then the winning team of Friday's game will be the recipient of the passes.

The announcement of the issuance of passes to the football team each week follows a long list of similar announcements of shows awarded various teams. The basketball team, the track squad, the baseball team, and other athletes have had their prowess recognized at one time or another by the sport-minded manager of the theatre. Whenever possible, he shows pictures which include athletics in one form or another, and he has gone to great trouble and expense to have pictures of important football games at the University shown in Chapel Hill within a short time of the actual playing of the game.

The winning pigskin men each week are urged to appear at the theatre promptly on time with their manager whose presence will be required to identify his men. The complimentary entertainments will continue throughout the winter football season.

University Women Meet In Charlotte

The convention of the North Carolina chapter of the American Association of University Women met in Charlotte Friday and Saturday. A large group from Chapel Hill headed by Mrs. E. R. Mosher, state president of the association, attended the meeting.

Beginning in an automobile ride over the city Friday afternoon, the meeting was concluded by a luncheon at the Charlotte Woman's club Saturday noon. An address on "The Changing South" by Dr. B. B. Kendrick of N. C. C. W. featured the first day's program.

In the business session Saturday morning, Mrs. Francis O. Clarkson was elected vice-president and Miss Maurine Bledsoe treasurer of the state chapter. Mrs. E. R. Mosher of Chapel Hill and Miss Sarah Rowe of Durham remain president and secretary, respectively, for another year. Mrs. Harvey W. Harmer, director of the South Atlantic states division of the association, was the chief speaker at the luncheon Saturday.

At the banquet held in the Hotel Charlotte Friday evening, 70 members of the association were present. Those attending from Chapel Hill were: Mrs. E. R. Mosher, Miss Katharine Jocher, Mrs. U. T. Holmes, Mrs. G. T. Schwenning, Mrs. John Couch, Mrs. Thorndike Saville, Mrs. A. C. Nolan, Miss Mary Cobb and Miss Mabel Bacon.

Record-Breaking Attendance Expected For Alumni Meet

According to the report handed in by C. W. Rankin, chairman of the ticket committee, there will be a record-breaking attendance at the annual banquet of the University Alumni Association in Fayetteville tonight. More alumni have written in for reservations than ever before.

President Chase will be the principal speaker of the evening, heading a list of prominent personages on the campus. Among the other speakers at the banquet will be Chuck Collins, who is hailed as having won for Carolina wide recognition in Southern Conference athletics; Rex Enright, freshman coach, will also be included on the program, together with Bob Fetzer, athletic director. J. Maryon Saunders, general alumni secretary, and Edward Scheidt, alumni field representative, are to make talks on the progress being made by the alumni association.

Chemical Engineers Receive Charter For University Chapter

The University of North Carolina student chapter of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers, has recently received its charter from the national organization. It is now the only student branch of the institute in the South.

For several years it has been the desire of the chemical engineering students to have a chapter of the organization in the University, but only this year were there enough students to maintain a chapter. Last December two students of the University, Adam Fisher and R. J. Ruble, attended the meeting of the institute held in Asheville, and as a result of their attendance at this convention, the local chapter was organized.

The chapter meets twice a month; one meeting is devoted to business, the other to the discussion of papers of importance to the field of chemical engineering. Through the aid of the national organization the chapter will hear outside speakers.

All students who are taking chemical engineering are eligible for membership in the organization. At present the group consists of about 25, but as the number of students taking chemical engineering is increasing every year, it is expected that the North Carolina chapter will have a rapid and continued growth.

Officers of the local branch are Adam Fisher, president; W. T. Perry, vice-president; R. J. Ruble, secretary; C. B. Overman, treasurer; and Dr. F. C. Vilbrandt, advisor.

RESEARCH SOCIETY AMENDS CONSTITUTION

At the business meeting of Sigma Xi, national scientific research society, held Tuesday evening, the constitution of the North Carolina chapter of the organization was amended to provide for the admission to membership of seniors in the University who show marked ability in the field of research and also to provide for a mid-year initiation of new members.

Through these two amendments, it is not possible for a senior to become an associate member of the society at the middle of his last year in school. The addition of a mid-year initiation enables the society to take in new members at the first meeting in February in addition to commencement.

PLAYMAKERS TO APPEAR TONIGHT AT ALBEMARLE

To Be First Performance On Tour Through Three Southern States.

SPARTANBURG TOMORROW

Tonight the Carolina Playmakers appear in Albemarle where they give the first performance on their tour through North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. The three one-act plays to be presented are "The No 'Count Boy" by Paul Green, "Job's Kinfolks" by Loretto Carroll Bailey," and "Magnolia's Man" by Gertrude Wilson Coffin.

This is the 27th tour the Playmakers have made. These tours have carried them into many northern, southern, and eastern states and have won them acclaim as one of the leading organizations in the United States in the development of native folk drama. It is in this field that they have done their most popular work, and through this medium that such playwrights as Paul Green have been developed.

"The No 'Count Boy" is a comedy of negro life, based upon the ambitions of a dreamy negro girl who is influenced by a highly imaginative negro minstrel.

The conflict between the older generation, striving to adjust itself to surroundings and make the best of circumstances, and the younger generation, which refuses to face the struggle, and goes off in search of happiness, is the plot of Loretto Bailey's drama of the mill people, "Job's Kinfolks." The author herself plays the role of Kizzie, the grandmother.

"Magnolia's Man" is a comedy of mountain characters. It has to do with the affair of a young woman who seeks a husband on the mail-order plan, and finds that letters and pictures are not a safe guide.

The itinerary for the tour includes Albemarle, N. C.; Spartanburg, S. C.; Greenville, S. C.; Atlanta, Ga.; Columbus, Ga.; Macon, Ga.; Augusta, Ga.; Allendale, S. C.; Wilmington, N. C.; Greenville, N. C., and Rocky Mount, N. C. The Playmakers will return to Chapel Hill on February 26.

House Addresses Sophomore Class

President Larry Johnson presided over the second sophomore class smoker of the collegiate year held last night in Swain Hall. Attendance was small due to a heavy rain which fell for more than an hour previous to the time of the meeting.

The usual refreshments were served at 9 o'clock, after which announcements were made of the sophomore dance of which it was stated that the executive committee of the class has planned for the spring quarter.

R. B. House, executive secretary of the University, spoke upon students' interests asking for a different attitude on the part of students toward professors and booting.

County Club To Meet

There will be a meeting of the Johnston County Club tonight at 9 o'clock in the lobby of the Y. M. C. A. This will be a very important meeting and President Pleasants urges all members to attend.

POLICE TO KILL PROWLING DOGS

War Against Stray Canines Begins Tomorrow By Vote Aldermen.

The board of aldermen has declared war on dogs in Chapel Hill. At its meeting Wednesday night several complaints were read; these set forth that prowling dogs were increasing in number, were frightening children and overturning garbage cans in their search for food.

An ordinance exists which provides no dog may be allowed at large unless muzzled or kept under leash. Beginning Saturday, it was announced by the city manager yesterday police officers will arm themselves with shotguns and kill every dog they encounter, pet or otherwise, licensed or not, if found on the streets.

This drastic measure was made certain yesterday when it was learned that the little daughter of E. V. Kyser was bitten by a savage police dog owned by J. L. Sutton, local druggist. This animal had bitten persons previously, but the Kyser girl was injured so seriously that ten stitches were necessary.

Sutton removed his dog permanently to the country, where it is under observation for possible traces of rabies.

Local dog owners are urged to comply with the request of the board of aldermen, since the enforcement of the ordinance will be immediate and vigorous.

"Hell Week" Under Fire at Penn State

The Collegian, campus paper of Penn State, has been running a questionnaire to find out how the different fraternities stand on the much discussed topic of "Hell Week." So far the total number of chapter executives opposing the practice of rough initiations has reached twenty-seven. Five are still for "Hell Week," while three are uncertain. Replies received number thirty-five with twenty more houses as yet unheard from.

Two of the five latest reveal that informal initiations are held entirely within the fraternity house. In the other three groups, the informal is held outside as well as within the house. Paddling is practiced by four of the five chapters and three send their pledges on errands outside the college campus. Two admit that these errands may cause the pledge to be out all night and lose sleep.

Fred C. Schwerer, president of the intramural council, expressed a belief that local fraternities at Penn State would cooperate with the nationals in doing away with rough and dangerous initiations. He has allied himself with the large group of fraternity men who have voiced opposition to "Hell Week." In his opinion, paddling and foolish errands are worthless as a means of inculcating a pledge with brotherly ideals.

The Collegian is publishing an honor roll of fraternities who have done away entirely with rough initiations. These include Phi Delta Theta, Sigma Chi, Alpha Chi Rho, Delta Chi, Delta Upsilon, Omega Delta Upsilon, Acacia, Phi Kappa Psi, and Tau Kappa Epsilon.

Eight University law students stood the bar examination before the supreme court in 1905.

Playmaker Tryouts

Try outs for two one-act plays will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Playmakers Theatre. These plays, "Suppressed Desire" and "The Diabolical Circle," are on reserve in the library.

Hobbs Praised For Mississippi Survey

Dr. S. H. Hobbs, Jr., of the rural-social economics department has just completed a social and economic survey of the state of Mississippi. He began the job last September 1, and has had the assistance of several trained investigators here and in that state.

That the people of Mississippi are very much pleased with the Hobbs survey is evidenced in resolutions adopted by the Central State Committee on Development and Progress, the body that employed Dr. Hobbs. The secretary of that committee, Mrs. R. S. Ralston, has just forwarded Dr. E. C. Branson a copy of the resolutions, which read, in part:

"Dr. Hobbs has, in the scant time and with the limited funds allotted, made a social and economic study of the state which is comprehensive, profound and accurate. Throughout the conduct of the survey he has not limited his activities to the exact topic outlined in the committee's agreement, but has added studies of such other problems and situations which in his judgment and experience were necessary to make a complete report. He has given the closest personal supervision to every phase of the survey, accepting only such statements and reports as are based on the most reliable data available.

"Dr. Hobbs is equipped with a keen intellect, a profound knowledge of social, economic and governmental sciences, and a personality which has won for him the confidence and respect of all the people with whom he has come into contact in this state. His intelligent comprehension and grasp of the problems confronting Mississippi has given to his work among us a far more vital significance than that attached to a mere compilation of facts.

"His report, when printed and placed in the hands of all thoughtful and patriotic citizens of this state, gives a basis for a program which, if followed up, will put into effect remedial legislation, governmental reforms, administrative economies and educational progress that will make Mississippi a leader among southern states.

WALKER ISSUES PLANS FOR 1930 SUMMER SCHOOL

Announcement Bulletins for Summer Session Have Been Mailed Out Recently.

OPENS THURSDAY, JUNE 12

Preliminary announcements of the University summer school for the session of 1930 have been recently issued in the form of a bulletin, and during the past several days have been mailed from the office of N. W. Walker, director of the summer school.

The bulletin contains a list of courses and all necessary information that prospective students will need pending the publication in April of the complete announcement of the summer school. The complete announcement will contain, along with more detailed descriptions of the courses, a list of instructors and an account of special features to be offered.

The officials of the summer school are Dr. Harry W. Chase, president of the University; N. W. Walker, director, and I. C. Griffin, executive secretary.

The session will open on Thursday, June 12, and will close 12 weeks later, August 29. The session will be divided into two terms of six weeks each. The date for registration is Thursday, June 12.

The summer school will be organized in three general divisions: college, graduate, and elementary education. Under the college division work will be offered in the schools of liberal arts, education, commerce, applied science and public welfare. A teachers' bureau will be maintained for the benefit of teachers desiring a change in position.

The preliminary announcement bulletin contains, in addition, accounts of regsitration and tuition fees, table board, dormitory accommodations, regulations concerning women students, the daily schedule, expenses for each term, and free tuition for teachers.

Indications point to a successful year. Several of the most noted professors in America will offer courses as visiting professors, and efforts toward improvements are being made in every direction. There have been more requests for the summer school bulletins and for room reservations thus far this year than usual. Last year the number of students registered in the summer school was 2,536, and at least as many are expected this year.

Bagby Selected To Speak at Deans of Women Conference

The subject of the first address to be delivered Wednesday evening will be, "Emotional Factors in Human Adjustment." The second lecture to be delivered the following morning will be on the subject, "Typical Undergraduate Emotional Problems."

Mrs. Marvin Hendrix Stacy, advisor to women of the university, will represent the local women's department at the convention.

Stock Crash Bettered Real Estate Affairs Says Berge

SHAPLEY TALKS TO RESEARCH SOCIETY

Dr. Harlow Shapley, director of the Harvard College Observatory, delivered the first of the annual Sigma Xi scientific lectures last night in Gerrard Hall on the subject "Order Among Star Clusters and Nebulae" as one of the addresses which he is presenting under the title "Flights From Chaos." The second lecture, "From Electrons to Galaxies," will be given this evening at 8:30 in Gerrard Hall.

In the lecture Dr. Shapley reported on recent studies on star clusters and nebulae which have been made at the Harvard College Observatory, and offered an interpretation of the observations that have been made.

He stated that according to a very new theory known as the super-galaxy hypothesis, our universe is not an extraordinary system but is rather a part of an ordinary system and that instead of being a part of a small galaxy it is part of a super-galaxy which is made up of a series of galaxies and spiral nebulae.

Dr. Shapley explained a new method used in determining the distance to the stars and showed how by this method it is possible to measure the distance to galaxies so far away as 170 million light years.

Dr. Shapley presented his subject in a very clear manner which was understandable to that part of his audience which he classified as "those professors who don't know so much about the subject." Instead of being extremely technical in his explanation he went to the other extreme and used such homely comparisons as likening our universe to a cookie.

This evening Dr. Shapley will speak on "From Electrons to Galaxies" when he will attempt to show how the order that exists between the many stellar bodies extends down to the most minute constituents of ordinary bodies.

Last night after the lecture a smoker was held at the home of Dr. W. C. Coker at which those attending the lecture were given an opportunity to meet the speaker.

ALPHA PSI DELTA HEARS McDOUGAL

The Alpha Psi Delta held its regular meeting February 12 in New West building. Dr. MacDougal of Duke University, one of the leading psychologists in the country, delivered a paper on "Modifications in the Nest Behavior of the Wasps." After showing that the behavior is not of the serial unmodifiable character as is the common belief, Dr. MacDougal pointed to this as a clear-cut evidence against the conception of the intelligence described by Lloyd-Morgan.

The second paper of the evening was presented by A. G. Bayroff who discusses the recently published work of G. E. Coghill in "Anatomy and the Problem of Behavior."

Both papers will discussed at length by the members of the fraternity and many suggestions forwarded as to future experimentation which should be done on each problem in the near future.

National Sales Counselor Speaks At Institute for Real Estate Men.

FIRST OF KIND IN SOUTH

Optimism Predominant Note of Convention Meeting Here Wednesday and Thursday.

Conditions for selling real estate are more favorable as a consequence of the recent stock crash, stated John Berge, sales counselor of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, who addressed the North Carolina Real Estate Institute at its second day's session at the University yesterday.

The institute, the first of its kind in this state, was held under the auspices of the North Carolina Association of Real Estate Boards and the extension division of the University, with the national Association of Real Estate Boards cooperating.

"Wall Street will continue to attract money, but the investing public will turn back to real estate again as one of the tested places to put some of its money," Mr. Berge declared. "The 1930 investor will remember the lesson taught by the recent debacle, and when he starts looking around for diversified investments, he cannot help considering real estate," he said.

Optimism seemed to be the keynote of the institute. Mr. Berge was confident that the real estate business was in for a season of increased activity. "But," he added, "the 1930 investor is going to be more careful to investigate more fully before buying. This tendency should increase sales because of the soundness of real estate investments.

"To the realtor who is 100 per cent sold on his product—who believes in real estate—and who knows what real estate will do for the man who owns it, this new tendency will help to make more sales."

The realtors in attendance were well pleased with the results of the institute, and voted to hold a similar one at the University next winter.

The R. E. Dillard gold cup, awarded to the city having the largest attendance, went to the Wilmington group.

Mr. Ellis, with a host of illustrations, scenes, maps, charts and graphs, spoke on the best method of showing the property to the prospect. The most important thing, he pointed out, was to keep the prospective buyer in a "receptive state of mind.' It was not advisable, Mr. Ellis stated, to point out the unattractive features of the plot or building or to name the price until the "psychological moment"—that is, until the prospect showed that he was interested or asked the price of his own accord.

A Relapse Into The Wild and Wooly Days

State college students seem to be determined that Chicago shall not have a monopoly on crime waves. The outbreak of hairclippings and assaults by bands of masked men at the Raleigh institution recently is reminiscent of Thomas Dixon's stories of Klucker activities during reconstruction days.

Probably the most serious episode of the current crime wave at State was the reported assault upon Charles Kellenberger, sophomore from Greensboro, by a gang of five masked men early last Saturday morning. The Greensboro boy has been confined to his home since the occurrence, and he is still in a serious condition.

Other depredations of the masked marvels during the past week include an orgy of hairclipping, in which two freshmen and a sophomore were shorn of their locks. Evidently the malady is contagious, for a large mob of students is reported to have gone in for heavy drayage in the small quiet hours of Wednesday morning. A coffee pot of huge proportions, used as an advertising display by a Salisbury street establishment, was hauled to the college and set up in front of one of the dormitories.

Wednesday night a machine gun was hoisted to the second floor of Wautauga dormitory "for protection." If the frivolous-minded hoisters would load the gun with salt and pepper and discharge it into the midst of a gang of the night marauders, justice would be done to all concerned. The hides of a few amateur Kluckers would be properly salted down.

We don't place any credence in the predictions that the State rampage will lead to a general epidemic of hazing at North Carolina colleges and universities. Even the most disillusioned young instructor, or the most crusty and confirmed old grouch of a campus pessimist, will admit that the modern college generation in this state has outgrown the hazing stage of adolescence. The State episode represents nothing more than a brief reversion to type, a temporary return to the wild and wooly days of college education.

Good Workouts And Poor Showers

A couple of well conducted gym classes are given each afternoon down in Bynum gymnasium. During these classes the main floor is reserved for the more or less unwilling freshmen, each of whom has a numbered spot especially designated for him. But in the balcony is usually a goodly company of upperclassmen who are glad to take advantage of the opportunity to keep themselves fit through systematic exercise scientifically directed.

Cheerfully they do the full knee-bend and the half knee-bend; gladly they twist and turn at the command of the gym instructor, or fling the bells about with the precision and rhythm of an automaton. As the program progresses muscles are warmed up so that swinging through the various movements becomes a distinct pleasure.

But just before the instructor calls out, "Stationary running!" which is the last exercise of the evening, one of the men in the balcony lays aside his bells and hustles down into the basement, where are kept the lockers and showers. Hastily he sheds his sweat clothing, snatches a towel from his locker, and makes a dash for the shower room, just as the fellows who stayed for the stationary running are coming down the steps. With a look of satisfaction at being first in the room he walks confidently to the second shower from the end, turns it on, and indulges in a good splashing shower.

The next fellow to come in carries an expression of disappointment on his countenance. He knows that the first man has beaten him to the one good shower in the place, but with that hope which springs eternal he goes down the line trying each faucet. It is an old rite that he has performed dozens of times, each time with the forlorn hope that someone has repaired the showers since his last workout. Finally, after being rewarded at each faucet with a few tiny hissing jets of water, or none at all, he either waits for the first man to get through, or consoles himself as best he can under the drip and sputter of one of the faulty sprinklers.

In a few minutes other men come, and go through the same fruitless experiment. Several of them go down the corridor to try the other shower room, only to find its one door closed and padlocked. So they return and with scowls and grumbles make the best of a bad situation. Such is the fate of those fellows whose habit it is to take their workouts and showers in the gym.

The University may not be in a position to build a new gymnasium, or even to install a real swimming pool, but it is certainly able to maintain a decent set of showers in the gymnasium it does have. It seems a shame to put a man through a snappy gym class, get him all hot and sweaty, and then send him down to miserable bathing facilities. It is particularly annoying to those men having their lockers in the gymnasium. Ask the man who owns one.

Southern Newspapers And Scandal Mongering

Perhaps the most harmful effect of the tabloids which have won such wide popularity in the North during the past eight years is upon the smaller newspapers of the South. Written for the lowest class of metropolitan laborers — uneducated for the most part—these sheets of conglomerated filth and sensations have made quite a financial success because of the rapidly increasing number of those often called "Municipal Morons." There is a reasonable excuse for the patronage of this class; living in a tawdry and squalid condition, these harried city laborers will pay their last cent for a page of printed matter which can claim their attention from their daily routine and play upon their dwindling imagination. Scandal and sensations are the materials which most easily satisfy their wants. Even the larger papers in New York have been carrying such news, though never to such an extent as the tabloids. Also, the sensations that they have featured have been of nation-wide interest.

In the South, where newspapers have been operating under a different code, there has remained a sense of discrepancy among the editors of papers in small cities. They have for the most part had a regard for the welfare of their communities rather than the increase of their circulation by nefarious means. With them has rested the conviction that to print personal scandals in small communities would serve only to destroy tranquility and cooperation. And the present policies of the newspapers in the South—the plain and exaggerated statements of facts in the order of their intrinsic importance—has been brought about largely by this school of editors.

One of the most regrettable examples of departure from this code has been exhibited by a recent article in the Raleigh News and Observer. With entire disregard for the chief executive of the state and his family, this paper proceeded to print in large headlines on the front page an article which cast a very unfavorable light upon the actions of the governor's son. The boy had done nothing to merit such an action on the part of the newspaper. No charges had been brought against him by the city court, from which office the facts upon which the article was based had been gleaned. He had merely asked for the release from jail of two waitresses who had been arrested after a dance on charges of disorder in front of one of the much-frequented "weinie-joints." The reporter consequently succeeded in digging up as much unfavorable material as he could, and, in his article, insinuated what he had been forced to omit.

The paper defends its action by claiming that the article had to be printed as city news. But if the person concerned had not been in such a prominent position, would the story have been displayed on the front page? There have been many such incidents which have either been omitted from the paper entirely or else placed in a very obscure corner on a back page. This indicates that the probable motive in printing the article was to cause a sensation which would embarrass all persons concerned.

The popular resentment which the article caused is a gratification to the editors who still use their sense of taste. The Raleigh Times, the other city paper, expressed an eloquent disapproval by failing to mention the incident at all. Other papers over the state, however, have let flow a tirade of condemnation in their editorials—such as the one in the Durham Herald. Popular opinion, instead of reviling sensually in this choice bit of connived scandal, has been almost solid in its disgust at this malicious and unprincipled attack upon the son of the state governor. All in all, the whole affair can serve to demonstrate the fact that the South is not yet ready to throw down all its former traditions; let it be hoped that this animosity toward the exploitation of prominent families for the amusement of the public will always continue, and restrain the papers from misconstruing their power and using it as a tool for exposing voluntarily the embarrassing circumstances which any man is subject to.

Readers' Opinions

SEVERAL GLARING DISCREPANCIES

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I have allowed several days to pass waiting to see if one with more facile pen would call attention to several glaring discrepancies in the report of Rabbi Wise's address in Thursday's Tar Heel. In my opinion, fairness and justice to the noted rabbi, who was a guest at our campus last week, demands correction of several mis-statements in the Tar Heel report.

Instead of attributing the acceptance of Jesus as "uniquely divine" and the Messianic hope for the future to Christianity, Dr. Wise attributed this belief to Judaism and said: "Judaism accepts Jesus as 'uniquely divine' and holds that the Messiah is yet to come, not in the form of a personality, but in the self-redemptive power of the human race, not through the death of one, but through the life of all."

Questioning the following statement attributed to Wise in the Tar Heel report, I received corroboration of my own belief that Dr. Wise had not said, "You were the only source by which Christianity could be spread to the Jews, but you willed that it not be spread in that direction." Dr. Wise, instead, blamed the "Christlessness" of many Christians in past years for the barrier of hatred erected between the two religions. He explained that because of this "Christlessness" which his grandfather and great-grandfathers witnessed and suffered, they never uttered the name of Christ, because He, in their minds, was associated with the degradation and humiliation which they suffered at the hands of his followers.

I am sure that those who heard Dr. Wise speak in Gerrard hall Wednesday morning will agree that this, and not the words attributed to him by the Tar Heel reporter, was the essence of his words on this subject.

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

You have no doubt already heard through the other officers of the National Student Federation of America, of the contributions made and the interest shown by Mr. R. S. Farris, who so capably represented the University of North Carolina. at the recent congress at Stanford. I want to take this additional opportunity to personally re-emphasize the credit which Mr. Farris deserves for his participation in the various discussions, and to call to your student body's attention the fact that your representative was particularly active in the meeting of the southern delegation which resulted in the next congress being brought to Atlanta, Georgia.

The fifth annual congress at Stanford marked the beginning of a new era of development of N. S. F. A. work and service and it is urged that the University of North Carolina continue to be a leader in the promulgation of this national student enterprise, and especially to set the pace through the next congress which is to be held for the first time in the south.

CRITICISM OF THE RUSSIAN CHOIR CONCERT

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

On Monday night the Russian Symphonic Choir presented an unusual exhibition of choral singing at Swain hall.

Throughout the program, while we searched for faults, we were unable to find them. The choir is well named for the symphonic idea is behind all of Mr. Kibalchich's interpretations. Unlike Teuton choirs of like size, who sing with dynamic level, there was here always the greatest of freedom from the mighty fortissimo to unbelievable pianissimo. In many numbers the harmony was in eight parts and always the bass was outstanding for quality of tone and richness of expression. This is explained by the physical phenomenon peculiar to Russian bassos and rarely, if ever, found in singers of another race, for as they reach the lower tonal levels the overtones in their voices vibrate with greater frequency, thus maintaining the balance of the choir as a whole. In ensemble, tone and interpretation, for the last of which it is supposed the director is entirely responsible, the choir was flawless.

The program was divided into three parts, the first Sacred Music, the second Classical Music, and the third Folk Music. Of these three it is difficult, at least for the present critic, to choose any as outstanding and the audience seemed equally pleased with all. It is almost equally difficult to choose any one number but here personal like and dislike have play. Mr. Kibalchichs' own arrangements are generally characterized by an organ-like effect.

The numbers which were well known, including the Prelude in C minor, the Volga Boatmen's Song, and Hospodi Pomilui, made an appeal to those who were acquainted with them. The arrangement of the Prelude did not permit of a tremendous fortissimo in the opening bars, as was expected, for they were done with closed lips. The final chords, however, achieved just such an effect. The arrangement of the popular Boatmen's Song, for male voices, was new to most of the auditors and was not done in the traditional manner introduced in this country by Chaliapin. Hospodi Pomilui, which was more or less of a vocal exercise, revealed the immense capacity already mentioned for numerous dynamic levels. Unlike most choirs this one appeared to be able to sing ppp, pp, piano, mezzo-forte, forte and fortissimo, which is not a whit short of phenomenal.

Mms. Z. Ivanova, Messrs. Mamonoff and Slepuschin were the soloists on the program proper, while another female singer charmed the eye and ear in encore numbers. Unfortunately her name was not recorded. Madame Ivanova has a lyric soprano of thrilling quality, clear and bell-like in tone. Mr. Mamanoff, tenor, was heard in solo and in duet with the unknown charmer. His voice may be put in the robust class for it possesses a striking timbre. Mr. Slepuschin whose number presented little opportunity to show range revealed a pleasing quality of lyric character. To many the unnamed mezzo-soprano gave most pleasure not only because of the quality of her singing but also because of the vivacity with which she sang.

The magical direction of Basile Kibalchich was largely responsible for the success of the program. His methods of direction were as unusual as they were successful. Moreover, it was impossible to tell, even from the second row, how the choir received its pitch. The audience evinced great enthusiasm and it was the opinion of many that the student entertainment series has offered nothing as worthwhile this year as Monday's performance.

"CORRECT ENGLISH"

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

A person said to me a few days ago, "Carolina is not as cultured a place as I expected it to be. Many of the juniors and seniors even use very poor English. Many of them use come when they should use came, use went when they should use have gone, and use git instead of get."

This statement seemed to me to be a rather serious accusation and yet if we face the facts squarely, we must admit that it is true. However, I am sure the English used on this campus compares favorably with that used at the other colleges in the state—the men's colleges at least. Let us not accept this fact as an excuse for not trying to improve our English, however.

Learning to use correct English is a difficult task for those of us who have formed the habit of incorrect usage. In fact, our speech becomes so automatic that we seldom see our mistakes. This, of course, leads us to believe that we make far fewer errors in English than we do in reality. Therefore, about the best way for one to develop a critical attitude toward his oral English is to have someone else constantly to remind him of his mistakes. Students who associate with each other frequently should agree to be one another's English critics.

Roommates can work this plan very satisfactorily. To make the criticism most effective they should not only call their roommates' attention to their mistakes but should have some kind of a chart on which to write down the errors each day. They might even go farther and criticize one another's vocabulary and diction.

Strangers form their opinion of us largely by how we dress, by what we say and how we say it. Within at least two or three years a majority of us will be interviewed by strangers with reference to getting positions. The kind of English we use will, in many cases, be of practical value to us in getting these prospective positions. But even granting that good English does not bring economic returns, it brings returns in personal satisfaction. For instance, being able to speak correct English gives one confidence in himself when he is thrown with his superiors. Secondly, the proper use of the English language is the ear mark of culture and refinement in most cases.

Why cannot Carolina add to her many traditions a self-perpetuating desire on the part of the student body to develop a more sensitive "English conscience?"

A BETTER-ENGLISH ADVOCATE.

SIX CAROLINA TEAMS TO BE IN ACTION TOMORROW NIGHT

Boxing And Basketball Teams Meet Florida And Duke Away; Wrestlers Are Hosts To State

'Gators Have One of Strongest Boxing Teams in Southern Conference.

CAGERS SEEKING REVENGE

Meet With State Will Be Second Big Five Contest; Frosh To Box and Wrestle Oak Ridge.

Carolina will send representatives into three fields of sport tomorrow night when basketball, wrestling and boxing teams see action. The Tar Babies will also be represented in these sports but in only one case do they meet the same school as the varsity. The preliminary game at Duke Saturday night will be the only engagement that the Tar Babies will have at the same school with the varsity.

The basketball team will attempt to revenge itself for the 36-14 defeat handed it by the Blue Devils last Saturday week in the Tin Can. Comparative scores of the two teams do not indicate that the Blue Devils have such a large margin of victory over the varsity, although they do show an unfavorable margin.

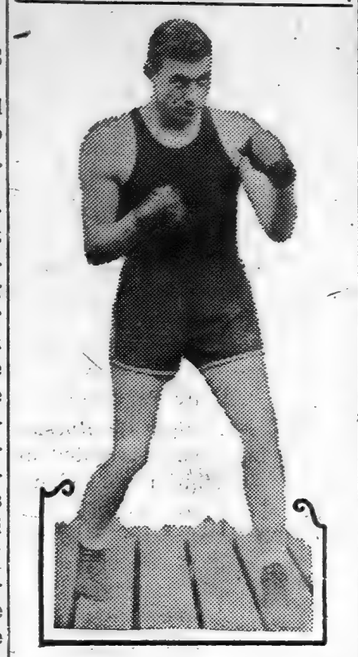
The Southern Conference championship boxers will endeavor to add to their string of victories when they meet the Florida mitmen in Gainesville. The Florida aggregation is reported as having another strong team to put up against the Tar Heels this year. Last year the 'Gators were one of the strongest contenders for the conference crown and a close match is anticipated by Coach Rowe.

The wrestlers will have their second Big Five meet of the week tomorrow night when they meet the N. C. State matmen in the Tin Can. The Tar Heels have just returned from a victory over the Davidson Wildcats by a 14-12 count and another close match is expected when they meet State.

The Tar Babies will send a team against the Blue Imps as a preliminary to the Carolina-Duke tilt in the Bull City. The Carolina frosh lost on February 1 to the Duke frosh quintet by a 36-19 score, and will be out for revenge when they meet tomorrow night.

Both the freshman wrestlers and boxers will send teams against the Oak Ridge Cadets tomorrow night when they meet in the Tin Can. This is the only meet for the frosh mat and mitmen for this week.

Blackwood Stars



Theta Kappa Nu and Sigma Epsilon had a royal batle in the Tin Can yesterday afternoon. Sigma Epsilon came out on top with the score 31 to 23. The close guarding and fast playing of both teams characterized the game.

Blackwood starred for the winners with 15 points to his credit. Johnston and Midgett were the boys that piled up the markers for the losers, having 10 points each.

Lineup:

Sig. Ep. (31)	Th. K. N. (23)
Blackwood (15)	Culpepper
R. F.
Goodwin (2)	Wall (3)
L. F.
Lawrence (2)	Henry

Lohr (4)	Johnston (10)

GEORGIA TEAMS MEET SATURDAY IN GRID CONTEST

'Georgia' Has Great Backs In Branch and Nash; 'Tech' Strong in Line.

The old figurative clash of irresistible force and immovable object may be duplicated in Saturday's Tar Heel winter practice football game, scheduled for Kenan stadium at 2 o'clock.

"Georgia" and "Georgia Tech," winners in last week's games, are to be the opponents. "Georgia" is slated for the role of irresistible force. The stellar varsity backs, Branch and Nash, and the stout freshman Croom have made the "Georgia" backfield an irresistible force in two games previously played. House, veteran, broke his arm yesterday and will be out during the remainder of winter practice.

"Georgia Tech" is thought by many to have the strongest line of any of the winter practice teams, and will have the role of immovable object in this interesting battle.

Blackwood and Fysal, letter guards, with a strong freshman, Allen, constitute a real bulwark at center. Sharkey and Collins, tackles, and Nichols, end, all giants, were among the most outstanding of last year's freshman line crop. "Red" Parsley, letter end, rounds out a great line.

The teams will be holding their first battle of the regular six-week schedule, to make the game all the more interesting.

"Georgia Tech" has its own backfield strength, and will likewise expect to make things hot for "Georgia" in a ball-carrying way.

The "Jackets" showed their offensive power with a crushing 18-0 win from "Virginia" last week, in which the outstanding stars were Bill Suggs, 190-pound fullback, and Chuck Erickson, sprinting halfback, who is never down until pinned flat.

When Chicago established its cotton exchange, it made Houston the delivery point. New York and New Orleans followed and the Houston-Galveston market quickly became the world's greatest.

Wherein We Disagree—

Condemnation of the spirit exhibited here at the recent Carolina-Duke basketball game by Herbert O'Keef, columnist and sports editor of the Duke Chronicle, shows that either O'Keef is undertaking his periodical attack against everything existing here or he is attempting to inveigle the Tar Heel columnists into a controversy.

Observers of the actions of student spectators know that there was nothing in the booing and hissing at the Duke game indicating feeling against the visiting team. The same might have happened had Carolina been playing Davidson, State, Wake Forest, or any other team. At the time of the hissing Carolina was behind and the students thought that the referee's decisions favored Duke. There is nothing in such actions to commend. We, along with editor Holder, deplore it. But for O'Keef to wave the red flag and say that Duke doesn't feel like lowering itself to such a plane demonstrates only prejudice against Carolina on his part. Caustic remarks in his column last year irritated us slightly. Claims of the sport department there last spring that Duke was justly entitled to several championships held at that time by Carolina amused us.

O'Keef's remark that the spirit shown by the student body here at the Duke game was the rottenest he had ever been forced to witness is sheer nonsense. Let him hark back to the boxing bouts last winter.

Do not misunderstand us. We are offering no defense of the students' actions in hissing the referee's decisions, but we merely attempt to correct impressions which readers may gain from reading O'Keef's column.

This is re-opening what may be an old sore with the Chronicle's columnist, but we happen to be acquainted with certain tendencies of the Wilmington boy to exaggerate.

And Another Thing—

In the editorial response to O'Keef's column the remarks of a "staunch supporter of University teams" stated that Carolina basketball teams were unpopular in Atlanta. We aren't going into the testimonial business, but we venture to say that Tar Heel teams are as popular in Atlanta as any other, excepting Tech. We have always been received enthusiastically down there. Followers of the team think that these receptions are evidences of the popularity our teams enjoy in Atlanta.

House Is Injured In Practice Game

A special attraction was presented to a stadium entirely empty of spectators yesterday afternoon when the members of the monogram club and the members of the squad without letters, staged a prologue to the annual game played for the benefit of the Monogram Club, which is to be played in March. The scrimmage, which lasted for thirty minutes, was due largely to the fact that the members of the Monogram Club were at the stadium in uniform for the purpose of having a picture taken.

About two minutes prior to the closing whistle, Henry House, while making a beautiful end run, was thrown suddenly to the ground and was carried from the field with a broken arm. This was the only serious casualty of the game.

University Places Fencing On Intramural Sport List

Athletic Council Votes to Recognize Sport Following Interest in Novice Meet.

HENDLIN IS DIRECTOR

A new sport was yesterday added to the University's intramural calendar—fencing.

Addition of the new sport was formally accomplished by favorable vote of the athletic council at its last meeting, following the wide expression of interest in the recent novice tournament.

Hinkey Hendlin, national amateur champion last year, now a student in the University, has been appointed director, and will advise and interview every man interested.

Appropriations have been made for equipment, and plans are being rushed to push the new sport to the fore as quickly as possible. Fencing quintets are to be formed from dormitories and fraternities to participate in a regular schedule of meets. Additional men from any groups will be divided into other teams, so that every man interested will get a chance to participate.

Director Hendlin has urged that every student interested in fencing, either in organizing his fraternity or dormitory quint, or in participating independently, see him, from Monday to Friday of next week, at 313 Old East, according to the following schedule:

Monday, 9 p. m.—Aycock, Lewis, Graham and Everett.

Monday, 10 p. m.—Sigma Epsilon, Zeta Beta Tau, Kappa Psi, Phi Alpha, Theta Kappa Nu, Delta Tau Delta, Phi Kappa Delta.

Tuesday, 9 p. m.—Grimes, Mangum, Manly and Ruffin.

Tuesday, 10 p. m.—Sigma Phi Sigma, Lambda Chi Alpha, Beta Theta Pi, Sigma Chi, Pi Kappa Alpha, Sigma Nu and Theta Chi.

Wednesday, 9 p. m.—Steele, Old East, Old West and Carr.

Wednesday, 10 p. m.—S. A. E., D. K. E., Phi Gamma Delta, Zeta Psi, Phi Delta Chi, S. P. E., and A. T. O.

Thursday, 9 p. m.—New Dorms, Graduate Club, Best House and any independent groups.

Thursday, 10 p. m.—Delta Sigma Phi, Chi Phi, Tau Epsilon Phi, Phi Kappa Sigma, Chi Psi, Phi Sigma Kappa, Theta Phi, Sigma Delta and any other fraternities.

BOXING TEAM IS LACKING BANTAM IN FLORIDA MEET

Team in Good Shape on Eve of Bouts With Powerful Southern Team; 12 Men Make Trip.

(By E. B. Shemwell)

With a squad of 12 men picked to make the trip to Florida, the Tar Heel varsity boxing team had a vigorous workout yesterday afternoon in the Tin Can.

Captain Archie Allen looked unusually good in the ring, and knocked his sparring partners around in a way that looked bad for Florida and South Carolina. After four fast rounds in the ring, Captain Allen worked out with the bags for a few minutes that showed his condition, which might be pronounced perfect.

Goodridge looked as good as ever in the ring, and showed rare form. Hoke Webb worked several fast rounds, and showed the large number of spectators that Coach Rowe has no shortage of first-class reserves. His overhand right looked especially dangerous, and his left was good too.

Another prospect for next year's team who showed up well was Tom Parsons. Parsons was a good freshman fighter last year, but this year has been unable to come out on account of a knee injury. yesterday he worked out a fast round, and looked good.

Little Harry Sheffield, the little flyweight with the big fists, was looking like a million, and is apt to do things down in the land of sunshine. Sheffield has lost only one fight this year, a close decision to Washington and Lee. He lost a judges' decision after having floored his man three times.

Add Warren was on the job working out the heavies, and is expecting to get them in prime shape.

Coach Crayton Rowe took the following 12 men with him: Sheffield and Cohen in the 125-pound division; Goodridge and Farris, 135 pounds; Captain Allen and Webb in the 145 class; Davis, 126 pounds; Warren, 175 pounds; Koenig, unlimited, and Smathers, Avery and Rosenfeldt in the heavier weights. The team left last night and will fight Florida Saturday night and the South Carolina Gamecocks Monday.

Reformers in Boston are working through the state legislature to outlaw the professional boxing game.

Varsity Wrestlers Down Davidson 14-12

In a close and hotly contested match, the Tar Heel matmen downed Davidson by the score 14-12 in the Davidson gym Wednesday. The outstanding match of the night was the exciting scrap in which Stallings, undefeated Tar Heel 125-pounder, threw his man in 3 minutes, 25 seconds. Ferguson, Carolina 175-pounder, lost his first fight of the season when he lost a close time decision to Warren of Davidson. Cowper won his fight with Christenburg, Davidson 165-pound man, in a thrilling extra period match.

In the 125-pound division, Bell of Carolina, lost a close time decision to Cowan, while Albright, Tar Heel 135-pounder, beat Brown of Davidson on time. Tsumas of Carolina won a time decision over Thad Brock, Davidson's all-state end, while Houghton lost by time to Bud Raker, another Wildcat grid star.

TEAM TO CHANGE ATTACK FOR CAGE GAME WITH DUKE

To Launch Counter-Offensive Against High Scoring Blue Devil Quintet; Showed Scoring Power Against Loyola.

The Tar Heel backetball team is planning to turn the tables and launch a counter-offensive against the fast Duke quint when the two teams hold their second meeting of the year in Durham Saturday night.

The Tar Heels, without a veteran forward, played mostly defensive ball in the first Duke game. Duke won, by the unexpected margin of 35-14.

Coach Jim Ashmore now is planning new tactics for Saturday night's contest, which is slated to start at 8:30 o'clock. And those who have followed the Tar Heels closely think the sensational 14-point rally against the strong Loyola quint Wednesday night may be a strong sign that that will be precisely what the Tar Heels will do against Duke.

That 14-point rally, which in nine minutes brought the Tar Heels from the short end of a 22-11 count to the long end of a 25-22 count, was the first great offensive drive the Tar Heels have shown all season. Supporters are hoping it gave them confidence, and will start them on the offensive after the fast Duke club, matching Duke's speed and drive with speed and drive of their own.

Neiman and Greene, forwards, shared honors in that drive with Harper, regular center, and Marpet and Brown, regular guards.

This combination, pairing the fastest floormen of the Tar Heel forwards, will undoubtedly be seen in action against Duke, although Sandy Dameron, defensive star, may get the call at one forward in place of Greene.

SEVEN VARSITY TRACKMEN ENTER VIRGINIA MEET

Mile Relay Team Will Compete Saturday in Charlottesville, Virginia.

Seven members of the varsity track team and one member of the freshman teama are entered in the University of Virginia indoor track meet to be held in Memorial gymnasium in Charlottesville Saturday night. A mile relay team picked from Farmer, Barkley, Weil, Garrett and Gay will be entered. It is possible that Gay will not be able to make the trip on account of a cold from which he has been suffering for the past several days.

Bill Perry, hurdler and letterman, is entered in the high hurdles. George Bagby, letter high jumper is entered in the high jump. Bagby was a consistent scorer last year, and does over 5 feet 8 inches regularly. His best mark last year was 5 feet 10 inches.

Clarence Jensen, leader of the freshman cross country team, and star miler, will be entered in either the 880-yard run or mile run. Jensen has to his credit the time of 4:33 in the mile.

Farmer, Garrett and Gay will be entered in the 50-yard dash. One of the four competing in the mile relay will be entered in the 440-yard event.

Freshman Quint Will Meet G.M.A. Tonight

Strengthened with the self-confidence following their defeat of the State College freshmen, the Tar Babies are well primed for their second clash with the Blue Imps in Durham Saturday night.

As a result of their recent trip through Virginia, the defensive play of the team as a whole has been considerably strengthened, while the work of Dunn and Connor has greatly improved. Supported by the consistent playing of Dave Henry, regular guard, and Beale, center, the Carolina frosh presented a faster passing, smoother working combination in the State game.

Lineberger, who has done excellent work all season, is now out of action because of injuries; however, he is expected to be back in shape for the Duke game. Although Wilmer Hines failed to register a point in the previous meeting with the Blue Imps, his accurate shooting has made him high scorer in practically every game.

Coach Enright declares that every member of the squad is playing a better brand of basketball, and that the coming contest will not be as decisive a victory for the Duke freshmen as the last. He acknowledges the superiority of the Duke team but predicts that the Tar Babies will put up a harder fight, resulting in a closer score when the final whistle blows.

REPORTERS CLUB FORMED FOR CAROLINIAN STAFF AT SISTER INSTITUTION

Greensboro, Feb 14.—An organization for reporters is the latest club-child of North Carolina college, born at a meeting of the staff of the Carolinian, weekly collegiate news-sheet, last week. The new association carries the name Reporters' club.

Carolinian reporters are members. To assist in the writing of stories of news and to sponsor programs of interest are two of the principal purposes of the club. Miss Eloise Ward, of Rose Hill, is the first president.

At the meeting of the organization Miss Mattie Moore Taylor, of Enfield, presided. Miss Taylor is editor-in-chief of the Carolinian.

JENNINGS PLAYS IN HIS SEVENTH TALKING ROLE

De Witt Jennings, noted character actor of stage and screen, is firmly convinced that seven is his lucky number.

By a coincidence, his seventh role in talking pictures was in "Seven Keys to Balpate" and he was the seventh member of the cast to be selected by William Le Baron, vice-president in charge of R-K-O production.

Jennings, who has been working on the stage and in pictures all his life, enacts the role of Mayor Cargan; the dishonest city official, in Richard Dix's first Radio Picture, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," now showing at the Carolina theatre.

Featured in support of the star, in addition to Jennings, are Miriam Seegar, in the feminine leading role, Margaret Livingston, Lucien Littlefield, Crauford Kent, Edithe Yorke, Joseph Allen and Nella Walker. The all-talking farce melodrama is based on Earl Derr Biggers' story and was directed for Radio Pictures by Reginald Barker.

A shakedown test, a rescue, and a hundred thrills

A SCORE of carefree Coast Guard sailors, and with them a Westinghouse man from the Boston Office, headed in a "bum boat" for the cutter Chelan peacefully at anchor in the harbor of Hamilton, Bermuda Islands.

It had been an exciting shakedown test-cruise. The Westinghouse turbine generator, motor and condensers had functioned perfectly, the sea had yielded up its bag of tricks, the Bermudas had fascinated every soul. And soon they would be bound for home.

But fate held new experiences in store. Five hundred miles off the Azores, the Newport, New York State training ship, had lost her propeller. The Chelan was called to the rescue. And with her, of course, went the Westinghouse man.

"Tread The Green Grass" Is Being Rehearsed Now In New York; "The Field God" Praised In Chicago.

Paul Green is a busy man these days. Besides doing his usual work in philosophy each day, he finds time to work on a new play, and of week-ends, commute to Broadway to rehearse his forthcoming production of "Tread the Green Grass," which is being produced by a man new in the field, William D. Blake. The play is scheduled to open during the latter part of this month. Mr. Green says it is a folk fantasy and will have music and a dumb show. The latter, an old theatrical artifice, is always new whenever used. This time moving pictures will be substituted for puppets.

A few weeks ago Mr. Green made a trip to Chicago to rehearse a revival of "The Field God," which Thomas Wood Stevens, director of the Goodman Theatre has done. The reviews of this production, which opened January 28, are a credit certainly to Mr. Green as a playwright and to Mr. Stevens as a director. The Chicago Herald critic, speaking of one scene in the play, comments:

"It was an upclimbing scene that held me. It was neither so stagy nor so well staged as the one it somewhat recalled from 'Porgy.' It was an honest scene in as honest a play as I have ever witnessed. Paul Green, of 'In Abraham's Bosom' wrote it; and if 'Abraham' was worth a Pulitzer prize, 'The Field God' ought to have two. It was virtually a new play last night.

"Nor was this scene of hysteria and superstition the only one that jiggled the marrow in my spine. The play, while apparently one of 'atmosphere and local color' reflected farm life among the whites in eastern North Carolina, was packed with drama. And all the packing was beautifully knitted into a web of fate. Never did tragedy seem more inevitable so far as the fates were concerned, and never in a recent play, was it more desperately vanquished by the strength of man."

"Potter's Field," a Green play of negro life, is being produced by Sidney Ross, with Jasper Deeter as director. This play which depicts something of the life of Chapel Hill's negro quarter, was supposed to have begun rehearsal in Philadelphia some weeks ago, but so far Mr. Green has heard nothing of it. There are about thirty characters in the full-length play, which will be done without interruption, that is, the audience will see it in one sitting.

Another play, "The House of Connelly," which was bought by the Theatre Guild and was scheduled for production this fall, has been postponed until next season. This play has about seventy-five characters and deals with the decay of an aristocratic southern family.

At present, Mr. Green is working on a new play, showing the disintegration of an educated and sensitive weak soul in a small southern community.

If anyone should care to know what Paul Green is not doing these days, follow Milt Gross's suggestion and "Dun't esk."

Magazine Notice

Due to the fact that a number of comprehensive examinations will be given on March 1, the next issue of the Carolina Magazine will be printed one week early states John Mebane, Editor. Y MEN TO HEAR THREE SPEAKERS

U. T. Holmes, H. F. Comer, And R. B. House To Address Three Cabinets.

U. T. Holmes, professor of French, will address the sophomore cabinet Monday night on the subject of "Comparative Religion." Professor Holmes' talk will be the second of a series; Dean Bell spoke to the group last week on "Religion of Science."

The program of the junior-senior cabinet will be a discussion of the "New Attitude on Morals." This discussion will be led by H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y. It is planned that this discussion continue for at least six meetings, this discussion being the second of the series.

R. B. House, executive secretary of the University, will be the speaker for the freshman council Monday night at the Y at 7:15. The programs for this cabinet for the past two or three meetings have been featured by speakers. Last meeting Dr. Meyer of the sociology department spoke to the cabinet on a philosophy of key words, giving six words that would help one to adapt himself.

Junior Co-ops Will Have Examinations During Coming Week

Junior cooperative engineering students will have examinations next week before going back on the work to which they have been assigned. The examinations, which cover the work done since Christmas, will begin Monday and run the entire week. On Monday, February 24, the members of group 1 of the cooperative engineers, will report for seven weeks' work in the industrial plants, after which they will again return to the University.

The schedule of examinations as announced yesterday is as follows:

Monday a. m.: Engineering 12b; p. m.: Engineering 60b.

Tuesday a. m.: Engineering 90b; p. m.: Mathematics 57.

Wednesday a. m.: Engineering 32b and Engineering 93b.

Thursday a. m.: Engineering 5b and English 11b.

Friday a. m.: Engineering 63b.

Four Chosen To Debate

As a result of the varsity debate tryout Thursday night on the question of disarmament, H. H. Hobgood, G. P. Carr, J. M. Baley and C. W. Meares were selected. These men will represent the University in the coming dual debate with George Washington University. Carr and Baley compose the affirmative team, while Hobgood and Meares make up the negative aggregation.

DEBATE COUNCIL SCHEDULES EIGHT MORE CONTESTS

Eight Debates And Oratorical Meeting Will Complete Forensic Year.

The present plans of the debate council for the remainder of the collegiate year call for eight debates with colleges and universities scattered throughout the South. The council has also accepted an invitation to send a representative to the state-wide oratorical contest, the contestants to speak upon "The Flag," and has chosen H. H. Hobgood as the University's representative.

In the first intercollegiate debates of the present quarter the Tar Heel debaters will journey to Atlanta on February 25 to meet Emory and Georgia Tech on the affirmative side of "Resolved: That modern science tends to destroy theistic faith." J. C. Williams and J. A. Wilkinson will engage Georgia Tech, while W. W. Speight and McB. Fleming Jones will tackle Emory.

The second home debate will occur when the representatives of George Washington University meet the local debaters in Gerrard hall, February 28, on "Resolved: That the nations of the world should adopt some plan of complete disarmament of all forces, except those which are necessary for police purposes." Later there will be a return engagement between the two institutions at Washington. G. P. Carr and J. M. Baley compose the affirmative team; H. H. Hobgood and C. W. Meares are the personnel of the negative outfit. The council does not yet know which team will debate in Chapel Hill.

On, or about, April 1 the University of Maryland will send a team to Chapel Hill to debate the disarmament question, this being the third encounter of the season on this question. At a later date the Carolina debaters will go to College Park for a return engagement. The tryouts for selecting the affirmative and negative teams will be announced in a later issue of this paper. There is, also, the probability of a dual debate with Boston University on the same question sometime in April.

The Carolina-Northwestern debate on "Resolved: That the chain store in its present form should be abolished" will be held in Gerrard hall on April 15. It is not yet known which side of the question Carolina will uphold in this debate.

The University's intercollegiate debating season will be brought to a close by the second annual Carolina-Virginia radio debate, which will be broadcast from Raleigh late in April. The question to be debated is "Resolved: That the thirteen months calendar should be adopted." Last year Speight and Williams met the Virginia debaters at Richmond in the first radio debate in the history of the two institutions. No decision was rendered on this occasion. This time, however, the council plans to ask the radio audience to mail their decisions to station WPTF, from which the debate will be broadcast.

Peiping Feb. 14,—(IP)— A school of journalism in Yenching University here has been in operation since last April and is considered very successful.

MORE THAN 400 SELF-HELPERS ON REGULAR JOBS

Bureau Survey Shows Swain Hall Employs Largest Number of These.

At least 430 of the self-help students of the University of North Carolina are working at regular scheduled jobs of so many hours a week. This does not include those doing odd jobs, or graduate students holding assistant instructorships.

A recent survey of the Self-help Bureau shows that Swain Hall employs the largest number of boys, but other places that use student help are the laundry, building department, Graduate hall, Dean Bradshaw's office, alumni office, Welcome Inn cafeteria, Tar Heel Club, University Cafeteria, Carolina Inn Cafeteria, Archer House, Carolina House, Bachelor Club, Gooch's Cafe, Woltz Coffee Shop, Carolina Theatre, Book Exchange, all confectionery shops, the boarding houses of Mrs. Pickens, Mrs. Merritt, Mrs. McBriar, and Mrs. Ledbetter and a host of others.

During the past summer the Self-help Bureau received 400 applications from would-be students. Of these 309 actually came. Thirty-eight per cent of those applying are sons of farmers, and eight per cent are orphans or sons of widowed mothers.

The self-help secretary interviewed 115 men during the first two days of school. It is his duty not only to aid boys in obtaining jobs but also to help and advise them in working out financial problems. Many students need encouragement more than financial aid.

One of the most remarkable records in the files of the bureau is that of a boy who worked 48 hours per week and made an A and two Bs in his studies.

Another interesting case is that of a young man who entered the University last year with $150 in the bank. He had no regular job throughout the year but worked at odd errands through the bureau. At the end of the year he had a balance of $5 in the bank, and the sum of $27 in his pocket—and all bills paid.

The office has already received 213 requests asking for information and blanks for next year. These applicants have been sent fifteen-page information booklets and on March 1 will be mailed blanks on which to apply for jobs at Swain hall.

The secretary is available at the Y. M. C. A. building at all times from 8 to 5 to help in any way.

Deutscher Klub To Meet Next Sunday

Dr. E. C. Metzenthin announced yesterday that the regular meeting of the Deutscher Klub which was originally intended to be held tomorrow will be postponed until the following Sunday, February 23, when it will meet at 4:30 p. m. in his home on Hillsboro street.

Chase In Lexington

Dr. Harry W. Chase left yesterday for Lexington, where he will spend the week-end. While there he will address the alumni of that section. He will also speak in the pulpit of the Methodist church.

Staff Meeting

There will be the regular meeting of the entire Tar Heel staff Sunday night at 7 o'clock in the offices. All reporters, assistant editors and city editors must attend these meetings. Four Carolina theatre passes will be awarded at this time and work for the remainder of the quarter will be outlined.

SHAPLEY GIVES MATTER UNUSUAL CLASSIFICATION

Noted Astronomer Speaks Here To Scientific Research Society.

A new classification of all material systems from the smallest known part to the greatest of the super-galaxies arranged in order of increasing mass was presented by Dr. Harlow Shapley, director of Harvard College Observatory, last night in the second of two lectures he presented under the auspices of Sigma Xi, scientific research society.

Dr. Shapley in the two lectures attempted to show how there is a definite system of organization existing between all material systems. Led on by his success in classifying the galactic and globular clusters, he attempted to classify all material bodies in some all-inclusive, usable table. The results of his efforts, a classification which includes everything from the most minute now known to the greatest, was presented in his second lecture last night.

This classification shows the relation that exists between all material systems and demonstrates that there is actually a flight from chaos in the organization of the universe.

In his lecture Dr. Shapley presented in his classification a new conception of interstellar material in what he calls cosmoplasma, which includes all matter that cannot be placed in any system. The matter of interstellar space can be shown to exist, but this new classification is the first to be presented which includes all material systems and this interstellar material as well.

In his original classification, which he has only recently completed, Dr. Shapley leaves at both extremities of his table a section which he does not designate wtih any name. These undesignated sections — one of which falls below the electron and quanta in mass and the other which comes after the super-galaxy and the universe—indicate, said the speaker, that he does not consider that all material systems have been discovered.

Dr. Shapley's lectures were sponsored by the North Carolina chapter of Sigma Xi, national scientific research society, which annually brings to the campus some eminent scientist who delivers a series of scientific lectures.

Loan Fund Available

The attention of women graduate students is called to the A. A. U. W. loan fund, established by the local chapter of the American Association of University Women. From this fund a sum not to exceed $100 is available each year.

DYER HEADS NEW SOUTH ATLANTIC GLEE CLUB GROUP

University Professor Elected President Of Southern Division Of Intercollegiate Association.

Professor Harold S. Dyer, head of the music department here, was recently made president of the new South Atlantic Glee Club Association.

The southern organization was chartered this year by the national council of the Intercollegiate Glee Club Association at New York City, as a result of the reapportioning of the various contest districts throughout the United States.

North and South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee and Georgia are included in the new division. The executive committee has sent out invitations to many schools which have not participated in the contests heretofore. The territory includes 21 schools which either maintain men's choruses or could well do so. The schools which have been most active for the past three years are chiefly from the Carolinas and Virginia with the exception of one from Alabama which has been removed from the district by the redivision of territories.

Due to its location, North Carolina has a good chance to become the seat of next year's contest. The decision will be made by the executive committee next fall. The new organization does away completely with the state contests for glee clubs. If the number of schools competing in the new district contest is very great elimination contests will be held about ten days before the chief one. Among the North Carolina schools eligible for the contest are: Duke, Wake Forest, Elon, Guilford, State and Davidson. There are seven schools in Virginia, six in South Carolina, six in Tennessee and five in Georgia.

Phi Zeta Nu Taps Johnson And Horney

Phi Zeta Nu, honorary local electrical engineering fraternity, tapped P. G. Johnson of Asheville and G. F. Horney of Greensboro for membership in the organization last Thursday evening.

The tapping took place at the regular meeting of the University branch of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers which was held in Phillips hall. At the meeting of the institute, officers to serve the remainder of the year were elected. Those chosen to direct the organization are F. B. Kuykendal, president; E. R. Davis, vice-president; F. R. Toms, secretary; and W. B. White, treasurer. Mr. Toms and Mr. White were re-elected to the offices they held during the first part of the year.

Phi Zeta Nu is the honorary electrical engineering fraternity which recognizes excellent scholarship and other activities among the students of electrical engineering.

J. E. Lear, professor of electrical engineering, spoke at the meeting on the general topic of "Illumination." In his talk Mr. Lear traced the history of the electric light and then briefly discussed illumination proper, mentioning some of the fine points of the science of proper illumination.

A THOUGHT A DAY

We may reach a point in accent which would justify the assumption that the purpose of language is to convey intelligible sounds.—H. Wickham Steed.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

Tar Heel Topics

Senator Simmons states that chain stores present "a serious problem" and are a "menace." Not exactly our idea of a particularly profound statement, Senator.

According to the Raleigh Times, the "Tonnage of Navies Is To Be Tackled" by the naval conference delegates. Page Pot Adkins and Billy Koenig for a hasty trip to London, if some real action is desired.

The Farm Board has taken steps toward the salvation of the wheat farmers, according to our Washington correspondent. Probably the results will be about the same as those of most evangelistic campaigns.

Of all the beautiful women in the Russian Symphony Choir at its concert in Swain hall, only one is unmarried. Since she was described to us as a "striking blonde" by one of the masculine members of the troupe, we changed our mind about wanting a date with one of the Rooshians.

Commander O. L. Bodenhammer discarded his collar during his address before the state American Legion post officers conference in Durham, but he can't hold a candle to the Simmons-Bailey men when it comes to getting hot under the collar.

Prohibition And Al Smith's Defeat

With the House of Representatives judiciary committee involved in a storm of controversy over proposals for repeal of the eighteenth amendment, the prohibition question again has usurped the spotlight of national interest, relegating the London naval conference, the Chicago problem and the Hughes appointment to the wings. In connection with this current preponderance of the prohibition question, a detailed analysis of the reasons why the last presidential election resulted as it did is of interest.

In the current issue of Social Forces, a "scientific medium of social study and interpretation" published quarterly by the University of North Carolina Press, Professor W. F. Ogburn of the University of Chicago, who serves with Dr. Howard W. Odum on President Hoover's Research Committee on Social Trends, makes a detailed analysis of the vote in the 1928 presidential election. It is generally thought that Al Smith was strongly supported by the foreign-born vote, by the cities, and by the regular Democrats, and that Hoover was supported by the opposites of these forces.

By a rather complicated series of contributions and equations, Professor Ogburn arrives at the conclusion that the wet influence was the most powerful, accounting for nearly three times as many Smith votes as the religious issue, which ranked second. The Catholic influence was about twice as great as the traditional Democratic party influence, which in turn was twice as great as the rural and urban, while the foreign-born influence was quite negligible.

To those accustomed to think of party loyalty as a great conservative force resisting change, as illustrated by the persistence of the (nearly) solid South and of the two parties despite numerous attempts to break them up, Professor Ogburn's deductions show a surprisingly slight influence of the "party for party's sake" tradition. Likewise it is shown that the urban influence for Smith was not as strong as most people think.

From Professor Ogburn's study it is evident that the prohibition question was by far the most decisive issue in the last election, contrary to the frequently advanced theory that "religious bigotry" was the main cause of Smith's defeat. And there is every indication that prohibition will continue to be the chief point of contention in presidential campaigns for some time to come—until the eighteenth amendment is repealed, or, what is more likely, until it is rendered virtually inoperative by the force of public opinion.

Thousands of legislative enactments have been relegated to oblivion by disuse. Although they remain upon the statute books, even in the constitution, they have been changed by judicial interpretation and popular usage until their teeth have been extracted, and they have practically passed from the memory of officials and citizens alike.

In all probability the eighteenth amendment is fated to take its place along with the thousands of outworn and forgotten laws.

The New Chief Justice

Charles Evans Hughes, new chief justice of the United States, is one of the most able lawyers in the country. No one can deny that. And as such he has gained quite a reputation as a member of the legal profession. Aside from his achievements before the bar, he has gained nation-wide, if not international, importance in the capacities of secretary of state, associate justice of the United States supreme court, and member of the Hague tribunal.

But merely because Mr. Hughes has held these positions does not qualify him for the chief justiceship. In fact, there are two indictments of his past activities which disqualify him altogether. First, during the entire period of his connection with the Harding cabinet his lips remained sealed. As secretary of state he certainly must have been aware of the corrupt dealings of Fall and Daugherty and others connected with the administration. Hughes could have rendered the nation a great service at that time by refusing to see the infamous plans of the Harding "gang" carried out.

His resigning from the supreme court bench to run for the presidency in 1916, however, is the more serious indictment. We condemn Chase for coveting a presidential nomination for the election of 1868. But Hughes, by actually resigning from the court, clearly indicated that his political ambitions come before any love of the law which he may possess. Our conception of the supreme court is that it should be composed of a group of men who are sincerely interested in the protection of the rights of all the classes and groups which compose the population of the United States. Mr. Hughes, the office-seeker, does not measure up to this standard.

The Senate's recent confirmation of the Hughes nomination is no less than a blow to the effectiveness of the supreme court. Whether the prevailing opinion that the nomination would have been rejected had it not been for the fact that such an action would have been harmful to the Hoover Administration is a well-founded one, it is difficult to say. But if the Senate placed a man, unsuited for the position, in office merely to please the president, then there is no invective which that group does not deserve.

If the collar pin fad continues to spread, 'tis quite likely that the price of brass on the campus will go up.

The vogue of the "third eyebrow" is growing by leaps and bounds here in Chapel Hill. Perhaps, we shall very soon have a few Van Dyke beards among the faculty.

Graham Memorial patiently awaits the discovery of some new plan of raising the necessary funds for its completion. Although very extended opposition is sure to greet the proposal, we suggest that student contributions should be used—now that every other device has failed. Until some better method is suggested we are going to continue in our belief that Graham Memorial should be completed by all means, and that completion must come about through student aid. At present the unfinished building is a blemish on the campus and a disgrace to the life and deeds of Edward Kidder Graham. To him, who was always loathe to leave a task half-done, has been erected an unfinished memorial!

"WHY WE BEHAVE LIKE HUMAN BEINGS" is the title of an excellent and widely read book. But Carolina men habitually do things which neither the writer of this book, nor any other writer, can explain thoroughly. Why is it that 75 per cent of students enter and leave the long hallways to Murphey and Saunders by way of the left door, rather than by way of the right one? Even casual observation will corroborate this statement. To say that 75 per cent of students are left handed is quite incredible. Why is it that students who habitually sit on the back row will move up into the crowd when an examination is given? To be sure, the majority of us are not nearsighted. Why is it that the majority of Carolina men will turn their heads to the left when called from the rear?

A prominent member of the debate squad made a very noteworthy contribution to the works of modern oratory Thursday night when he said: "In connection with the question of disarmament, there are several factors which I cannot fail to overlook so to speak, as it were."

All hail the advent of the fencing team! Since there must be at least one organization for each student to list under his name in the Yackety Yack, perhaps a few more clubs might be useful. We mildly suggest an Organization-of-Those-Who-Collect-Tobacco-Tags and a Club-for-Those-Who-Carry-Umbrellas. In addition to these, it would of course be nice to have one distinct and very "high rating" order made up solely of Those-Who-Write-Reviews-For-the-Daily-Tar-Heel.

In an issue of the Carolina Magazine of several years ago we noticed an advertisement that read as follows: "Just as Sure as the Graham Memorial Will Rise in Its Splendor, and Offer to the Carolina Student Body Its Priceless Service—Do We Assure You of That Same Careful, Clean and Prompt Service." The ad was from the laundry. Now we leave for you the problem of ascertaining just what the prognosticator meant.

We've always wondered just what the super-intellectual professors really read; but now we know. While engaged in the lazy pastime of glancing through the files of this paper we came across a headline which declared: "HOWARD JONES READS ALICE IN WONDERLAND."

The Med. Building seems to us a citadel of terror; we never venture by it without considerable trepidation. Our deep horror has been recently increased by rumors of dire happenings within those sombre walls. If sound be a reliable medium of information, there must live within it horrid ogres who take great pleasure in butchering hound dogs. We imagine that within that building are dreadful politicians who even dominate the hack-saws. On the whole, 'tis a weird, spooky place.

Sartorial Sway

By
Beau Gent

We happened to overhear a conversation between two students, whom we shall call "A" and "B," over the relative merits of this column. "A," the well dressed student, argued that the column was a benefit to the campus because the majority of the students do not know how to dress. "B" answered, "I feel comfortable as I am dressed; why should I want to dress decently?" "A" was stumped, and hedged the issue. But since this is, in itself, an attack against our brainchild, we deem it necessary to defend our existence as best we can.

Primarily, we dress for the same reason that we wear clothes during the summer; it is conventional. We dress so as not to be outdone by the other fellow; a sort of competitive emulation. One doesn't dress sloppily; for the same reason that one doesn't musicalize one's soup-eating. To be sure, it is not forbidden; it is tacitly understood . . . but you would never again receive an invitation to dinner, if you did it. Nor would you again be invited if you were to appear dressed like a colored miner. Those things just aren't done; one must not necessarily dress according to custom, but one must not dress shabbily. Polonius, in Shakespeare's Hamlet, in his parting speech to Laertes says, "Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy; but not expressed in fancy; rich, not gaudy. For the apparel oft proclaims the man."

Truly, when weighed in the balance, the well-dressed man enjoys a priority over the shoddy dresser, not because he is heavier, but because the shoddily dressed man is lighter. In other words, while dress is generally a trivial subject, it is a minor asset, and lack of it is a major liability.

We take great personal pride in our campus, and we resent the comments of visitors, both from the north and south, to the effect that "one can almost see the straw protruding from their ears" . . . when they see some of the students. Some visitors even expect to see overalls on the campus. Why should we be one of the shabbiest campuses in the nation? We need not be the swankiest, but we could be at least at par.

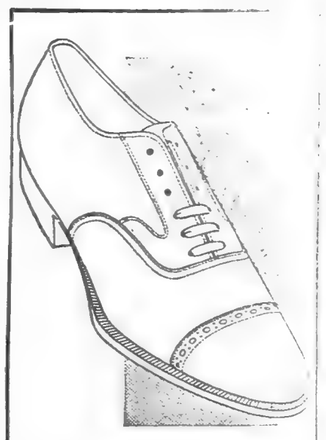
As for the changes of fashion, I can say nothing about them. You must answer that question to the best of your ability. It is either personal vanity or innate consciousness of dress—the outcome of environment—that prompts the change of shirts because of the vogue. The well-bred fellow, the fellow who has been brought up by modern parents, knows unconsciously how to dress. It is the fellow from the sticks, from the one-horse towns, that I would enlighten. And it is not wholly because of convention, but because I believe that, since man is so much uglier than woman, he must pay more attention to external embellishment, that he must dress well. As Lord Chesterfield wrote to his son "the difference between a man of sense and a fop is that the fop values himself upon his dress, and the man of sense laughs at it, at the same time he knows he must not neglect it," and "Dress is a very foolish thing, but it is a very foolish thing for a man not to be well dressed."

Dress lends an air, makes of the inconspicuous striking figures, aids the deformed, lifts the average fellow above his class, and helps the exceptional man to rise still higher.

"SOUTH SEA ROSE" IS LENORE ULRIC'S LATEST

Lenore Ulric adds one more to her long and varied list of stage and screen characterizations as the South Sea islander half-caste in "South Sea Rose," showing at the Carolina theatre today.

A resume of the roles portrayed by Miss Ulric on both stage and screen discloses an amazing variety of characterizations she has been called upon to interpret. "Kilmeny" revealed her as a gypsy; "The Heart of Paula" as a Spanish senorita; in "The Intrigue" she was a Russian girl and in "The Road to Love" she portrayed an Arabian.



LESS THAN 13% PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHERS MEN

New York, Feb. 14.—(IP)—Less than thirteen per cent of the public school teachers employed in cities throughout the United States during the year 1927-28 were men.

This is revealed in a bulletin on "Statistics of City School Systems," by Frank M. Phillips, chief of the statistical bureau of Education of the Federal Department of the Interior.

The statistics given in the book apply to all cities with a population of 2,500 and over. The total population included in the cities mentioned is 54,885,777, according to the 1920 census.

The total number of day teachers in the schools in these cities is 361,314, of which 45,413 were men and 315,901 were women.

State And Oak Ridge To Meet Matmen Tonight

University Wrestling Teams Expecting Tough Opposition From Visiting Squads.

MATCHES BEGIN 7 O'CLOCK

Stallings, Undefeated This Year, Faces Stiff Encounter; Freshmen Face Strong Oak Ridge Cadets.

The Tar Heel wrestling teams, both varsity and freshman, will afford entertainment to the large number of students and residents of Chapel Hill tonight at 7 o'clock when the varsity meets State and the Tar Babies meet Oak Ridge.

In State the varsity expects tough opposition, for the Raleighites tied Davidson 15-15, while Carolina nosed the same team 14-12 in a tough match. State will present a strong team, in spite of the fact that they lost to V. M. I. and Washington and Lee. Especially tough matches are expected when Usher of Carolina and Eason of State meet in the 115 pound class, while Captain Choplin of State will give a tough fight to his man in the 155 pound division. Coach Quinlan hasn't chosen his 155 pounder yet, but he is expected to choose either Saunders or Moore. Another real struggle is promised in the 175 pound class when Ferguson of the University takes on Croson of State College.

Carolina will present a strong lineup consisting of Usher, 115 pounds; Stallings, 125 pounds; Captain Woodard or Albright, 135 pounds; Tsumas, 145 pounds; Saunders or Moore, 155 pounds; Cowper, 165 pounds; Ferguson, 175 pounds; and Houghton, heavyweight.

Perhaps the shining light of the meet will be George Stallings, brilliant 125 pounder. Stallings is undefeated so far this year and has falls against Navy, Princeton, and Davidson, as well as a time advantage against V. P. I.

The Smithfield boy is high point scorer of the team, having scored a total of 18 points out of a possible 20 in 4 meets. Coach Quinlan thinks him a real find, and says that he is getting better every day.

The Tar Baby grapplers will take on Oak Ridge immediately before the varsity takes on State. Coach Peyton Abbott is expecting a tough meet for his protegees, and promises all spectators their money's worth. The freshman lineup includes: Parker, 115 pounds; Seligson, 125 pounds; Hassel, 135 pounds; Conklin, 145 pounds; Idol, 165 pounds; Bradley, 175 pounds; Auman, unlimited.

The freshman bouts start at 7:00, while the varsity will fight at 8:30.

COACH STEVENSON DIES

Pittsburgh, Feb. 14.—(IP)—A. W. Stevenson, 51, assistant football coach at the University of Pittsburgh, and well known among the leading mentors of the country, died here recently.

Members of his family were on their way to his bedside from California, by airplane when he died.

Stevenson played football at West Virginia University from which he was graduated. He became assistant coach at Pittsburgh in 1909, and held that position for the rest of his life.

He and members of his family went to California for the tournament of roses game New Year's day, and his wife remained in California while he returned to his home here.

Informed of his illness, Mrs. Stevenson took an airplane at Hollywood, but had not arrived here before the coach died.

Co-Ed Basketball

The Co-ed basketball team is to play the Chapel Hill high school in Bynum gymnasium Monday night at 7:30 o'clock. A large crowd is expected since this will be one of the last games of the season.

BOXERS TO FACE FLORIDA TONIGHT

Team Meets Strong Southern Aggregation In Gainesville Lacking Bantamweight.

Twelve strong, but without a bantam-weight, the Southern Conference Championship Tar Heel boxers hied Southward Thursday for meets with Florida in Gainesville tonight and South Carolina in Columbia Monday night.

Men making the trip were Harry Sheffield and Milton Cohen, feather-weights; Noah Goodridge and Jack Farris, light-weights; Captain Archie Allen and Hoke Webb, welter-weights; Obie Davis and Frank Smathers, middle-weights; John Warren and Bob Avery, light heavies; Bill Koenig and Rosenfelt, heavies; Coach Crayton Rowe and Manager Herman Schnell.

Failure of Evan Vaughn, 115-pounder, to round into shape, means that the Tar Heels will have to forfeit the bantam match in both meets, and stake their hopes of victory on winning four of the other six contests.

Florida was runner-up to the Tar Heels in the Conference Tournament last year and has mainly the same veterans in togs again this season.

Coach Rowe is planning to use substitutes wherever possible, but will probably have to use a straight line of veterans at Florida.

The first string outfit includes Sheffield, Goodridge, Captain Allen, Davis, Warren, and Koenig. Goodridge, Allen and Davis are undefeated for the season. Sheffield and Warren have tasted defeat but once apiece, both times on close decisions.

The Tar Heels, Southern champions the last two years, have been undefeated this season, having beaten Washington and Lee, V. P. I., V. M. I., Duke and Virginia.

GOLF TOURNAMENT COMMENCES TODAY

Dr. R. B. Lawson, chairman of the golf committee, announces that the first spring tournament, for both men and women, will begin at 10 o'clock this morning and continue throughout the day at the Country Club golf course. This will be a non-handicap event of 12 holes, to be played under the club rules as printed on the score card.

Members are requested to play in twosomes or threesomes, doubling up as the players desire. The whole course must be played by all entrants; cutting in after playing the number six hole will not be permitted. Members desiring to compete in the tournament are asked to sign the score card and turn it in to Sam Paulsen, the course manager.

Dr. Lawson also states that the golf committee is planning to stage a "Tombstone" tournament next Saturday if the weather permits and urges that all members of the Country Club take an active part in developing the spring tournament.

Dover high school, in a game with Contentnea at Kinston Monday night, set a high scoring record that will give other basketball teams something to shoot at for a long while. The Dover boys rang up 145 points against 15 for their opponents in a regular scheduled game. Daughtery, Dover forward, accounted for 48 points, while several other boys hit the basket for around 30 markers. Duke, with 103 points against Greensboro "Y" in a pre-holiday game this season, has the nearest approach to this record that we are able to recall off-hand.

High scoring reminds us of football as it was played in high school circles a few seasons ago. Kingsport high, of Kingsport, Tenn., made over 80 points in four consecutive games in the fall of 1926, bringing the scoring orgy to a peak with a 196-0 victory in the third game. With 30 touchdowns and 16 extra points, the Kingsport eleven averaged a touchdown every two minutes. The "Four Horsemen," as the backfield was called, taking their name from the famous Notre Dame combination, were resistless until they ran against Central high of Knoxville, who turned them back 10-7. This Central high outfit numbered among its roster of players a 274-pound fullback. Kingsport also dropped the last game of the season to Middlesboro, Ky., high school 35-14, but in spite of these two losses, ran up a total of 600 points for the season, an average of over 60 points a game

Since our mind seems to be running in the channel of high scores, we are reminded of a fellow by the name of Milas (Slim) Shoun, who used to play basketball with a small college in East Tennessee. Slim measured seven feet three without his brogans, and when he got the ball anywhere around the basket it was all up with the opposition. It was a rare thing that less than two guards were forced out of the game on personal fouls made in trying to hold Slim down. But in spite of desperate guarding, Slim accounted for nearly 300 points in the season of 1927, with an average of 14 points a game, and led Carson-Newman through an undefeated season to the Smoky Mountain Conference championship in 1927. His team was Tennessee state champion in 1926. An extremely attractive offer lured Shoun to the professional court and he went to the Chicago Bruins in 1928 . . . at $1000 a month.

The Tar Heels have failed to exhibit any great amount of scoring power on the basketball floor this season, due mainly to a lack of veteran forward material. It takes a lot of concentrated offense and speedy passing to break through the close defensive game employed by most of the college teams Carolina has met this year, and we'll have to give Coach Ashmore credit for the showing his men have made in some of the contests, notably the one with Loyola Wednesday night. The scoring rally in the last half in which the Tar Heels rolled up 14 points while the visitors remained at a standstill reflects a potentially dangerous attack latent in the usually slow method of attack used on the court. Some of the spectators at the game regretted the fact that the Tar Heels did not attempt to freeze the ball in the last minute of play when Carolina was in the lead.

"Georgia" Meets "Georgia Tech" In Stadium Today

Both Teams Will Be Fighting For Winter Football Leadership.

WILL MEET AT 2 O'CLOCK

In the game between "Georgia" and "Georgia Tech" this afternoon at Kenan stadium, the winter football leaders will be fighting to uphold their supremacy against the runners-up. "Georgia" has won both its starts by a six-point margin, winning over "Virginia" 6 to 0, and outdistancing "Tennessee" 19 to 13. The "Tech" eleven fell before "Tennessee" 6-0 in the opening game of winter practice and pushed over three touchdowns for an 18-0 victory over "Virginia" February 5 to bring its standing up to the .500 mark. The other two squads, "Tennessee" and "Virginia," hold the bottom end of the rankings with a single victory and two losses each.

Both teams will have strong backfields built around veterans. The "Yellow Jackets" will start with Wyrick at quarter, Jackson and Houston at half and Suggs at full. Houston comes up from the 1929 freshman squad and Bill Suggs, hard-driving fullback, played with the freshmen year before last but was out last season.

"Georgia" will be handicapped by the loss of Henry House, hefty halfback, who broke his arm in scrimmage Thursday, and will not be out again until practice is resumed next fall. Coach Collins intimated that he may use Yank Spaulding who, although he has finished his varsity career, is eligible for action in the practice games. Landis,

FROSH BOXERS TO OPPOSE OAK RIDGE IN TIN CAN TODAY

With the varsity in the land of sunshine, the Tar Heel freshman boxers will take on Oak Ridge this afternoon at 4:30 in the Tin Can. The cadet team is composed of a number of veterans, and are expected to give the Tar Babies some tough opposition.

The Tar Babies will present a strong lineup with Levinson in the 125 pound division; Lumpkin, 135; Jackson, 145; Patterson, 165; Landis, 175, and Miller in the unlimited division.

The 125 pound class is expected to be well taken care of by Martin Levinson, hard-hitting little fighter from Waterbury, Connecticut, while the rest of the lineup is strong except for the 115 pound class in which Carolina will not enter a man.

The entire squad is in good condition except Landis, who has been suffering for the past week with a severe cold. However, as he will be fighting against his old teammates he is expected to put out in spite of his cold.

A large number of spectators is expected to be present.

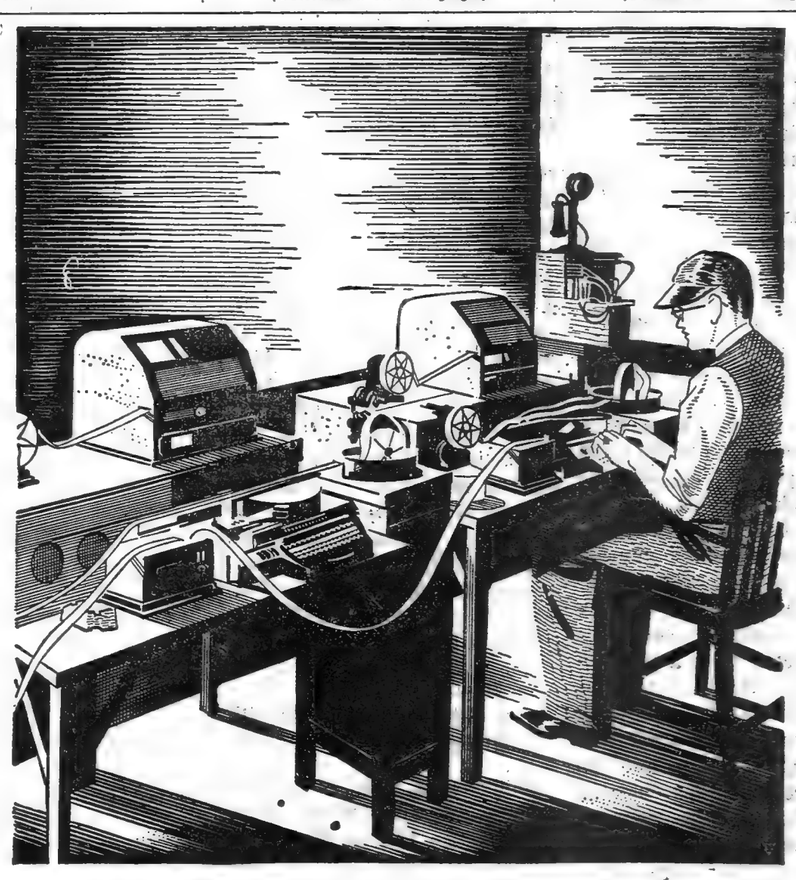
FROSH GET 27-19 WIN OVER G. M. A.

Hines Leads Tar Babies With Eight Points; Connor Stars On Defense.



The Tar Babies won an easy victory over G. M. A. last night to the tune of 27-19. Both teams got off to a slow start and only 2 points were scored by Carolina in the first quarter. Hines led the Tar Heel scorers with 8 points, while Clark was high-point man for the visitors.

The first quarter saw very little action on the part of either team, as both passed inaccurately. Hines managed to push one into the basket for the first tally of the game. Both quintets presented an impregnable defense and neither showed scoring ability in this period.

Connor opened the second period with a neat crip and Hines followed with a long looper from behind the foul line, making the score 6-0 for Carolina. Clark sank a long one from mid-floor for the only Georgia score in this period. Markham went in for the Tar Babies and added two points. The locals chalked up 18 points in this quarter and were leading 20-2 at the half.

The second string started the third period and the Cadets began to register. Clark and Johnson got one each and Hackney made both of his foul shots good. Hamlet annexed a field goal for the Tar Babies and Brown scored on a free throw. Coach Enright sent Beale and Connor in, but G. M. A. continued to run up their total with Johnson adding a field goal and Gantt immediately followed with a nice crip. Guarding was close

Typing by wire—an adventure in communication

The telephone typewriter, a new Bell System service, has commercial possibilities as yet barely realized.

For example, a business house can typewrite a message over telephone wires, and this is retyped instantaneously and simultaneously in any number of branch offices. The advantage is obvious — in knitting together far-flung organizations and in quickening the pace of business.

Here is still another extension of telephone service which has already proved its value. The telephone typewriter promises even greater things as industry discovers new uses for this instrument of convenient communication.

Education Faculty To Attend Meeting In Winston-Salem

The regular meeting of the North Carolina Association of College Teachers of Education, which will be held tonight at Winston-Salem in the Richard J. Reynolds high school, will be attended by several members of the staff of the University school of education.

The program of the association will endeavor to describe the relationship of Salem College and the Winston-Salem city public schools for the purpose of teacher training. Most of the program, which will include seven 5-minute talks by members of the faculties of Salem College and Winston-Salem city public schools, will be taken up with the practice teaching phase of this work. For out-of-city members attending the meeting, opportunities of seeing Salem College and its environs will be provided. Immediately before the meeting of the association dinner will be served in the high school cafeteria.

The members of the University school of education who are to attend the meeting are as follows: A. M. Jordan, M. R. Trabue, C. E. Preston, Hugo Giduz and Miss Sallie Marks of the faculty, and Messrs. Michie and Draper, graduate students of the school.

Radio Field Offers Many Opportunities

(By Clyde Deitz)

"Limitless in opportunity, radio is the field most sparsely settled and fullest of promise that calls to young America," according to statements carried in the daily press by W. D. Terrell, chief of the radio division of the department of commerce.

Nor did Mr. Terrell have reference to the semi-theatrical profession of radio entertaining, the large returns of which is common knowledge. It is the technical side of the industry that is making its appeal.

Newly arisen, the radio industry is far ahead of the supply of trained men in the field and, in view of its widening possibilities, will likely remain so for some time. "Consequently," according to Mr. Terrell, "it is forced to accept all men who enter, and even then positions with salaries surpassing $5,000 go wanting. Radio holds out to the young man both the offer of rich rewards and the assurance of being in demand."

In the industry the government offers a wide range of opportunity but is chiefly in need in the inspection services. The radio inspector is in a position offering enjoyment as well as promise. The work consists in keeping constant check on broadcasting stations and on radio devices on ships entering American ports. It provides excellent opportunity to travel, besides engaging the inspector in interesting work that keeps him abreast of each advance in the industry.

The widest phase of the field is commercial operating. At present there are about 7,000 licensed commercial operators, the demand for which is steadily increasing as new radio telegraph services are opened. About 2,500 operators are employed by American ships in work promising both enjoyment and reward.

Besides these more common openings in the field, the actual industry of design and manufacturing offers untold opportunity to the engineer and highly trained expert. Adding to all this the as yet unknown possibilities in television and visual broadcasting, a probable limit cannot be placed to the expansion of the field.

Tells of C. M. T. C.

According to an announcement by Major General Frank R. McCoy, commanding the Fourth Corps Area, applications to the total of 4400 for attending C. M. T. Camps next summer will be received beginning Saturday, March 1. The camps this year are to be located at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. (Cavalry), Fort Severen, Ga. (Infantry), Fort McClellan, Ala. (Infantry), Fort Bragg, N. C. (Field Artillery), Fort Moultrie, S. C. (Infantry), Fort Barrancas, Fla. (Coast Artillery), and Camp Beauregard, La. (Infantry).

Last year 8989 young men in the southeast applied, but funds were available for only 4400. Louisiana filled it's quota in one day; Florida filled it's in five. All eight states in the Fourth Corps Area had full quotas a month or more before the camps opened, and this Corps Area led all the others in the country. Early application is essential to an appointment.

Applications are accepted from young men of good character between the ages of 17 and 24, for the Basic course. Good moral character, and the successful passing of the required physical examination, are the only other necessary qualifications. Attendance at one of the camps carries with it no obligation of future military service, although those who have attended, later drafted into the service, stand a better chance of advancement. Citizenship, Self-reliance, Initiative, Good-fellowship, and the abilty to work and play hard are particularly important in the camp curriculums. Moral and religious influence at the camps are at high standards.

All necessary expenses of transportation, food, clothing, laundry, medical attention, and camp facilities are furnished by the government. This offer is unequalled by any government at any time, and would amount to the cost of several hundred dollars for each individual if attempted by private enterprise.

Applicants from the twelve western counties of North Carolina are sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. Those from the rest of the state go to Fort Bragg. Application may be made at the office of any regular army officer, state civilian aide or county representative. Information may be obtained from the C. M. T. C. office, headquarters fourth corps area, Oakland City Station, Atlanta, Ga., or from the district chief of the state. The district chief of North Carolina may be addressed: Colonel James M. Little, 428 R. J. Reynolds Bldg., Winston-Salem, N. C. The civilian aide of North Carolina is Albert L. Cox, whose office is in Raleigh.

Washington, Feb. 14.—(IP)—Americans smoked 119,038,841,560 cigarettes in 1929, or 13,000,000,000 more than in 1928, the Internal Revenue Bureau reported here.

This was more than 1,000 for every man, woman and child in the country. Smoking among women largely caused the increase, officials said. Americans also smoked 6,551,000,000 cigars and 420,000,000 little cigars in 1929, the report showed.

Frazier and Morrisey also are candidates for the vacant halfback berth. Captain-elect Nash will probably be shifted to half in case a fullback goes in for House. Shorty Branch will hold down the quarterback job, a task of which he is entirely capable, while Croom, freshman luminary, will round out the backfield quartet.

Such linemen as Blackwood, Fysal, Collins, Parsley, Gilbreath and Brown give promise of making it hard for the backs who intend to try out the defensive strength of the forward walls in today's scrap. These men are all veterans and are assisted in their job of breaking up offensive plays by a score of men just as husky and aggressive, but with less varsity experience behind them. Both "Georgia" and "Georgia Tech" can count among their squads more veterans than either of the other two practice outfits, and on paper one looks just as good as the other. Past performances put Shorty Branch and his cohorts a little in front of the "Yellow Jackets," but the loss of House to "Georgia" brings the teams to equal terms and the outcome of today's tilt will depend largely on the breaks of the game.

The probable lineups are:

"Georgia"		"Georgia Tech"
Reid	L. E.	Nichols
Smith	L. T.	Sharkey
Zovesus	L. G.	Blackwood
Gilbreath	C.	Allen
Petrie	R. G.	Fysal

STUDENTS INSPECT DANVILLE PLANTS

As the first of a series of trips to be made to industrial plants during this quarter, members of Dr. G. T. Schwenning's class in industrial management yesterday visited the Riverside and Dan River Cotton Mills at Danville.

The members of the class spent the entire day at this plant, studying conditions in the various departments of it and obtaining information for papers which will be written when the series of visits has been completed.

The plant visited Friday is the one which obtained publicity recently when wages were lowered 10 per cent in all departments with the permission of the employees. The mill has had a system of industrial democracy operating for over 10 years.

This mill has a reputation for being one of those operated on principles of scientific management, and the organization points with pride to the fact that over 90 per cent of the weavers in the mill own their homes and that over 50 per cent of the entire group of employees, which numbers over 550, own their own homes.

During the remainder of the year the group will visit the Liggett-Myers tobacco factory in Durham, the White Furniture Company in Mebane, the Spencer shops of the Southern Railway, the Thrift mill of the Kendall Company at Paw Creek near Charlotte, and the Vick Chemical Company at Greensboro.

Washington, Feb. 14.—(IP) Forty crippled children, attending classes at the Wieghtman School for Cripples here, were carried or assisted to safety recently after a fire was discovered in the building.

Glee Club Competes In Intercollegiate Meet At Carnegie Hall March 8

Will Represent South Atlantic District For National Honors.

SECOND TIME IN 4 YEARS

Dyer Has Installed New Method Of Voice Training Since His Arrival Here Last September; Has Already Proven Itself.

The University glee club will represent the South Atlantic district in the National Intercollegiate Glee Club Contest to be held March 8, at Carnegie hall, New York City.

This is the second year that the club has entered this manner of competition. The first was several years ago at which time the club was invited to New York not because it was a district winner but because it was the only regularly organized club of the section.

Since the regular association was formed, Furman University has sent its glee club to New York twice and Duke University, once. The present association gives way this year to the new South Atlantic district organization, of which Professor H. S. Dyer was elected president.

It is expected that during the next three years the national council will become affiliated with one of the educational foundations, in which case contests can be amply financed, and the winning clubs will be guaranteed 100% for their trips to the national contests.

This new development will be most advantageous to competing schools, as can be seen from the following facts: California made its trips last year at the expense of more than $10,000 half of which was financed by the University and the other half by the club's earnings. The annual expense for the winner of the Missouri valley contest amounts to $3,000.

After this year the national council will probably move from New York to the middle west. The South Atlantic committee is not anxious to see this done until the provisions for funds by the foundation is established.

The national council was founded by Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Pickernell of New York, who have maintained the organization privately at their own expense.

Mr. Dyer, who has been a close observer of glee club contests makes the following comments:

"There are two distinct types of schools represented in the national contest each year. The one type consists of universities and colleges maintaining departments of music which provide excellent opportunity for voice development, and in which, membership to the glee club represents the height of vocal attainment. Yale, Harvard, Dartmouth, Wesleyan, and others, compose this group. Clubs from these schools have been doing intrinsic work for years and years. Men who make their club are all of outstanding vocal talent and have received years of vocal training.

"The second type is that embracing the majority of clubs. It consists of schools maintaining men's glee clubs as an extra curricula activity, for the development in a small way, of musi-

Staff Meeting

There will be the regular meeting of the entire Tar Heel staff tonight at 7 o'clock in the offices. All reporters, assistant editors, and city editors must attend. Four Carolina passes will be awarded at this time and work for the remainder of the quarter will be outlined.

TAYLOR SOCIETY TO HEAR STRONG

Russian Five-Year Economic Plan Will Be Discussed At Tuesday Meeting Of Commerce Group.

The Russian five year economic plan under which every phase of production, distribution, and consumption in Russia is being controlled by a central commission will be the topic of a paper to be presented by Dr. E. D. Strong before the University branch of the Taylor Society at its next meeting Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock in Gerrard hall.

Dr. Strong, who spent several months in Russia during the summer of 1928, is well fitted to present a discussion of this subject, for while in Russia he visited the central offices of the Gosplan, the name of both the commission and the plan which it is operating, and talked with leaders of the commission charged with carrying out the program.

The speaker states that he will attempt to show the scope of the plan, the way in which it works, what it has done, and what it hopes to accomplish. The Gosplan provides for complete economic control in the hands of a central commission which plans and supervises all production, distribution, and consumption in Russia, has been in operation since the fall of 1928.

Dr. Strong is the fourth of a series of six faculty speakers who are delivering addresses before the University student branch of the Taylor Society on subjects related to business management.

Brooks To Address United Church Forum

Professor L. M. Brooks of the sociology department will give answer to a problem foremost in the minds of college youth when he speaks to the Young People's Forum of the United Church Sunday evening on the whole matter of choosing a life partner. Professor Brooks is an authority in his field of sociology and is especially interested in the family and martial relations.

For the past several weeks the Young People's Forum has devoted its Sunday evening meetings to discussions of sex hygiene and associated problems. The talk by Professor Brooks will be the seventh of this series and promises to be instructive and hold appeal for the serious minded student.

Meetings of the group start promptly at 7:00 p. m. and are open to anyone interested. Open forum follows the speaker's discussion and offers a rare opportunity to present personal problems.

U. N. C. RELEASES PLANS FOR 1930 SUMMER SCHOOL

Session To Open June 12, And Extends To August Twenty-Ninth.

TWO SIX-WEEK SESSIONS

Plans for the 1930 Summer School at the University of North Carolina were announced today in a bulletin issued from the office of Director N. W. Walker.

The session will open on Thursday, June 12, and continue for 12 weeks, to August 29. There will be two terms of 6 weeks each. Registration will take place on the opening day, June 12.

The Summer School will be organized under three general divisions—graduate, college, and elementary. Under the college division courses will be offered in the schools of liberal arts, education, commerce, applied science, and public welfare. The graduate and elementary departments will offer work to teachers seeking higher certification or degrees.

The bulletin as issued from the director's office contains a list of courses offered and virtually all the information needed by prospective students.

A complete announcement, however, will be published in April, containing a list of instructors and special features to be offered.

Indications point to a successful summer session. Many widely known scholars and teachers will offer courses as visiting professors, and improvements are being made in many directions. It is expected that the enrollment this summer will exceed that of last summer, which was 2,536.

The officials for the summer school are President H. W. Chase of the University, N. W. Walker, director, and I. C. Griffin, executive secretary.

Miss Chase Here

Miss Priscilla Chase, director of Religious Education in the Congregational Church in the Carolinas, will speak at the Sunday morning service of the United Church (Christian Congregational) at 11:00 a. m.

Episcopal Tea

The regular Sunday afternoon tea will be held at the Episcopal Parish House this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Over 400 Prominent North Carolina Citizens Sign Mr. Graham's Statement

Embodies Principles Evolved Out Of Historical Processes.

CONTAINS FOUR DIVISIONS

Statement Is No Attempt To Offer A Solution To Economic Problems, But Is Simply A Group Of Principles Stated For What They Are Worth.

Signed by over 400 prominent citizens of the state, a statement embodying principles deposited by the currents of history, which may be applied to North Carolina's industrial problems, was released last night by an informal committee composed of Dr. W. L. Poteat (president emeritus of Wake Forest College), Dr. Elbert Russell (dean of the Duke University school of religion), Miss Gertrude Weil (president of the North Carolina League of Women Voters), Frank Graham, Dr. Carl Taylor (dean of the North Carolina State College graduate school), W. C. Jackson (vice-president of North Carolina College for Women), Miss Clara Cox (state official of the Y. W. C. A.), W. T. Polk (Warrenton lawyer), Dr. E. W. Knight, and A. Wilson Hobbs, who is acting treasurer of the committee.

The statement was written by Mr. Frank Graham. Suggestions had been made to him at different times by members of the North Carolina Conference for Social Service and other citizens that he write some such statement as President of the Conference. However, he wrote it upon his own responsibility as a citizen of the State without connection with any organization.

The statement, according to the author, is no attempt to offer a panacea or even a solution to the problems incident to the industrialization of a rural state, but is simply a body of principles deposited by the currents of history and stated here for what they are worth. The statement is merely an integration of various ideas, found partly here and partly there, in such sources as the Constitutions of the United States and of North Carolina; the national platforms of the Democratic and Republican parties; the utterances of Presidents Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding and Hoover and Mr. Charles E. Hughes; the two Industrial Conferences of President Wilson; A Referendum of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce; the New York Times Interview of Governor Gardner; the enlightened and voluntary practices of many North Carolina manufacturers in a difficult economic situation; the resolutions of the State Baptist Convention of North Carolina; the two North Carolina Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; the state convention of the Christian Church; the Diocese of Sewanee; the State League of Women Voters; the State Federation of Women's Clubs, and so on. These ideas have been substantially and variously expressed in addresses and talks by Dr. W. L. Poteat, Dr. Elbert Russell, Dr. Carl Taylor, and Mr. Graham.

These principles, according to the announcement, are simply the traditional currency of accepted ideas and practices which have historically evolved out of

Unique Drama Is Enacted As Playmakers Depart On Tour; Wigs And Hairpins Scattered

(By Joe Jones)

A big motor bus, with its happy cargo of fifteen Carolina playmakers, left here day before yesterday for its twenty-seventh tour. A great deal of significance may be attached to this event. The cities included in the itinerary are Albemarle, Wilmington and Rocky Mount in North Carolina; Spartanburg, Greenville and Allendale in South Carolina; and Atlanta, Columbus, Macon and Augusta in Georgia. Happy as will be these communities to welcome the Playmakers again to their midst, happier will be the gay troupe which returns with a repertory destined to call forth from its audiences both laughter and tears; for it is the forte of the Carolina Playmakers that they deal in human emotions.

The preparations for the departure of the players was a little drama in itself. Who would not like to have seen various members of the troupe struggling across the campus with a suitcase in one hand and textbooks grasped in the other? The suitcase deposited at the rear of of the little theatre, the actor-student hurries off to catch a 9:30 class.

Shortly a mammoth chartered bus lumbers up to the stage entrance. The stage hands, who have assembled the scenery and equipment, stick their heads out of the door and direct the driver to "back up." Nonchalantly the driver reverses the Pullman-like car and backs it up to the door. Several hours are required for loading the many suitcases in the tonneau of the bus, and arranging and securing the wings, furniture, and other miscellaneous equipment on top.

One of the inevitable incidents of packing now occurs. A girl actor comes dashing up with a handful of hairpins and a special box of lipstick and rouge which she failed to put in her suitcase. At her request the desired bag is produced, not without some labor. The charming girl, her black hair waving in the wind, fingers with the catch. Suddenly, and apparently much to her surprise, the catch snaps open, and to the inquisitive group of students standing about are revealed certain articles of clothing, the actress' costume, some shoes, her tooth brush, and much to the dismay of all, a wig! In stooping to place the packages in the bag the top falls from the hairpin box and myriads of the little wire hair-tamers scatter to the ground. Amusement and sympathy are visible on the faces of the onlookers. Many wonder if the co-ed is muttering Sunday school words as she and the young man accompanying her stoop down, heads together, and pursue the tedious task of recovering the ill-fated hairpins.

With an audible sigh of relief the task is completed, the articles are hurriedly placed in the open bag, stray bits of clothing are tucked in, and the lid is down again. As the young couple bid each other good-bye each promises not to forget the address of the other.

Students pause in passing to and from classes to witness the interesting procedure of loading the big bus. Instructors going to lunch exchange greetings with Associate Director Hubert Heffner and Frederick H. Koch, moving spirits of the Carolina Playmakers. Everything is in a bustle now. Students are pouring out of classroom buildings, stage hands are exhausted,

North Carolina Club To Hear Mrs. Swift

Mrs. Bulus Bagby Swift, chairman of the child welfare committee of the North Carolina League of Women Voters, will talk here Monday evening to the North Carolina Club on "The North Carolina Child in Industry." The lecture is to begin at 7:30 o'clock in 103 Bingham hall.

It is the opinion of Mrs. Swift that comparatively little is actually known of the child labor situation in this state. However, she believes that she has sufficient evidence to warrant a thorough investigation of the needs and problems of child employment. Her talk here Monday will be devoted to a discussion of plans for bettering the lot of mill children. Officials have invited the public to attend.

USEFULNESS OF Y. M. C. A. TO BE DISCUSSED BY PHI

Officials of the Phi Assembly announced last night that the bill to be discussed at the regular weekly meeting of the assembly in New East Tuesday night is "Resolved, that the University Y. M. C. A. is not performing its necessary functions on this campus."

DR. PONTE TALKS TO SPANISH CLUB

Stresses Importance Of Spanish Language In American Commercial Life.

Dr. Jose Rafael Martinez Ponte was the principal speaker at the regular monthly meeting of the Spanish club held in the Episcopal parish house Friday evening. His talk concerned chiefly a discussion of South America and of the importance of the Spanish language in American commercial life.

A native of Venezuela, Dr. Martinez Ponte received his doctor's degree at the University of Caracas and is at present studying sanitary engineering under the Rockefeller Foundation. Hence from his own knowledge the speaker was able to give an interesting account of several South American countries and to touch upon the commercial importance of English and Spanish on the two American continents. While his talk was not of a literary nature, it was of practical interest in that it pointed out the relationship between the two and the importance of Spanish as a North American and English as a South American language study.

A Statement Of Potentially Vital Import

Dozens of newspapers throughout the Southeast carry front page stories this morning concerning a statement which may have far-reaching consequences in alleviation of the state's industrial crisis. Prepared by Professor Frank Graham, of the North Carolina Conference for Social Service and the University history department, and signed by approximately 400 of North Carolina's most prominent men and women, the statement, according to the author, is "no attempt to offer a panacea or even a solution to the problems incident to the industrialization of a rural state, but is simply a body of principles deposited by the currents of history and stated here for what they are worth."

The statement contains four principles, "evolved out of historic movements," which stand for our guidance "in our present situation when the old struggle for self-government has advanced from the religious and political to include the industrial life." Stated simply, these four principles are equal rights of organization and collective bargaining; the constitutional and legal rights of person and property and lawful freedom of speech and assembly for all persons, without regard to birthplace, race, ownership or labor status, unionism or non-unionism, religion, politics, or economic views; a nation-wide nonpartisan economic and social survey and analysis of the textile industry, not by way of attack, but by way of expert study by those most competent; social adjustment to industrial change, such as reduction of the legal sixty-hour week and gradual abolition of night work for women and young people.

Simplicity seems to be the keynote of Mr. Graham's statement. He outlines his four principles clearly and lucidly; they are essentially sound, commonsense doctrines. Writing not from the standpoint of a textile expert, propounding technical or legislative remedies for the present situation, but as a student of history, Mr. Graham has formulated a simple statement of a few definite principles which have developed through centuries of industrial and intellectual expansion, and presented them for what they are worth. Such a statement was desperately needed; Mr. Graham evidently realized the need and recognized the responsibility devolving upon him as a citizen and a student of history. Unlike thousands of his fellows who were confronted with an equal responsibility, he had the mental alertness to recognize his duty and the courage and energy to carry it out.

The long list of prominent men and women, representing almost every profession, occupation, and condition of life, who signed the statement, indicates that it has the backing necessary for material results. If its four principles are adhered to in the industrial conflict which the state is now facing, hysteria will be replaced by calm sanity and narrow prejudice by open-minded reasoning. Millions of dollars, hundreds of lives, and years of bitter controversy and bloodshed may be saved through the results obtained from the mild-appearing, inoffensive but potentially vitally important statement prepared by Mr. Graham.

Faculty-Student Smokers Quarterly

A year ago Walter Spearman editorialized on the breach between the student body and the faculty. Other writers for the Tar Heel have lamented the fact that the student and instructor have little contact. Now comes Mr. Bob House, who in an address before the sophomore class has expressed a desire on the part of some of the faculty that the two units of the University be brought closer together.

The most valuable service that a university can do for an individual is to stimulate him to think—to have ideas of his own. It is quite universally agreed that it really doesn't matter whether a graduate remembers the formula for the circumference of a circle, whether there are gerunds in the Greek language, that chismografia means gossip in Spanish, or what a chain-reflex is. A professor is conceited who believes that he is able in fifty-three minutes a day for three months to change his subjects to such a great extent that they will throw overboard habits of thinking which they have carried with them for eighteen or twenty years. There are professors who wish to aid young men and women mould their minds, but they are not the fifty-three minutes a day professors.

We have never had a prof whom we felt has a genuine contempt for the undergraduate mind, but we have often heard of such men on the faculty, who are reputed to be hostile to undergraduates and their problems. It is apparent, however, that an astounding proportion of this and other faculties are interested primarily in such humanitarian projects as a comparison of the number of words in the average sentences of Emerson, Carlyle, Kant, and Johnson, or the use of the genitive case in Goethe's Faust. Too many professors spend their time attending conventions, committee meetings, lecturing, and in work far from the field that requires their undivided attention.

Until the rise of the notorious Yellow Journal, which paper and its editors felt no compunction about magnifying and festering whatever blemishes appeared in professional character "here abouts," the homes of the faculty were open to all students. It is regretable that the heroic cult of "I will not be a booter" on the one hand and the "We must be dignified and professorial" club on the other are so diametrically opposed. The fact that the University has doubled its enrollment since the custom of "open house" was discontinued does not change the situation. If any thing has changed it has been a change on the part of the instructors who believe that their attitude should be one of frigid dignity in place of convival friendship.

We have enough faith in the student body here to assert that were the homes of the faculty reopened to student visitors, whether formally on certain days of the week or informally, that in the future there would be no repetition of the betrayals which some frantic journalists have perpetrated in the past. It is safe to predict that were this idea of salons, or better still the idea of informal visiting, recommenced the value of instruction would increase two-fold.

It is with the hope that the two integral parts of the University may be drawn closer together that we here offer the idea that once each quarter there should be a "smoker" for the entire student body and the whole faculty in some such place as the Carolina Inn, the expenses being equally shared by class dues of the four undergraduate classes and the University administration. Perhaps then we should all discover that, faculty man or student, we are all quite interesting, human, and possess some innate intelligence.

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

Interesting sidelights on Look Homeward, Angel by Thomas Wolfe, an alumnus of this literary University, are contained in F. P. A.'s column in the New York World. An Asheville correspondent wrote to F. P. A. and told him a few of the reasons why the book is not so popular in one section of this state.

"There are remarkable pages of description, of persons and places, in the book," says F. P. A. "It seems—probably everybody knows it, though it was news to us—that Altamont, the scene of the book is Asheville, N. C. Ever since the book was published the townspeople, according to a present townsperson, are raucous in their condemnation of the book and its author."

Chief among the reasons is the lack of care on the part of Mr. Wolfe to disguise the disreputable people he describes, or the names of places. Thus College Street is "Academy Street," Raleigh is "Sidney," and Chapel Hill, of all places, is "Pulpit Hill." Somehow that last does not sound so well.

For the first time in many, many years—since his graduation from the University, in fact—Mr. Wolfe did not return to his home during the Christmas season this year. And now it is rumored that he will be in Asheville in a few weeks. We are thinking of ordering a suit of armored clothes from our tailor in Chicago and going up to Asheville to get a good view of what happens.

All of which calls to mind the fact that a literary career is not all it is cracked up to be in some cases. We once thought of writing the Great American Novel or something, but now it seems best to return to the job which has always been nearest our heart, and for which we are best qualified—that of tester in a mattress factory.

This department hereby announces that it will make no more veiled allusions. The comebacks from some quarters have been unveiled recently, and they were potent. We still believe, however, that people who live in small houses shouldn't throw bricks—they might need 'em to build an addition for aforesaid houses.

If necessary, you may blame this on the weather:

LINES TO A WORNOUT PROF

There's hope for the man
As he sits at his desk
And drones of his lit
Like a weary burlesque—
There is hope for the man,
Though he's now pretty old,
And his notes have grown
musty,
And his facts have grown cold;
Yes, there's hope for the prof
As he sits with his stare,
For on top of his head
He still has some hair.

Readers' Opinions

IN ANSWER TO BEAU GENT'S COMMENTS OF FEBRUARY 15

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Beau Gent, in the February 15 issue of the Tar Heel, makes this statement: "—I believe that, since man is so much uglier than woman, he must pay more attention to external embellishment, that he must dress well." Mr. Gent, I agree with you perfectly in all that you said in this article, with the exception of one thing. You gave the impression that man, through careful attention to his dress, can compete with women in good-looks. I grant you that some of the more handsome males on the campus might be able to do this in a measure; but the women do not depend solely upon their natural fairness for their beauty. What with all the paint, powder, and such lavish attention that they bestow upon their clothes, they make it much harder for the more ugly sex to come up to their standards. Now I give a reasonable amount of time to keeping myself well-groomed—that is, keeping a crease in my pants, changing my shirt before the dirty streak around the collar shows through, etc. But I must confess that I feel very discouraged when I try to make myself appear as handsome, for all my efforts, as the women's extreme beauty, with their artificial resources which I cannot invade. You forget that we are all not as well endowed by Nature as are Beau Gent and Elwin Dungan, and some of the other more handsome fellows. All they have to do is press their clothes, change their shirts, and wear a nice-looking tie, and they excite the envy of the coeds. Why not make some suggestion whereby I, who cannot depend upon my looks as they do, for my fortune, might improve them?

Unique Drama Enacted As Playmakers Depart

and the bus driver is hot and tired from working. He does not protest, but it is evident that he wishes to be off. By degrees the entire troupe has clustered about the waiting bus. As finishing touches, a half-dozen Playmaker posters are affixed to the bus windows or stuck in conspicuous positions among the baggage.

Every one sees to it that his bag is aboard. Director Koch confers with the bus company official, intermittently drawing long puffs from his pipe. Mr. Heffner makes sure that all members of the party are present. The driver manages to tuck the entire company into their seats. The bus snorts and sputters, swings into motion, and the Carolina Playmakers are off on their twenty-seventh tour with a rare treasure of comedy and tragedy for their waiting audiences.

It is a far cry from the embryonic dramatic productions of ancient India, and the Dionysiac revels of Greece, to the Carolina Playmakers of today, but who can deny that a common tie exists between them? Throughout the ages man has endeavored to act out that which he feels within. In like manner, in interpreting for the public the folk-ways of our people, the Playmakers are doing precisely this very thing; acting out that which they feel very deeply. The merry troubadours of the Middle Ages, as well as the players summoned by Hamlet to the palace in Denmark, were of this strain.

In ancient times, notably with the Greeks, these festivities partook of a religious nature. Similarly, as recorded in the Old Testament, such spontaneous exaltations were indulged in. We remember that Miriam "took a timbrel in her hand, and all the women went out after her with timbrels and dances." Heathen war dances, of today, chanting rude defiance with savage gestures, are primitive expressions of these same human emotions. These heathen races are passing through the same stage of civilization traversed by ourselves hundreds and by the Hebrews, Greeks, and Indians thousands of years ago.

The Carolina Playmakers do not fall far short of representing the acme of development achieved by the American stage. Their role is to bring the art of the theatre closer to the American people through the medium of their productions, and to afford a greater number of persons opportunity to take an active part in playwriting and acting. In addition their peculiar contribution is to immortalize a cross section of the southern people on the stage and in literature, and the Playmaker Theatre, birthplace and home of the Carolina Playmakers, is the first state-owned theatre in America to be devoted to the making of its own drama.

White Phantoms Hold Duke To 37 - 36 Score

Carolina Quint Displays New Form To Upset Dope In Duke Gym; Neiman Is High Scorer

Duke Rallies To Lead At Half By 18 to 17 Margin.

PUNY HARPER IS INJURED

Neiman And Edwards Forced Out Of Game During Second Half Because Of Fouls; Over-Eagerness Of Players Accounted For 36 Fouls.

The Carolina quint held the strong Duke outfit to a meager 37-36 win in the Duke gym last night by displaying a complete reversal of form from the last Blue Devil meeting. The Tar Heels matched the Duke score in the second half, but lost the first period by a bare one-point margin, 18-17. Dave Neiman, flashy Tar Heel, was the high scorer of the game with 17 points, while Councillor of Duke was his nearest rival with 9 points to his credit.

Neiman's foul shot opened the scoring of the game, and started a Carolina rally which was only headed after fifteen minutes of the first half had gone. In the last minute of play in the first period Councillor sank a long shot to place Duke in the lead by the one point which proved the margin of victory.

Puny Harper, giant Tar Heel center, was injured in the first ten minutes of play, and Edwards, his substitute, was retired from the game in the latter part of the second half because of fouls. Neiman was also forced out of the game in the closing minutes because of excessive fouling. The strictness of Referee Pat Crawford of Davidson and the over-eagerness of the players accounted for 36 fouls during the evening. Both Duke and Carolina were credited with 12 points by the free throw route.

With seven minutes left to play Councillor, Duke high scorer, forced the Blue Devils into the lead 32-30 by a shot from almost mid-floor. Neiman then tied the score, but the Blue Devils immediately forced their total to 37 by three foul shots and a goal. Billy Brown tallied to carry the Tar Heels' total to 34, and with less than a half-minute to play Marpet raised the Tar Heel score to 36.

The basketball game to be played at Bynum gym between the co-eds and Chapel Hill high school as announced in the Tar Heel yesterday has been called off, according to Coach Farris, but two other games will be played by the co-eds this week. They meet Leaksville high Wednesday at Leaksville and Rocky Mount high Thursday night at Rocky Mount.

Dr. Aubert, French professor, now at Harvard University, has declared that America, if she only knew it, is extremely rich in art.

DUKE FROSH BEAT TAR BABIES 35-23

Connor, Hill, And Robert Shaw Star For Carolina.

Duke University's flying Baby Devils snowed the Tar Babies under with a 35-23 defeat last night. The Devils scored first on field goals by Colley and Horne. Connor followed with a pretty shot from the floor, but the freshmen were unable to stop Duke. The first half ended 13-8 with the Devils leading.

Colley and Robertshaw were outstanding for Duke. Connor, Tar Baby guard, shared scoring honors with Hill and Robertshaw, each having nine points to his credit. Dunn, forward, and Henry, guard, both played good games.

SPORT RAMBLES

Roulhac Hamilton

From the standpoint of games won, last week can not be called a howling success, but it did show that the basketball situation around here is not entirely hopeless. This fact was amply demonstrated in the Loyola game. Hopelessly outclassed in the first half and a good part of the second, the Tar Heels started a drive that overcame an eleven point lead and left them three points ahead of their opponents. And during the entire duration of that drive the Loyola team was held scoreless. If Carolina can do this to one of the best teams in the west, there is no reason that she can't do it against others.

Mention of the Loyola team inspires us to speak a few words in praise of Chuck Murphy, captain and center of the Chicago outfit. He was selected as All-Western center last year and if his play against Carolina and Duke is any indication of his ability he is headed for this honor again. We have never seen a better center and we don't see how a center can be much better. His entire team plays around him and Murphy seemed always to be just where he belonged. He plays well and confidently and is always calm and collected. Although he scored only nine points against Carolina he was largely responsible for their victory. Against Duke he broke loose and dropped eight field goals and three fouls for a total of nineteen points. If his team had been able to give him the support that they gave in the Carolina game it would have been a sad night for Duke.

A stranger visiting the Tin Can any afternoon would probably depart with a suspicion that Carolina is a training school for athletes. He sees games going on four basketball courts. In one corner he sees wrestlers or contortionists struggling and in the opposite one are a large number of boxers. At the far end of the building golfers are driving their little white balls into a large cage and the fourth corner is filled with a miscellany ranging from Noah Goodridge's "pre-scouts" to Coach Ashemore's battery candidates indulging in a little early limbering up. Directly in front of the door is a jumping pit and as he stands there a group of runners speed by him. Leaving the building he is jostled by a group of football players headed for the stadium for practice.

The preceding paragraph means something—that the University is making an effort to care for the physical development of its student body. But has it done enough? Does the Tin Can serve the entire student body? We feel that the answer to both these questions is no and that the only way to change that answer to yes is to build a new gymnasium. And put a swimming pool in it. The present pool can not be used most of the year and when it can it is so crowded that swimming is out of the question. There are boys in this university who would rather swim than do anything else. The pool would fill a great need for them. And, leaving aside the question of the pool, a properly equipped gym would offer a great many opportunities for proper exercise that can not be possibly obtained elsewhere.

'Georgia' Romps Over 'Georgia Tech' 13-0 In Yesterday's Game

Branch's Excellent Ball-Carrying Is Feature Of Game.

A steady downfall of rain and a heavy, charging "Georgia Tech" line failed to stop Shorty Branch and his cohorts, and the "Georgia" eleven chalked up a 13 to 0 win over "Tech" in Kenan stadium yesterday afternoon.

The first score came in the second period after Davis, "Georgia" end, recovered Houston's fumble on the 30-yard line. Branch tried a pass to Nash, which was downed, and then took the ball around right end for six yards. Shorty's pass to Nash was good for 24 yards and the first touchdown of the game was marked up. Branch's kick for extra point missed by yards and the score stood 6-0 with "Georgia" holding the edge.

The third quarter opened with "Tech" receiving on the 10-yard line. Jackson tried a couple of passes and then punted to midfield. Branch received the punt and twisted his way through the "Tech" team for 45 yards and was downed on the two-yard line. Jackson went off tackle to place the ball less than a foot from the goal line and Pap Harden stepped over for the touchdown. Branch's dropkick was good this time and the "Georgia" total was brought to 13.

With the field muddy and the ball slick, first downs were scarce. "Georgia Tech" failed to register a first down in the first half, while "Georgia" made three. Both teams accounted for two in the last half.

Out of 13 passes attempted by "Georgia" three were completed, for a total of 39 yards. "Tech" took to the air only once during the first half, but opened up after the intermission with 10 aerial tries, three of which were completed for a gain of 32 yards, while another fell into the waiting hands of Shorty Branch, who raced 23 yards with it before he was halted. The ball was tricky to deal with and several passes slipped out of the hands of the receivers when they had an open field and seemed certain to be in for a good gain.

Outside a 9-yard spurt off tackle by Croom, several short runs by Nash, Houston, Harden, Wyrick and Jackson, Branch had the ground-gaining all to himself. In eight runs this shifty, hard-driving little quarter carried the ball 174 yards, an average of nearly 22 yards a try. His longest run was a 45-yard jaunt on a returned punt. In addition to this he turned in two end runs, one for 25 yards and another for 6, returned punts 25 and 23 yards, went off tackle for 10, intercepted a pass and stepped 23 yards, and once, when caught 15 yards behind the line of scrimmage, he shook his tacklers off and placed the ball two yards ahead of the scrimmage line.

This victory gives "Georgia" undisputed title to first place in the winter football league, with three wins chalked up while the other squads are in a three-way tie for second—or last—place with one victory and two defeats each.

HILL BASKETEERS TO MEET DURHAM TEAM

INVITATIONS FOR INDOOR MEET OUT

University Making Plans For Huge Conference Track Meet Here March 8.

Invitations have just gone out to 22 Southern Conference institutions, and to preparatory and high schools all over the South, to send trackmen to the first Southern Conference indoor track meet to be held here on March 8.

With the Millrose games out of the way, University authorities are concentrating attention on securing the greatest possible representation from the South.

Varsity invitations went out to the other 22 members of the Southern Conference. Invitations to send freshman teams were sent to these and five other colleges who have shown interest—Wake Forest, Richmond, William and Mary, Furman, and Davidson—; and in the scholastic class invitations were sent to 29 outstanding prep schools and 43 high schools.

University authorities made it clear today that the meet is open to any freshman, prep or high school team in the South, beyond those invited; but that the varsity events are open only to Conference members.

Events will get under way at 4 o'clock the afternoon of March 8. The Tin Can, the University's big indoor sports home, with a floor space 110 by 300 feet, well heated, with regulation sawdust vaulting and jumping pit, and a splendid track ten laps to the mile, will be the scene of the games.

There will be 12 varsity events—60-yard dash, 60-yard high hurdles, 60-yard low hurdles, 440-yard run, 880-yard run, one mile run, two mile run, mile relay, high jump, shot put, broad jump and pole vault. The four freshman events will be the 60-yard dash, 60-yard high hurdles, 3-4 mile run and mile relay. The seven scholastic events will be 60-yard dash, 60-yard high hurdles, 60-yard low hurdles, 1,000 yard run, mile relay, high jump and shot put.

Indications are that the cream of the south's trackmen will participate. Stars who are already entered include Ed Hamm, Georgia Tech's world champion broad jumper; Harry Flippen, Virginia's world champion hurdler; Graydon, Tech's javelin thrower; Wisher, Virginia's jumper; McGinn, of N. C. State, who placed second in the conference half-mile last year.

ATHLETES HAVE HEAVY SCHEDULE

Carolina Teams To Meet 11 Foes This Week; Meets Seven In Tin Can.

Home basketball games with Wake Forest, Maryland and V. P. I. and a boxing meet with Penn State's national champions headline the athletic schedule for next week.

Tar Heel teams will face competition 11 times during the week. Southern Conference teams will furnish the opposition in seven of the events. Navy's basketball team and Penn State's boxers will be the big intersectional opponents.

What is more interesting to Tar Heel supporters here and in the vicinity is that seven of the events are to be held in the Tin Can here.

Wake Forest varsity and freshman basketball teams will be met here Tuesday night. Maryland's varsity quint will be met here Wednesday night. V. P. I.'s varsity and freshman quints will come on Friday night. Washington and Lee's freshman quint will be met here Saturday night, and the week's home program will be brought to a close the same night with the featured meet between Carolina's Southern Championship Boxers and Penn State's National Champions.

All varsity events will begin at 8:30 o'clock, and all freshman events at 7 o'clock.

The boxing, basketball, and wrestling teams will each see major action once on foreign ground. The boxers will return from Florida to meet South Carolina in Columbia Monday night. The basketball team will journey up to Annapolis Saturday night to engage the fast Navy quint. The wrestlers, accompanied by their freshman brothers, will go to Lexington Saturday night for their annual meet with V. M. I.

The boxers will conclude their schedule next week, and the basketball quint will have only a second game with Davidson remaining. Both teams will begin pointing immediately to the Southern Conference tournaments, to be held at Charlottesville and Atlanta. The wrestlers will have two more weeks to work before the Conference wrestling tournament at Lexington on March 7.

A life-size bronze wolverine, emblematic of the University of Michigan, will be presented annually to a high school of Eastern New York State for sportsmanship and proficiency in athletics.

State College Co-ed Swats Freshman With Webster's Dictionary

Raleigh, Feb. 15.—(Special)—"Grab the bottom round, freshman," said Co-Ed Spencer of Raleigh to W. C. Huband, from Winston-Salem, when he made a "sassy" remark regarding Miss Spencer's typing in the college newspaper office Wednesday afternoon.

Freshman Huband bent over and the co-ed administered one swift lick on the usual place. She used Webster's Collegiate Dictionary.

A student who witnessed the deed said that this was one incident where a co-ed "made a hit with a State College student."

In spite of the dissension toward the opposite sex, co-eds seem to be gaining more power with creation of respect for their commands.

At The Carolina

Despite the fact that Fifi Dorsay, hailed as the best bet that ever came from Europe to the American screen, had what might be called a minor role in "They Had To See Paris," the Will Rogers feature, her first appearance on the screen, she bounded into fame and popularity over night. So much so that Raoul Walsh, famous Fox Film director, writing a story to follow "The Cock Eyed World," created a made to order role for Fifi Dorsay in "Hot For Paris," a Fox Movietone all talking picture where she is featured with Victor McLaglen, Polly Moran and El Brendel.

The net result is nothing short of a sensation. She contributes her natural brand of humor, her infectious smile and her million dollar personality and sings two songs and also leads a beauty chorus in a hot number.

McLaglen, whose popularity was greatly enhanced b ythe record breaking production, "The Cock Eyed World," plays the role of mate of an Australian windjammer who buys a ticket on the Grand Prix, the famous Paris race run at Longchamps. His ticket wins because a long shot and then arises the novel situation of a man being persued about the country by a firm who wishes to hand him a million dollars.

He gets the money and the girl in the end but not before those who watch the picture will be sore from aching sides caused by real laughs.

Brendel, who was acclaimed the screen's best character comedian by practically every reviewer on "Sunny Side Up," has a corking role as "Axel Olsen," McLaglen's sailor buddy and outstanding roles are played by Charles Judels, famous Broadway stage character comedian; Lennox Pawle, and August Tollaire.

The songs which Fifi Dorsay sings were especially written for her by Walter Donaldson and Edgar Leslie, titled "Sweet Nothings of Love," and "If You Want to See Gay Paree," and McLaglen bursts logically into song with "I'm the Duke of Kakiyak."

"Hot For Paris" is based on a story by Walsh with continuity by Charles J. McGuirk and dialog by Billy K. Wells who was responsible for that other great hit, "The Cock Eyed World."

It's at the Carolina theatre Monday only.

Glee Club Competes In Intercollegiate Contest

cal talent. Their tours are limited; their programs are not the height of musical taste, often being very poor, in fact; and their vocal training amounts to very little. It would be an unexpected affair if these schools, which are in the majority, would win the contests."

Since the national contest has become a fixed event, the national council has drawn a wide membership from all over the country, and thought has been given to employ more competent voice teachers in the colleges for glee club training.

When Professor Dyer came here in September, he introduced a new policy of voice training, to which all his students are subject. This is probably the first real vocal training which the men have had, and soon will come the first real opportunity for results. A large number of freshmen are now taking this training. By the time they are seniors, Mr. Dyer believes, they should be capable of doing fine glee club work.

Over 400 Prominent North Carolina Citizens Sign Statement

the experiences and lessons of the western democracies in the hundred and fifty years since the power engine let loose the forces which have rearranged the structure of the modern world.

The statement follows:

In this time of economic transition and industrial struggle, social attitudes are in process of formation critical with human meaning as to the sort of commonwealth we are to become. It is in keeping with our North Carolina traditions that interested citizens try to look through the confusion and antagonisms of the hour to a few simple working principles born of our democratic experiment and experience. In our present situation when the old struggle for self-government has advanced from the religious and political to include the industrial life, four principles, evolved out of historic movements, stand out for our guidance now. On the preservation and adaptation of these principles turns today the search in an industrial society for that freedom of personality and equality of opportunity which this commonwealth was founded to win for all our people.

First, That the constitutional and legal rights of person and property and lawful freedom of speech and assembly be guaranteed equally to all persons in this commonwealth without regard to birth-place, race, ownership or labor status, unionism or non-unionism, religion, politics, or economic views. The essential Americanism of this constitutional bill of rights, without faithless violation, can stand against the fallacies, fanaticism and violence of communism, fascism and anarchism with the due processes of light, liberty and law. By this very preservation of the ideals of American freedom, the fair and open resources of American democracy will prevail over class hatreds and dictatorships, economic unreason, and social injustice.

Second, That, just as the American principle of liberty guarantees the right of the individual capitalists and the individual laborers to organize or not to organize, so the American principle of equal rights makes it logical that, if one group organizes and bargains collectively the corresponding group has the same right to do so, with all the attendant legal rights and responsibilities. This equal right of the investors of capital and management and the investor of human life and labor to bargain collectively, has been and is declared for in the national platforms of both the Democratic and Republican parties; is a part of the general historic process, and, despite abuses on both sides, this equal right, when fairly recognized and cooperatively promoted, becomes economically productive, democratically stabilizing and humanly valuable.

Third, That it is one of the working principles of self-government to find facts as a basis for democratic action. Since the textile industry is one of the national economic resources, conditioned by sectional, national, and world economics, and involves the way of life for millions of the American people; and since the sickness of this industry, due to many complex factors, entails financial costs to stockholders, mental costs to managers, and social costs to workers, who are human resources of the industry and the nation, it is advisable for the industry and the nation that a nation-wide non-partisan economic and social survey and analysis of the textile industry be made at once.

Fourth, That, even without this survey, we find already written in the record of every modern commonwealth that social adjustment must be made to industrial change. Since, in our commonwealth, some social adjustments lag behind the industrial advance, it is, therefore, the part of industrial and social wisdom to make such clearly needed adjustments as the reduction of the legal sixty hour week, the gradual abolition of night work for women and young people, the modification or the elimination of the fourth grade clause in the child labor law, and the adequate provision for supervision and enforcement of this social code by the commonwealth.

As friends of industry involved in its well being, and as citizens of a commonwealth whose people are concerned with building, in patient time, a more humanly creative and spiritually beautiful civilization, we make this declaration to which we now sign our names and pledge our support.

RUSSIA SUBJECT TALK BY STRONG

University Professor Will Speak To Taylor Society In Gerrard Hall Tonight.

Professor E. D. Strong of the economics department will speak on "Long-range Economic Planning in Russia" at the meeting of the University branch of The Taylor Society at 7 o'clock this evening in Gerrard hall.

In his talk Mr. Strong will discuss the Russian "Gosplan" under which the entire economic activity of Russia for a period of five years is under the control of a central commission. This plan, which was installed in the fall of 1928, has been in operation for more than a year, and the speaker will present the results of the first year's activities.

Because of a visit to Russia in 1928, during which he visited the offices of the central commission and discussed with some of its officers the work that was being done, Professor Strong is in a position to treat this subject adequately.

The central commission which is charged with administrating the plan has complete control of all the economic institutions of Russia. It plans production, distribution and consumption of practically every article consumed in Russia. Because of this centralized control, almost 50 percent of the total production of Russia for the first year of the plan was turned into capital goods, stated Professor Strong.

The speaker of the evening will present a summary of the results of the commission's first year of work and will contrast Russia with a country such as the United States in which there is practically no economic planning.

This experiment with complete control of economic institutions in the hands of a central body is the outgrowth of a similar previous period of three years. This second period has been installed with more complete powers so that now practically every phase of economic activity is under the supervision of one authority.

The Russian authorities regard this second period of the "Gosplan" not as an experiment but as an application of proved system. The world as a whole, however, has looked upon the whole matter as a gigantic experiment in which the theory of economic control is being given a supreme test, and naturally there has been considerable speculation over the results.

In his discussion of the "Gosplan" Professor Strong will present an outline of the plan and will attempt to show the results of the plan.

The talk by Mr. Strong is the fourth of a series of lectures to be given before The Taylor Society by faculty speakers. Others who will speak this quarter are Professor Taylor and Dean D. D. Carroll.

Community Club

The literature department of the community club will meet this evening at 7:30 o'clock in the Methodist church social rooms.

Mrs. Raymond Adams, Miss Nora Beust, and Mrs. Urban T. Holmes will give a program of story telling.

Duke And Carolina Student Leaders Stage 'Love Feast'

Representatives of the Duke and Carolina student bodies met at an informal dinner at the Carolina Inn last night. Tentative plans were made for joint class smokers and dances and for interchange of speakers for freshman orientation week next fall, while problems relating to mutual use of library facilities, reciprocity of admission at athletic events and the functioning of student government were discussed at length.

Ray Farris, president of the Carolina student body, was master of ceremonies, although the meeting was more of a general "bull-session" than a ceremonious occasion. The Duke representatives were Joe Savage, president of student government; Lee Davis, captain-elect of the football team; Jake Lippard, editor of the Duke Chronicle; Tom Stearns, president of the senior class; John Shaw, managing editor of the Chronicle; Bill Murray, student councilman and member of the football team, and Edgar Hocutt, assistant editor of the Chronicle.

A similar dinner was planned for the spring at Duke, and it was decided to hold similar "get-togethers" semi-annually in the future.

Faculty Votes For Higher Scholarship

At a meeting of the faculty on February 14, the following ruling was passed, "To be eligible for graduation a student must secure the grade of "C" or higher on at least half of his courses."

As an interpretation of the ruling it was further stated that:

(1) The rule will go into effect in September 1930 to apply to all undergraduate students for work passed subsequent to that date.

(2) A student who completes thirty-six required courses but with grades which do not entitle him to his degree will be allowed to take additional junior-senior courses until such time as he meets the requirement of the rule.

(3) Transfer with advanced standing will come under this rule only for those courses pursued at this institution.

A large percentage of the universities of the country have this ruling in order to insure a higher grade of scholarship among the students. Some of them require the average to be as high as 85. The ruling here requires an average of approximately 77.

PHI ASSEMBLY TO DISCUSS LOCAL Y

The Philanthropic Assembly will meet tonight at 7:15 o'clock in New West building. The resolution "Resolved: That the University Y. M. C. A. is not performing its necessary functions on the campus" will be discussed. Speaker Lang announces that a number of business matters will be brought before the assembly, and that the subject of the existing Carolina-Duke relations as a topic for the joint session will be discussed.

Mr. Bradshaw's office notified the Tar Heel late yesterday afternoon that there would be no chapel this morning. Students are otherwise requested to fulfill their regular chapel obligations as usual unless otherwise notified in the Tar Heel.

Esperanto Club To Meet

There will be a meeting of the Esperanto club tomorrow afternoon at 5 p. m., in 109 Saunders hall. A full meeting is necessary as the new magazines have arrived and are ready for distribution.

MANGUM MEDAL TO BE AWARDED AGAIN

The present donors of the Mangum medal, unawarded last year, in a letter to R. B. House have urged that the contest be held this year at commencement. The debate council, having taken the matter in hand, urges that all seniors who are interested in the contest see either Dr. George McKie at 210 Murphey hall, or J. C. Williams at 105 "I" dormitory in the near future.

Rules of eligibility governing the contest state that the participants shall be seniors in either the college of liberal arts, the school of education, the school of applied science, or the school of commerce. Sometime during the first week in May, or thereabouts, the preliminary will be held. Four of the contestants will be known as the commencement orators of the senior class. The Mangum medal will be awarded to the best speaker of the four orators.

ENGINEERING SOCIETIES HOLD MEETINGS TONIGHT

Two of the four student branches of the national engineering societies represented on the campus will hold meetings Thursday evening, when the William Cain student chapter of the A. S. C. E. and the University of North Carolina student branch of the A. S. M. E. will hold regular meetings.

The program of the William Cain society will consist of talks by several junior members who will describe the cooperative work on which they are now working. These short talks on the different kinds of cooperative work are being presented to acquaint the sophomores with the characteristics of each so that later in the spring the students can choose the type of work they wish to do next year.

At the meeting of the University branch of the mechanical society, E. L. Lowery, senior, will present an illustrated talk on Deisel engines and Frederick Knoop, sophomore, will speak on the life of a prominent engineer.

The University branch of the A. I. E. E., organization of electrical engineering students, will meet Thursday, February 27.

Buccaneer Meeting

There will be a meeting of the art and editorial staffs of the Buccaneer tonight at 7:15.

MEMORIAL BEAMS TORN TO GROUND

Largest Non-Supported Wooden Beams In World Brought To Ground By Steel Cables And Steam Engine.

(By Nathan Volkman)

Several hundred students and faculty members gathered round the ruins of Memorial hall yesterday afternoon to witness the most striking feature of the demolishing process thus far, the tearing down of the huge arched rafters which supported the roof of the ancient building. The brilliant rays of the sun lent glamour to the scene, lighting up the ruins as a spotlight for the onlookers.

The work of tearing down the arched rafters was begun early in the afternoon under the direction of W. E. Page, foreman of the wrecking crew. Human labor was little needed except for preparing and putting in place the huge steel cables. Several pairs of the strongest cables available were used in the work. These were tied to two rafters each time, and the strength of the double-action steam engine used manifested itself gradually as the beams creaked and finally crashed to the ground. Only one mishap occurred during the whole of the afternoon's labor—in the splitting of one of the cables. It was only the work of a few minutes, however, until the cable was repaired.

Comments and suggestions as to the easiest way possible to destroy the rafters were offered freely by onlookers. Dynamite, two-inch firecrackers, and even cannon were among the suggested remedies. Those in charge, however, were seemingly unruffled by these suggestions, as they toiled on pursuing their own plans.

The work of destroying the beams was not finished late yesterday afternoon.

Dr. English Bagby is to address the National Association of Deans of Women at Atlantic City on February 20.

Disciplinary Influence Of College Noted By Reporter

(By Clyde Deitz)

A most unusual, though none the less genuine, example of the refining and disciplinary influences of college has been observed by a comparison of the actions of sophomores and freshmen under the same circumstances.

The occasion for the interesting observations arose from the fact that no one was present to conduct a program in the last three sessions of chapel. The reactions noted are best explained by the following narration of events as they occurred:

Thursday morning between 10:23 and 10:30 those of the freshman class whose names begin with the letters A through L assembled as usual in Gerrard hall. At 10:30 mildly inquisitive eyes swept the front of the hall for the familiar face of Dean Bradshaw, R. B. House or some other notable. Puzzled, perhaps disappointed, by the absence of any such person, each adolescent turned inquiringly to his neighbor. With the last peal of the bell over South building, the group rose with one accord, as it were, and surged toward the doors.

On Friday morning, with the other half of the freshman class present, there was an almost exact repetition of the occurrence of the preceding morning, the final intonation of the bell again serving as a signal for immediate departure.

Quite a different story, however, must be told of Monday morning. Ten-thirty found the sophomores quietly seated in their places; but, strangest of all, they were wont to remain so. The clerk had checked half the numerous absences before the slightest movement or turning was begun. Finally one bold individual (whether his action is evidence of leadership or lingering freshman-like traits, the writer does not take it upon himself to say) arose in the center of the hall and, hesitating to depart, donned his coat.

One by one, the more daring stole toward the door. At last all, grinning more or less guiltily, had slipped out and on their way.

Now the meager conclusions deducted from these facts are readily apparent. To the reader must be left the quite possibly unlimited amplification of them.

"Jelly" Leftwich Engaged To Play For Mid-Winters

German Club Officials Announce Orchestra For Annual Dances.

TO BE IN BYNUM GYM

Two Dances Friday And Three Saturday Will Feature Week-End Affair; Cards Being Issued By Treasurer.

(By "Chink" Davis)

Members of the dancing contingent in Chapel Hill are now looking forward to the mid-winter set of dances to be held during the coming week-end. The first dance will be held Friday afternoon with four dances following, the final ball being held Saturday night. All dances will be held in the Bynum gymnasium.

"Jelly" Leftwich and His University Club orchestra have been engaged to furnish the cords and discords necessary for the men to "swing their partners" in various and sundry fashions. Leftwich has gained quite a reputation in his forming of dance orchestras. His University Club orchestra has been playing for numerous colleges and preparatory schools. He has recently signed a contract to play at Wrightsville Beach during the coming summer

Leaders for these dances were elected at a regular meeting of the German Club last fall. Steve Millender was elected to lead the set, while Art Sickles and Barron Grier were chosen to assist him.

There will be a total of five dances. A tea dance Friday afternoon will begin the set. A dance will be held Friday night from 9:30 until 1, and three dances Saturday. The morning dance Saturday will be from 11 until 1, the afternoon dance from 4 until 6, and the night dance from 9 until 12.

Decorations for the gymnasium are now being worked out by Barron Holmes and Frazier Glenn. These two boys have decorated for dances for three years, and an attractive set of decorations is expected.

A new ruling has been passed by the executive committee of the German Club to the effect that those attending dances will not be admitted after a certain time. According to this committee, the rule will be strictly enforced and couples arriving after the designated time will not be allowed to attend the dance.

Cards for admittance to the dances can now be secured from Will Yarborough upon payment of the quarterly assessment of $5. He can be found at the S. A. E. house in the afternoons from 1 until 3 and at night from 7 until 9.

Scramble Fellows

All students who wish to submit photographs for the Vanity Fair section of the Yackety Yack must have the pictures in the office of the Yackety Yack in the basement of Alumni building by February 24th. The offices will be open every afternoon from 2 to 4. The pictures may also be submitted to Bill Petty at the Sigma Chi house.

HOLMES HOUSE AND COMER ADDRESS Y CABINET MEETINGS

U. T. Holmes, R. B. House and H. F. Comer were the three speakers for the Y cabinets last night at their usual weekly meeting. Mr. Holmes spoke to the sophomores; Mr. House talked to the freshmen, while Mr. Comer led a discussion in the junior-senior cabinet.

"Comparative Religion" was the subject of Mr. Holmes' talk to the sophomore cabinet. He defined religion as "a feeling of humility before a great truth." Taking up the earlier religions the speaker talked of the three stages developed by religion.

Speaking of Buddhism, he stated that there existed in the western part of the United States an organization, similar to the Y. M. C. A., which is called the Y. M. B. A. This organization is trying to convert men to Buddhism; it has its regular magazine and is trying to make many of the people converts to this Chinese religion.

Preceding Mr. Holmes' talk, J. E. Dungan, president of the club, spoke briefly upon an Open Forum letter written by Ellis Fysal which appears in this morning's paper. Upon motion the cabinet endorsed Fysal's plan of aiding welfare work in the county.

HOEFER WILL ADDRESS FRESHMAN ENGINEERS

E. G. Hoefer, head of the department of mechanical engineering, will speak to all freshmen engineering students Wednesday at 12 o'clock. The talk by Mr. Hoefer will be a continuation of a talk begun last Wednesday when he presented to the freshmen an outline of the different fields included in mechanical engineering.

This talk is one of a series of orientation and motivation lectures being presented to the freshman engineers by the heads of the departments in the school of engineering.

A THOUGHT A DAY

It (The Press) is like the beam of a searchlight that moves restlessly about, bringing one episode and then another out of darkness into vision. Men cannot do the work of the world by this light alone. They cannot govern society by episodes, incidents, and eruptions.—Walter Lippman, in "Public Opinion."

"Noble Self-Help Students?"

At least 430 self-help students are working at regular scheduled jobs of so many hours a week, while approximately 70 percent of the students earn some portion of their expenses here, according to a survey made recently by the self-help bureau of the University Y. M. C. A. Interpreted by sentimental moralists, by benevolent-minded old people of both sexes and all ages, the report furnishes material for gushy eulogies of the "noble self-help student." But to the close and critical observer the report is not so encouraging.

More than two or three hours of self-help work each day are positively detrimental to the average college student. The report of the self-help bureau cites the record of one boy who worked 48 hours per week and maintained an average of 95 on his studies, but such a record is exceptional indeed. For the man of average capacities a considerable amount of time to devote to preparation for classes is necessary, and adequate sleep and recreation are essential to securing any considerable benefit from the affairs of the curriculum.

The average rate of pay for self-help work is not more than 30 cents an hour. A few jobs pay more, but they are extremely difficult to secure. Seventy-five dollars per month is a conservative estimate of the cost of attending school at the University. In three hours of work a day, seven days each week, the average self-help student earns less than thirty dollars per month. Thus it is practically impossible for a student to earn more than half of his expenses and still have sufficient time left in which to secure really tangible benefits from his years at the University.

In our opinion it is no less than a waste of four valuable years for a man to struggle through college by earning his own expenses, unless he is so fortunate as to make enough during the summer months to defray the major portion of these expenses. Many prefer to work long hours here rather than to borrow the necessary funds, but they sacrifice the very thing for which they are working—their chances of securing a real college education. But in many cases it is impossible to borrow sufficient money to supplement the earnings from a reasonable amount of self-help work.

More loan funds for college students, from which money can be obtained at reasonable interest rates, are desperately needed. No greater opportunity faces the genuine philanthropist than that of endowing these loan funds.

Unless the average undergraduate can rely upon loans or other outside sources of income, for at least half of his expenses, he is wasting his own time and money and that of the taxpayers by entering the University. Far from developing "noble traits of character," he is deluding himself into believing that he is securing a college education and at the same time exhibiting an utter lack of intellectual stability.

The Latest Peace Insurance Effort

In summarizing the work of the London Naval Conference Sunday's press brought before the publice view three major results of the parley:

1. A prospective five-year battle-ship holiday.
2. The "humanizing" of submarine warfare assured.
3. The settlement of the global tonnage problem, a controversy of years' standing.

Like most conferences for the promotion of peace, the London episode does not appear to be a potential factor in the struggle for peace. There is nothing very concrete which has been agreed upon in London. The battle-ship holiday is merely prospective, and the "humanizing" of submarine warfare does not mean that nations are going to abandon under-water craft in time of peril or war. The global tonnage problem, which has been much discussed at the conference, has been settled after a fashion, and a few figures pertaining to a settlement have been subscribed to. But on the whole the conference has achieved nothing which, in our opinion will lead ultimately to international peace.

Perhaps it is as Arthur Henderson, British foreign secretary, said—the bringing about of world peace requires patience; it is a slow tedious process. He also said that the London Conference should be regarded as a milestone on the way to peace. Of course peace, or even disarmament, cannot come over night. The process must be slow.

The diplomatists seem to overlook the fact that peace among the nations can be established only when the nations pass from the position of independence to one of interdependence. When tariff barriers are broken down, when common interests can be seen more clearly, when war takes on the meaning of economic suicide to every nation, and when the relationship among the nations is one of interdependence — then agreements and conclusions of such gatherings as the London Conference will be really effective.

The Editor's Responsibility

The editor of even so small a paper as the Daily Tar Heel has a great deal of responsibility; in fact, much more than the student body realizes. He is directly responsible for everything that appears on the editorial page of the paper and indirectly so for what appears on the other pages.

Oftentimes, students put Open Forum letters on the editor's file which are never printed. The most natural reaction under such conditions is to get "all hot and bothered" and blame the editor. Although the entire staff of the Daily Tar Heel welcomes expressions of opinion from the students (for these are the best medium for improving the publication), the editor cannot afford to publish opinions which are not based upon investigation and which would, as such, stir up strife among the people of the village and the majority of the student body. Whenever an Open Forum letter of doubtful authenticity is handed to the editor, he knows that if he publishes it and thereby offends some person or group of persons the blame will rest upon his shoulders, rather than upon those of the writer. The expedient selection of material for the editorial page is one of the essential functions of the office of editor.

The Daily Tar Heel never hesitates to carry student opinions which are based upon investigation. To get an opinion published in the Daily Tar Heel, the writer must comply with only two prerequisites: First, file his name with the editor; second, cite authentic source material for his opinion, in order that the editor may know what explanation to offer in the case that he is questioned regarding the contents of the same.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

POVERTY IN ORANGE COUNTY

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

A week ago Mr. Hodges wrote an editorial pointing out the "other" side of Orange county, in which he touched upon the poverty existing in the county. He gave the case of a woman of integrity, with a family of three small girls, on the point of starvation. This woman was unable to work and forced to bed by sickness. She had been stretching her meager funds by buying the cheapest of food, buttermilk by the gallon. This sort of illustration could be duplicated over and over again. Nor is this slushy sentiment, but a picture of hard, bare fact.

Are we students so cold-blooded that we can sit complacently by, eat three square meals a day and enjoy various comforts, scattering money on luxuries, while worthy families in our immediate neighborhood are destitute? Most of us have not felt the need and pinch of poverty. Few of us have pushed ourselves to sacrifice a thing.

What about it, fellows? Are we going to ignore this chance to play the part of neighbor? Why can't each fraternity and dormitory appoint some member to ask each man for the price of one meal or a movie, to be given to Mr. George Lawrence, county welfare officer, at Alumni building, for his well-considered use in this time of suffering.

May I challenge the University Y. M. C. A. to lend a helping hand also. This is the very sort of work that this organization should stand for. Let the Y. M. C. A. prove its worthiness by prompt activity. Some of us would like to see its strength and energy used in this direction instead of in the production of campus politicians and hypocritical leaders. Here's an opportunity for it to justify its title of Christian.

O, you convivial devotees of Bacchus who are accustomed to celebrating week-ends by getting "three sheets in the wind," why not contribute the price of one pint to this sober cause?

ELLIS FYSAL.

BEAU GENT REPLIES

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

B. S. has seen fit to misinterpret the meaning of a statement in our column, for the purpose of checking a couple of cracks into us. Were he cleverer and more adept, he might have succeeded in being a trifle—just a trifle, mind you—sarcastic.

We firmly believe that the beauty of woman connot be classified, except in that we know that man's cannot rival it—any inclination to pretend that it could would be social suicide. Anyway, we don't. Our first and last attempt to classify womanly pulchritude and convince a number of our feminine acquaintances that they were NOT the most beautiful creatures on this earth, is still our personal Gethsemane.

We would also have B. S. know that we prize highly indeed our distinction of being one of the very few fellows on the campus who have never dated a co-ed.

A piece of advice: don't try to compete with womanly beauty too strenuously lest you become one of those w. k. perfumed and handkerchief-waving sprites that frequent New York wharves.

As for telling you, "who cannot depend upon your looks as we do, for your fortune," how you might improve them, I would say that it takes a great faith. A sublime faith in the Almighty will do it nicely. Pray to the Lord to make you over.

Incidently, you mention that fact that you change your shirt before the dirty streak around the collar shows through. Very clever, B. S., very clever. But you might use a cake of Woodbury's once in a while. It will serve a twofold purpose. It will decrease your laundry expenses and, lacking faith enough for the Lord to grant your request, it will give you that school-girl complexion. Ask the man who owns one.

A periodic report of the progress of your beautification treatments would be greatly appreciated, by

Beau Gent

I Remember

When I was ten years old—

Acting the part of Hiawatha in a school play; having my face and body covered with brown grease; swallowing half an inch of lip-stick; giving the wrong cue and having snow fall in the middle of summer; singing right words to the wrong tune and blushing furiously; falling off the stage into the orchestra pit and hearing the audience laugh thunderously; climbing back onto the stage and stepping through a bass-drum.

When I was twelve—

Ringing door-bells and hiding in shrubbery. On the way home one afternoon walking five blocks out of the way to keep from having to walk with a girl. . . . Falling out of a high tree and running home to persuade my mother that I was dead. . . . Burying a pet mouse in the back yard with sombre and elaborate ceremony and shedding bitter tears.

When I was thirteen—

Playing "wink" at a party, and upon successfully capturing a girl three times, trying to take my just reward; and being unmercifully slapped by the young lady while the others laughed hilariously and taunted me with a lack of boldness. . . . Going on a picnic and drinking fourteen glasses of lemonade and complaining all night of a severe stomach-ache.

When I was fourteen—

Writing laboriously a love-letter and pricking my arm with a pin so that I might sign off with blood. . . . While walking down a street with a girl, offering to buy her buns from a bakery truck, and, upon remembering that I had no money, trying to persuade her that buns would certainly make her ill. . . . Doing an Indian dance around a great Campfire one night at a summer camp, and stumbling over a log and falling into the fire.

When I was fifteen—

Reciting poetry and making love under a chestnut tree in the rain. . . . Someone asking me why gentlemen preferred blonds . . . . Riding fifty miles on a bicycle, getting lost and spending the night at a farmhouse twenty miles from my home. . . . Debating in a huge auditorium before a large audience and falling asleep while my opponent was talking.

When I was sixteen—

Arriving in Chapel Hill to enter the University, and buying five haircut tickets for a dollar, and finding later that they were advertisements. . . . Forgetting where my room was and being too timid to ask at the business office, and spending the night in an empty room in Carr dormitory. . . . Going to my first class and hearing the professor call me "Mr.", and sticking out my chest and grinning absurdly. . . . Writing a love-poem anonomously to a young lady; mailing it, and immediately trying to get the post-master to return it to me. . . . Going home for Christmas holidays and visiting high school, and walking around with a haughty air and nodding condescendingly to people.

A proposal for the abolition of all private schools, made by Dr. H. Briggs, head of the secondary department of Teachers College, Columbia University, has created a great stir among his colleagues, almost all of whom disagree with him.

"THE SKY HAWK" OPENS TODAY AT THE CAROLINA

"The Sky Hawk," that long awaited all talking Fox Movietone romance of a world fight, opens today at the Carolina Theatre.

Throughout its story it is a love struggle between two men for the same girl, handled humanly, with adroit twists while the stirringly tempestuous life about them envelopes all three in many hazardous situations.

Doubly notable for its vivid and breath taking flying scenes, particularly in the gripping climax, and for its unusually human and appealing story, "The Sky Hawk" is totally unlike any previous aviation film, talking or silent—and is entertainingly distinctive.

Opening with an exciting smash-up of a plane when the pilot swerves to avoid killing a girl, the tempo of the production maintains a high pitch throughout. Spectacular scenes of London streets and cafes during the hectic gaiety of war time and in the panic of a Zeppelin raid—scenes never before produced on such a tremendous scale—carry the story on to the dramatic suspense of the young flyer's unexpected departure for France.

Compelled by circumstances, aviator breaks the rules for a final meeting with his sweetheart, crashes his plane on returning and finds he is paralyzed. The poignant appeal of his renunciation when he compels the girl to break off the engagement, his painful efforts to rebuild an old condemned plane, the girl's frantic race to intercept him on learning his intentions, the heart-rending scene between them as the boy takes off to battle the menacing Zeppelin, the thrilling duel above London, amid bursting shells and searchlight beams, the gripping climax and surprising ending — these made "The Sky Hawk" truly one of the most unusual pictures ever filmed.

Enacted by a hand-picked cast, written, directed and staged by experts, the production is creating a sensation wherever it has been shown. Brilliant John Garrick, the young British flyer-actor, hailed as the talking screen's newest find, and Helen Chandler, New York Theatre Guild celebrity and the leading woman in "Salute," another big Fox hit, share principal honors, with Gilbert Emery, the Scotland Yard man in "Behind That Curtain" heading the supporting cast. Joyce Compton, Billy Bevan, Lennox Pawle, Lumsden Hare and Daphne Pollard all take important roles in this pioneer up in the air talkie.

John G. Blystone, who has directed 47 pictures for Fox Films, many of them outstanding successes such as "Thru Different Eyes" and "Mother Knows Best," has turned out the biggest triumph of his career with his direction of this Fox Movietone feature. Campbell Gullan, British actor and stage director, handled the staging of the production and in collaboration with Llewellyn Hughes, author of the magazine story, "Chap Called Bardell" from which this feature was made, adapted and wrote the dialogue.

FRATERNITY EXECUTIVE IS CAROLINA ALUMNUS

Daniel L. Grant, executive secretary of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity, has stopped over in Chapel Hill on his way to New York. Mr. Grant held the position of alumni secretary from 1922 to 1927, and was also director of the Alumni loyalty fund in the years 1928-1929. He graduated from the University with an A. B. degree in 1921.

Basketball Team To Meet Wake Forest Here Tonight

Second Contest With Deacons Scheduled For Tin Can At 8:30 O'clock.

FROSH VS. BABY DEACONS

Team To Continue Offensive Play Started In Games Last Week.

The Tar Heel basketball team in its last three games may have set a new record for losing games by close margins—three games lost with the difference in Tar Heel points and opponents' points standing at 4.

The 37-36 loss to Duke on Saturday night capped the climax. Powerful State and Loyola quints had previously beaten the Tar Heels by 28-26 and 26-25.

Supporters were sad, of course, but at that the Tar Heels looked good in defeat. Their champions think they showed the greatest offensive power of the season in those three games and think likewise that the underdog Tar Heels will be due for a late-season comeback.

They are looking forward even to the Wake Forest game tonight at 8:30 in the Tin Can as the turning point.

FRESHMEN TACKLE DEACONS TONIGHT

With their second loss to the Duke Blue Imps still hanging over their heads, the Tar Baby quintet ended practice for the return game with the Wake Forest Baby Deacons tonight in the Tin Can. Earlier in the season, the Tar Babies were defeated by the Baby Deacons 34-24, and they will be out to avenge that earlier defeat. With the game on their home floor, the Tar Babies should be the favorites to reverse the result of last month's game.

Lineberger, Carolina's versatile guard, who cracked his wrist on the recent Virginia trip should be ready to play tonight, but it is very doubtful if he will start. "Pinky" Connor, who has substituted for Lineberger, has been going great guns lately, starring in every game since the Virginia trip, and will probably start tonight.

This week the Tar Babies have three of their toughest contests, playing the Wake Forest frosh tonight, V. P. I. freshmen Friday night, and the Washington and Lee freshmen Saturday night. In every one of these games, the Tar Babies will be out to avenge former defeats.

The probable lineup for tonight's game:

Connor and Henry (guards); Beale (center); and Dunn and Hines (forwards).

After a two-day rest the Tar Babies again encounter the freshmen five from Virginia Polytechnic Institute. The V. P. I. quintet hammered out a victory over the Carolina Frosh when the latter made an unfruitful march through the "Sore Backs."

Saturday night finds the first-year Carolinians facing Washington and Lee freshmen. This game, which is the first meeting of the two teams, will be played in the Tin Can.

Local High Splits With Roxboro Teams

Chapel Hill high school split a double-header with Roxboro here Friday night, the boys winning 29-15 and the girls losing 23-19. Both teams showed considerable form, especially the boys, who displayed unusual scoring power in putting down the Roxboro quint.

Lawrence, Chapel Hill center, showed up best in the boys' game and led the scoring with 12 markers. Council, Reynolds and Williams also played a good game, while Gentry and Longer starred for the visitors.

In the girls' game Leigh of Chapel Hill played a good offensive game and led her teammates with eight tallies, while Jones, Roxboro forward, was high scorer of both sides with 11 points. The score stood 19-all in the last minute of play, but a pair of technical fouls and a field goal by Oliver accounted for the four point margin at the close.

Lineup for girls' game:

Roxboro (23)		Chapel Hill (19)
Oliver (11)	R. F.	Leigh (8)
Jones (12)	L. F.	Taylor (7)

Intramurals

(By K. C. Ramsay)

This Week

The last week of intramural basketball got under way yesterday with the Chi Psi, Pi Kappa Alpha, Tau Epsilon Phi and Kappa Alpha teams winning their games. Since examinations are only three weeks distant, it has been decided to end the regular schedule this week, leaving next week for playoffs and postponed games.

Old East and Aycock have not yet lost a game, and unless the unexpected happens this week there will be a dispute to be settled in the dormitory league. Both teams have won nine games and lost none to date.

Unless Phi Kappa Sigma can defeat the Phi Gams or Theta Kappa Nu down the Dekes, there will probably be a fast game to be played-off in the fraternity race. The Dekes were reported as having lost a game by forfeit, but intramural officials announce that it was only a postponed game.

Last Week

Several teams were put out of the running for honors during last week's play. Steele of the dormitories and Sigma Nu of the fraternities failed to continue past performances and lost one game each.

The Sigma Epsilons entered the league last week and won the only game which they have played. The Manly boys improved their standing by adding two games to the win column.

Scoring

Sigma Nu is leading the entire campus for scoring honors with a total of 301 points for and 98 against. Steele holds the high scoring honors for the dormitories with a total of 255 points for and 87 against. Other teams which boast high scoring honors are Old East with 207 points, Aycock with 188, Tau Epsilon Phi with 174, D. K. E. with 168 and Manly with 166. These are the only teams having scored more than 150 points during the first five weeks.

Teams And Players

Several teams have been playing with the idea that a good offense is the best defense. These scores will prove it. Steele won a game this week by 64-20. In four of their games the Sigma Nus have scored between 40 and 64 points. Manly has won several games by very large margins also.

That 55 to 1 score takes the cake for extremes. The Grimes boys should have brought down the janitor to help them.

Pierre Campbell, Chi Psi forward, scored 15 points in a game recently. Fourteen of them were long shots. That boy is death.

Hinton of Old West seems to be a consistently high scorer. Maybe he keeps in condition getting up for eight-thirties.

A remark attributed to Nap Lufty, referee, is going the rounds. It seems that famed Dormitory "I" was playing a game and Referee Lufty, calling the captain over to get the lineup, added—"spell the names, too." Which wasn't bad at all, considering that he had only a very short pencil to write with.

Larry Johnson was finding the basket very regularly in a recent game, scoring a total of 32 points.

The Zeta Beta Tau and Delta Tau Delta basketball teams forfeited their game yesterday, neither team appearing.

VIRGINIA WINS INDOOR MEETS

Carolina Fourth In Annual Games; Farmer, Bagby, And Barkley Score.

Virginia won the varsity and freshman meets in the sixth annual indoor track invitation games Saturday night, with William and Mary second in both divisions. Final scores in the varsity meet were Virginia 23, William and Mary 16, Washington and Lee 13, Maryland 13, North Carolina 12, Duke 9, Wake Forest 2. Woodberry Forest won the preparatory school division and Eastern High of Washington won the high school division.

Farmer and Bagby, each with five points, and Barkley with two points accounted for the Tar Heel score. Bagby placed first in the high jump. Farmer was second in the 50-yard dash and third in the 440-yard run. Barkley captured the other two points with a third in the 880-yard run. Jensen, the only freshman entry for the University, placed second in the mile run, and third in the 880 for five points.

Harper Injured

Facing one of the hardest weeks of play of their 1930 schedule, the Tar Heel basketball team will probably be playing this week without the service of their center and defensive star "Puny" Harper.

Harper, injured in the 36-37 loss of Duke Saturday night, was about on crutches yesterday, but is definitely out of the Wake Forest game here tonight.

The loss may not be so keenly felt there. The Tar Heels had a 48-19 margin over the Deacons in a previous meeting. Harper's absence will only make things even and give prospects of a close, hard game.

T. E.P. Beats Sigma Chi

Tau Epsilon Phi trounced Sigma Chi yesterday afternoon 34 to 10. Good, steady passing featured the play of the winning team. Despite the uneven score, the game was fast and interesting.

Hirsh was high-point man for T. E. P. with 16 points. Cohen and Felshin also did some accurate shooting for the winners, scoring together a total of 16 points. Jarrat led the Sigma Chi team in scoring.

DENTAL COURSES GIVEN BY U. N. C.

Extension Classes To Be Held In Six Centers.

Dental extension classes are to be held in six centers of the state this week, according to announcement yesterday by R. M. Grumman, director of the University extension division.

The lecturer this week is to be Dr. Charles W. Freeman, member of the faculty of the Northwestern Dental School, Chicago, who will present the subject "A New Anaesthetic."

Dr. Freeman's lecture is one of a series of six sessions of the 1930 postgraduate course in dentistry being conducted by the University for the North Carolina Dental Society. Class centers are located at Greenville, Raleigh, Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Charlotte and Asheville.

Other instructors to follow Dr. Freeman are: Dr. English Bagby of the University for the week of March 17, subject, "Psychology"; Dr. T. W. Eaves of Cleveland, Ohio, for the week of April 21, subject, "Gold Inlays"; Dr. Albert Midgley of Providence, R. I., for the week of May 19, subject, "Dental Economics"; Dr. Horace W. Davis of Baltimore for the week of June 16, subject, "Radiographic Interpretations."

One hundred and thirty dentists are enrolled in the course.

NEGRO FORGETS WHERE HE FOUND HIS BOTTLES; GETS ROAD SENTENCE

Ivey Fiske, 21, colored, strolled along past the co-ed house one day last week with a sack over his shoulder. From a hole in the sack protruded the neck of a bottle.

"What have you there?" asked a local policeman.

"Jes a lil beef, suh, fo' mah kiddies—jes' a li'l beef," replied Ivey.

At Monday's session of Chapel Hill recorder's court Ivey claimed to have found the three quarts of whiskey his bag contained "out of 45." Later he became confused and thought he'd found it on the Durham road.

"Yessah, ah found dem bottles on de Durham road an ah's takin' a li'l short cut home."

When it developed that the geographic location of the negro's home was such that he could not have been taking a "short cut," the court held that he was lying and must go to the road.

MIXED WHISKEY WITH MEDICINE; IS FINED

Coon Neville, 35, colored, responded to a charge of public drunkeness in the Chapel Hill recorder's court Monday by telling the judge that he was ill, and mixed a little whiskey with his medicine to make it palatable. He claimed, further, that he smelled whiskey on the breath of the officer who arrested him.

"You've been up here twice in the last two weeks," replied Judge C. P. Hinshaw, "and I'm going to fine you $5 and costs. But if you come up again you go to the road."

"By the way," continued the judge, I may forget you next time, I have so many cases. When you do come again, Coon, just remind me, will you?"

"Ah didn' come dis time, suh. Dey brung me up heah! Yes, suh!"

Forfeits Bond

Jule S. Pendergrass, 50, white, forfeited a bond of $100 when he failed to appear in recorder's court Monday to answer to a charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Police are looking for Pendergrass.

Holt Awards Made To Seven Students

The Holt scholarship awards for this year have been awarded by the committee on the Holt fund to the following students: W. R. Curtis and W. F. Owen, seniors; G. D. Caraway, junior; D. M. Carmichael and M. D. Matthews, sophomores; and V. R. Adams and R. V. Hamilton, freshmen.

These scholarships, which are for the amount of $125 each, are maintained from the income from the Holt loan fund, established in 1920, by Lawerence S. Holt, Jr. They are awarded by the committee on the Holt fund to a member of each of the four classes in the academic department.

The scholarships were divided this year because there was a large group of applicants for each one.

K. A.s Win 46-18

Kappa Alpha ran up a score of 46 to 18 on the Chi Phis yesterday afternoon. Wells, star forward for K. A., made an individual score of 24 points. Abels led Chi Phi with 10 points and played a good game on defense.

New Auto Firm

Clarence Yarber, who has been in the employ of Strowd Motor Co. for some time, and Clarence Sturdivant, who was formerly in the merchantile business in Carrboro, have purchased the Pendergrass Garage in Carrboro.

The new firm will operate under the name of Yarber and Sturdivant's garage and will specialize in a service station business and general repairing. The partners later hope to take on the agency for a popular make of car.

SENTENCE IS SUSPENDED BY JUDGE C. P. HINSHAW

Pete Thompson, colored, was arrested last week by officers who found a 10-gallon still in merry operation in his bedroom.

Pete explained to Judge C. P. Hinshaw of the Chapel Hill recorder's court that high blood pressure and a generally bad physical condition necessitated the internal use of quantities of alcohol, and denied the sale of any of it.

"Six months on the road," said the Judge, but after a former employer of Pete, now livingin Chatham, had interceded in the negro's behalf, the sentence was suspended for two years, provided Pete leave Orange county on or before next Monday and not return during the two years.

SLEEP COSTS $5

Iley Cardin, 25, white, played for a country dance one night last week. He left the dance hall at midnight, and, although the evening was cold, he lay down beside the highway and slept far into the next morning. He was arrested, charged with drunkenness, and sentenced yesterday by Judge C. P. Hinshaw to pay $5 and costs.

At the same time Will Moore, 40, white, of Carrboro, was fined $10 and costs, amounting to a total of $28, for possession of a pint of whiskey.

Negro Gets Extra Month For Drinking

Frank Minor, 30, colored, was convicted in November of operating a whiskey still, and at that time was given a four months' sentence on the road by the local recorder's court. Because his wife had a two weeks' old baby, however, the sentence was deferred until April.

Last week he was found by officers who alleged that he was inebriated. He was sentenced Monday to an additional month on the road, which was to be served concurrently with the former sentence, and both to begin at once.

Chi Psi Wins Close One

Chi Psi defeated Sigma Zeta yesterday in a fast, lively struggle, 21-17. The outcome of the game was in doubt until the final whistle blew. Both teams worked well, but the shooting of Campbell for Chi Psi turned the tide in its favor. Parks was high man for the losing team.

TOO MANY QUART JARS GETS NEGRO ON ROADS

Bob Jeff Strowd, 45, colored, who, police claim, is an old offender, was sentenced to serve four months on the county chain gang for illegal possession of intoxicants, when he appeared Monday morning before Judge C. P. Hinshaw of the Chapel Hill recorder's court.

The negro's contention that he kept the liquor for a sick mother-in-law, and that nearly 100 quart jars, all of which smelled of whiskey, were some he had picked up "on de road" and intended to sell,'fo' fi' cents apiece," failed to impress the judge and failed to win a reduction in the sentence.

The program of the junior-senior cabinet was first taken up with a little business. The cabinet decided to give its approval of the project of the Phi and Di literary societies to invite the students of Duke over here to an open forum discussion with the Carolina students. This discussion is to take place Tuesday night, February 24, and will deal with and point toward an improvement of the Carolina-Duke relations. After announcement of the state Y convention at Charlotte tomorrow was made, the cabinet selected delegates to go to this convention. An announcement was also made concerning the deputation team that is to go to Fayetteville this week-end. Speakers were selected for this trip.

Mr. Comer, speaking on the psychological aspects of sex relations, pointed out that the Y. M. C. A. should set up certain standards in this matter and be guided by these standards.

R. B. House, executive secretary of the University, spoke to the freshmen on some of the teachings in the Sermon on the Mount. He began by remarking on the attendance of the cabinet at this meeting. "I am wondering," continued the speaker, "just what ideas you fellows are making." He was interested especially in the opinions that the boys were forming of the Y work.

PHILADELPHIA SCHOOLS TO STAY NON-SECTARIAN

Philadelphia, Feb. 17.—(IP)—The local board of education has discarded a proposal that high school students here be released from classes one hour each week to receive religious instruction.

The plan was rejected on the ground that it is not in harmony with the fundamental principles of the American government concerning the separation of church and state.

"The action suggested is impracticable," the board's report read, "by reason of its interference with discipline and with the roster of education.

"Moreover it is objectionable because of its tendency to divide public schools into sectarian groups."

PLAYERS PRAISED ON WINTER TOUR

Carolina Playmakers Received With Enthusiasm In Appearance In Spartanburg.

The Carolina Playmakers, now on tour through North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, have been received with enthusiasm at their first few performances. Friday night they appeared at Albemarle, N. C., and the next night at Spartanburg. Last night they played at Atlanta.

The critic for the Spartanburg Herald characterized Gertrude Wilson Coffin's comedy "Magnolia's Man" as "the most natural interpretation of western North Carolina mountaineers yet offered." Mrs. Coffin's acting in the role of Mis' Tish, the village dressmaker, was highly praised.

Holmes Bryson was rated as the star of "The No 'Count Boy," Paul Green's fantastic comedy of negro life. In the role of an imaginative negro minstrel he won favor by numerous songs on his harmonica.

Hubert Heffner was lauded by the critic for his work as the mill hand in Loretto Carroll Bailey's play "Black Water," a sequel to "Job's Kinfolks," and for his interpretation of the widower in "Magnolia's Man."

An editorial in the Spartanburg Herald on the Playmakers said of the organization, "Their work shows a finish and an artistic touch in text and interpretation as they perfect their art in the portrayal of the folks we know so well in this part of the country.

"Mrs. Loretto Carroll Bailey in her own plays 'Job's Kinfolks' and 'Black Water' is classical in her character and supported by a cast that contributes to the sketch fine talents.

"It is a delightfully refreshing field in which the Playmakers are laboring."

The tour will end with a performance at Rocky Mount on February 26.

WM. J. COCKE, JR. WINS HIGH HONOR

Carolina Alumnus Becomes Associated With Root, Clark, Buckner, And Ballantine Law Firm.

William J. Cocke, Jr., of the class of '25, of Asheville, recently accepted an invitation to become associated with Elihu Root's law firm of Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, one of the most outstanding law firms of the English speaking world.

Mr. Cocke returned to the United States last fall following three years spent in the study of law in Merton College, Oxford University, England. He went there as a Rhodes scholar following his graduation from the University with highest honors.

The Asheville boy, for he is still yet a boy, being only 24 years old, won second honors at Oxford, a distinction that is accorded to few of the 4000 or more students in attendance at the English institution. He was recently called to the English bar and is now an English barrister and a member of Gray's Inn, a position which entitles him, by a recent decision, to the privilege of practicing law in New York state without going through the formality of an examination.

The Root law firm has offices in New York, London and Paris. It was while in New York and Paris that Mr. Cocke met members of the Root firm. They became so impressed with him and his record as a student at the University and at Oxford that the invitation to become associated with them resulted.

Mr. Cocke entered Oxford three years ago. Two years later, in June, 1928, he won his degree of bachelor of arts in jurisprudence, taking second honors. Because of the record he made as a student, he was given the privilege of pursuing his studies toward the degree of bachelor of civil law, which he obtained this past June.

As a rule, law students in England study three years at a University and then attend the Inns of Court for three years before being called to the bar. Mr. Cocke, however, not only took the regular Oxford examinations in law but the examinations given by the Inns of Court, which were held over a period of three years. In other words, Mr. Cocke did in three years what it usually takes law students in England six years to accomplish. He was so successful in his examinations in the Inns of Court that he became an "utter barrister," a position next to King's Counsel.

Before going to Oxford, he spent five years at the University of North Carolina. He took four years of academic work, receiving the degree of A. B., and a year in law. While an undergraduate student he was president of Phi Beta Kappa, president of the student body, and Golden Fleece.

DISCRIMINATION IN TAX LAWS IS SUBJECT ARTICLE

John H. Anderson Writes In Law Review On Advantages Of Incorporating Business Elsewhere.

That it is advantageous from a taxation viewpoint to incorporate North Carolina enterprises outside the state is the subject of an interesting study of corporation taxes contained in the February issue of the North Carolina Law Review.

The discussion opens with a statement that promoters deliberately select the state in which they will incorporate their businesses because of lack of uniformity of state laws in respect to taxation. Naturally the state with the most favorable tax laws gets most of the corporations. The author of the discussion, John H. Anderson, Jr., demonstrates his conclusions by charts which indicate the actual amount of taxes payable by representative enterprises incorporated in North Carolina, Arizona, Delaware, Florida, Maine, Maryland, Nevada or New Jersey, the states being selected because of low tax rates, scope of corporate powers allowed or the liability of corporation laws. Maryland and Florida have the lowest figures on the chart. There is a discussion of two subjects of the greatest interest to corporations, the taxation of intangible property of foreign corporations, of the theory of "business situs" and the taxation of domestic corporations on the basis of the "corporate excess," that is, the excess of the market value of capital stock outstanding over the assessed value of other taxable property of the corporation. These matters present enormous difficulties and there are apparent discriminations in the law and variations in the practices of tax assessors.

Mr. Anderson concludes his article as follows: "Although the figures submitted in the accompanying charts are of course not wholly accurate and are subject to adjustment for specific cases (and while the advantage shown would be less or even negligible for small companies), the investigation establishes the following general conclusions: The North Carolina enterprise doing its entire business within the state may realize substantial economy through foreign incorporation insofar as local taxation of intangibles of foreign corporations is not attempted and as the corporate excess tax is enforced against domestic corporations. In addition, the tax upon net earnings attributable to business without the state to business without the state may be avoided through foreign incorporation where such foreign business is within states not taxing corporate net incomes. Comparisons of less substantial powers appear from the tables. From a public point of view, the possibility of complications upon insolvency, receivership and litigation make it desirable that North Carolina tax laws be more nearly equal to those of other states to the end that the company whose practical business head-offices and plant are in the state be also domiciled here."

Edgar W. Knight Says Teachers Are Managers Biggest Business

Under the title "Our Teachers: Managers of Our Biggest Business," Professor Edgar W. Knight, of the School of Education, has an article in the current issue of the Outlook and Independent on public school superintendents of the United States, who are holding at the end of this week their annual convention, in Atlantic City. After pointing out some of the criticisms often heard of these public school managers Knight says:

"The critics should turn their eyes to Atlantic City the last week in February when that popular resort will welcome to its convention halls and board walk the annual meeting of the largest and probably the most influential body of educational workers the world has ever known. Few of them have ever taken or ever could take first prizes as bathing beauties or glorious Apollos, although some of them are not lacking in showmanship. But en masse they are an impressive body. Most of them appear to be tireless in industry and intelligent in leadership, some are almost apostolic in fervor, and many of them seem to be marked by a quiet willingness to be forgotten.

"In outward appearances they do not differ markedly from the members of other national organizations which hold annual conventions, whether they are religious or secular, learned or unlearned, bond or free, ecclesiastical or merely political in character. Few of the delegates have the lean and hungry look of Cassius, but on the contrary seem to sleep well o'nights, although they and perhaps a few others may believe that they are addicted to much thinking.

"They laugh not inordinately—although they have seen many funny things in their day. They are cheerful of countenance, their hearts made merry by the happiness of the millions of children who troop at their call.

"Most of them are modish in haberdashery, as well as in pedagogy, and otherwise prosperous looking, if occasionally some do appear to lapse momentarily into pagan ways. A respectable majority smell delightfully of tobacco. They swap anecdotes and stories, carefully collected from the four corners of the profession and presently to be made current among the laity in the provinces by way of Rotary and the Lions; and in the exchange, the art of pedagogical exactness almost always runs high while that of suggestion may sometimes run low. They tip dining car waiters with liberality and eclat, as delegates to conventions of the Bottlers' Association or the Tax Dodgers' League, and are kind to the Pullman porter, usually yclept George.

"A keen observer can easily discover, even unaided by the show of watch charms and breastplates, that many of them pay homage to illustrious potentates and semiannual dues to grand keepers of exchequers. In this respect the school workers are not unlike thirty millions of their fellow adults who have esoteric mystic knowledge gained by membership in one or more of the several hundred mystic societies. But whether the school superintendent is tip-

STRONG SPEAKS ON GOSPLAN TO TAYLOR SOCIETY

"Long-Range Economics Planning In Russia" Assured. By Economics Professor.

"Long-Range Economic Planning in Russia" was the subject of a talk given before the University branch of the Taylor Society last night by Professor E. D. Strong of the school of commerce and economics.

In his talk Professor Strong described the organization of economic activity in Russia under which practically every phase of production, distribution and consumption of economic goods is controlled by the direction of a central commission which plans the country's activities for several years in advance.

To show that governmental control of economic activity is not entirely outside the realm of possibility, the speaker presented a summary of the results of the first two short periods of communistic control. Under the direction of a central commission which planned all activity, Russia far exceeded the expectations of the planners and the entire plan had to be cast aside and another embodying greater objectives was adopted.

Communism came to Russia at the worst possible time, stated Professor Strong, for immediately after the war, production was at its low ebb, there were no trained leaders and the manpower of the country was depleted. Under this plan, however, he said, the condition of Russia has steadily improved, and a practical reconstruction is taking place.

Under the centralized control by which 50 per cent of the basic capital and 80 per cent of the industry is governed, it is possible for the group in authority to plan ahead, making preparations to meet all requirements for the execution of the

PHI VINDICATES ACTIVITIES OF Y

The Philanthropic Assembly, at its regular meeting last night, defeated the resolution "Resolved: That the University Y. M. C. A. is not performing its necessary functions on the campus" by a margin of one vote. The ballot of the members of the assembly resulted in a deadlock, and Speaker John Lang voted against the resolution. Several recounts were necessary before the exact vote was determined. Representatives Montgomery and Carr favored the resolution. The opposition was led by Representatives Greer, Vann, McDuffie, and Kornegay.

Speaker Lang read a resolution which he proposed be sent to the Dialectic Senate in regard to the invitation of the Duke societies to be held Tuesday. A letter from the president of the debate council concerning the appointment of a representative from the assembly on the council was read. Speaker Lang appointed Representative Hamilton Hobgood to the position for the coming year. The speaker named a committee to be composed of Representatives Baldwin, Carr, Hobgood, Speight and Yarborough to meet with a committee from the Di Senate and discuss the joint session.

A THOUGHT A DAY

Washington was one of the most experienced and skillful liars that ever lived.—Rupert Hughes.

More Restrictions Upon Graduation

At a recent meeting the faculty executive committee passed another ruling limiting graduation from the University. For several years the administration has been endeavoring to raise the standards of work here. The first definite step in this direction was the initiation of comprehensive examinations in the major field selected by the student, and now an even more drastic regulation has been adopted.

According to the latest ruling, "To be eligible for graduation a student must secure the grade of "C" or higher on at least half of his courses." We are in complete accord with the expressed desire of the administration to raise the scholastic standards, but we are not in sympathy with the methods the faculty executive committee has chosen.

All of the committee's efforts thus far have been directed toward limitation of graduation, rather than raising of entrance requirements or restrictions upon undergraduate scholastic work. Under the present regulations, a student may actually flunk a large percentage of his subjects, continue in school for five or more years, and then be informed that he cannot graduate even though he has passed the required number of courses.

In our opinion it would be far more desirable for the University and the students if those who are not capable of graduating in a reasonable length of time were informed of the fact in their freshman, sophomore or junior years and requested to leave school. They would be saved years of comparatively useless effort and great expense, which they could employ far more beneficially at some technical school or in actual and remunerative business experience, while the scholastic standards of the University would be raised considerably more than by restrictions upon graduation.

Enjoying Our Leisure At Afternoon Teas

In his talk at the sophomore smoker Thursday night Mr. Bob House suggested that the question of what to do with her leisure is more important to America today than the arms conference. We cannot spend our leisure gracefully and enjoyably as the English seem to do. We must always be rushing somewhere, to the picture show, off for the week-end, to a dance, or to any place where there is something going on without once thinking whether we are enjoying ourselves or not. We cannot have a "big time" in a gathering where conversation is the only amusement.

As an aid to the present situation Mr. House suggested that we should learn to drink tea in the English manner, not for any nourishment, but merely as a gesture. Indeed the traditional English afternoon tea appeals to our mind as an enviable custom that might well be cultivated here. But who would be so bold as to invite his friends to his room in the afternoon for tea? One would probably be laughed at and made sport of at first; if the custom could once get started it should prove popular.

But that brings in another problem; a gathering where one did nothing but drink tea would be immensely boring; one must have conversation, and Americans are notoriously "dumb" at conversation. When the average person has asked about your health, commented on the weather, and told his latest troubles, he is through; any efforts to talk about other things are usually "flat."

However, in a college community such as ours where a large part of the students are apparently alive to the happenings of the day, fairly intelligent, and able to talk well, we should find abundant opportunity for the promotion of afternoon teas and the development of the art of conversation. If someone with an ability at sparkling wit, grace in receiving, and the courage to be unconventional should start a "salon" with afternoon teas and conversation for entertainment, we predict that they would be successful and popular. The possibilities of enjoying oneself at such gatherings are unlimited.—J. D. McN.

A Matter Of Injustice

It is a justifiable generalization that youth is heedlessly cruel and quick to give pain. Young men and young women often carelessly say and write and do things that they know will wound another, and go their way without the slightest qualm. Fortunately, as one grows older his readiness to thrust poisoned stings usually fades with the passing years.

That impetuous youngsters should do this sort of thing is no doubt natural and unavoidable, but it is deplorable that each year the senior class of a university should calmly, even gleefully, and as a parliamentary body under official sanction, indulge in the unkind sport of wounding someone's feelings. We are speaking of that worse than useless practice of annually electing a member of the graduating class to be known as "biggest nut." Not only is the victim of this spurious distinction so proclaimed at the senior smoker, and his name published in the newspapers as that of the biggest nut, but a picture of him labeled as a likeness of the class' biggest nut is placed in the college yearbook.

Adding to the injustice of such a procedure is the fact that the student chosen by his fellows to be so branded is usually a man of utmost sincerity and straightforwardness of purpose, rather than a "nut." Quite often he is a man of unusual ability who, by his outspokenness, or by his very prominence on the campus, has become a potential victim of political intrigue.

Some say it is all fun, just a joke; but the people who read the newspapers and scan the annual have no way of knowing that it's in fun. The year-book, as has been pointed out in these columns before, is a cherished record of each senior's college life. Why should one particular member of the class, through no fault of his own, be made to feel ashamed to show this record to his friends, or to allow it to reach the hands of his posterity?

For a class to proclaim openly and officially a name as being that of the biggest nut among them is, no matter how false the charge, not only humiliating to the man so stigmatized, but it is a slur upon the integrity of the whole class. The practice of including such a designation in the list of senior superlatives is certainly undesirable, if not actually vicious, and if there is any earthly reason why it should be promulgated in the Yackety Yack we fail to see it. —J. J.

Readers' Opinions

MR. HUGHES IS DEFENDED

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Under the initials B. M., one of your assistant editors writes a condemnation of Charles E. Hughes based on unsound reasoning and false analogy.

B. M. begins his indictment by admitting that Mr. Hughes has served in a long list of official positions that would seem to particularly qualify him for his present appointment. I would like to add that he has served in these positions in a manner that redounds to his credit. B. M. also admits that from the standpoint of purely legal qualifications Mr. Hughes is most eminently qualified for his new position. Why then should a man who is perhaps the nation's leading lawyer, who will rank among the most able of the country's secretaries of state, whose entire record of public service has been characterized by conspicuous brilliance (I refer B. M. to the statements of no less a personage than Al Smith, a consistent political enemy of Mr. Hughes, concerning the Chief Justice's services to the state of New York) who has served before on the very court to which he is now being appointed, who is a jurist who has not only a national but an international reputation, why should the nomination of such a man not meet with the approval of the most rabid of partisans?

B. M. in denouncment of Mr. Hughes falls inevitably back on the props of Democracy, oil, and reconstruction; if he had mentioned the negro the Trinity would have been complete.

Let us examine the first of the reasons that according to our friend of the Tar Heel incapacitates Mr. Hughes for his appointment. Mr. Hughes is charged with being aware of the corruption of the Harding Cabinet and of not denouncing it. If we are to credit Fall and Co. with the least grain of sense, it is quite obvious that the Cabinet as a whole had no knowledge of bribery. Of course, Hughes knew that the leasing of the oil fields was unwise. However, it was matter quite out of his province, a matter about the real merits of which he could have no more than a layman's knowledge (the crime of leasing the fields was at first apparent only to those who were familiar with the fields themselves), a matter for information about which he had to rely on Fall himself. Hughes was at that time a very busy man. The Department of State was arranging a naval conference, and was also ingaged in the herculean task of adjusting our relations with Latin America. He would have had no time to attempt an investigation of the affairs of the Department had he either the ethical right or the means of doing so, neither of which he possessed . It was only after a very searching investigation by men working on the spot that the facts became apparent. Had Hughes been acquainted with all the facts of the case, an obvious impossibility, he could with honor have revealed nothing as long as he was in the Cabinet and he, as well as everyone else, knew that his presence there was imperative.

As for the charge that his conduct in resigning from the Court to run for the Presidency incapacitates him, and as for his comparison with "Reconstruction" Chase, the charge is without solid foundation, and the comparison lacking in validity.

Is it a crime to run for President of the United States? The greatest men we have produced thought it a position of honor and trust to which every citizen ought theoretically to aspire. It is certainly the position of greatest usefulness open to men in public life. When one of the two great parties tenders the nomination to a distinguished citizen, it is his duty to his country, if he believes himself fit, to accept. Hughes believed that immediate war was for the best interests of his country; that was the issue of the campaign. Doubly it was his duty to accept.

Chase used his office to attempt to gain the favor that would procure him the nomination. While he was Chief Justice he campaigned for office. He attended political conventions, and identified himself with factions. That is what we condemn about Chase. Had he resigned from his office, as did Hughes, to make his attempt for the Presidency, his course would have been honorable. Because Mr. Hughes quit his judicial position to run for president, B. M. says that it is evident that he has no regard for law, and that he is simply a filthy politician. If men like Washington, the Adamses, Jackson, Jefferson, Lincoln, Wilson, etc., were office seeking politicians, then it would be well if we were to look for material for our courts of "justice" among the ward heelers of Chicago and New York.

Hoefer To Talk To Freshman Engineers Today At 12 O'clock

Professor E. G. Hoefer, head of the department of mechanical engineering, will speak to all freshman engineering students at 12 o'clock today. Mr. Hoefer spoke to the freshman engineers last week, and his talk today will be a continuation of the subject begun last week.

The talk by Professor Hoefer is one of the series of orientation and motivation talks that are being presented to the freshmen by the heads of the departments of the school of engineering in an effort to acquaint the students with the scope of the work included in each branch of engineering represented in the school.

The campus is all attention waiting to see just what Howard Mumford Jones' new hat is like. Some say that it's a replica of a pirate boat, others that it is a Lindbergh Hat—being a duplication in felt or other material of Lindbergh's airplane. Still others swear that it was designed by the best Newark designers with the intention of immortalizing in felt the Lost Cause.

And here I've been thinking that it was my halitosis that kept me from being popular. I haven't been able to get any but my Stetson "D" pressed this year, and as for clean shirts since I've been using the laundry I've been using the blue shirts and they never get dirty anyway.

Man seeks to clothe himself not to protect himself from the winds, and predatory animals but more from a decorative and creative instinct. There is something fine about a great handsome fellow accurately dressed for an afternoon tea with the Vanderbilts; i.e., spats, morning trousers of pearl gray, cream vest, and tuxedo.

Oh! Oh! Oh! Have you heard about the new perfumes for men. They are just simply stunning. There is "Musk" for the out-of-doors men. "A La Chicago" for ranchmen. And "Forget-me-not" for the society men.

N. Y. CRITIC LAUDS LATEST PRESS BOOK

(By E. C. Daniel, Jr.)

The New York Times Book Review carried Sunday a review by T. R. Ybarra, himself a South American historian of note, which acclaims The Life of Miranda by William Spence Robertson, latest release of the University Press, as a biography of the very first rank. "It is not too much to say," declares Mr. Ybarra, "that Professor Robertson's new life of Miranda will easily leap to first place among all books about the great South American adventurer and apostle of liberty; not one of the works written up to now about him—so far as the present reviewer is aware—equals it in scope and depth of research."

In the beginning of his critique Mr. Ybarra calls attention to the fact that "behind Professor Robertson's book about that veritable romance of history lies a veritable romance of research." Continuing thereupon, the reviewer relates the fascinating story surrounding the discovery of the ancient personal documents of Miranda in the library of the Bathurst family of England. There has previously appeared in these columns a group of excerpts from Dr. Robertson's personal account of his search for these valuable papers, wherein it was stated that "it is to the discovery of the lost archives of Francisco Miranda that much of the authenticity and vivid realism of The Life of Miranda is due."

Be that as it may, Dr. Robertson valued his find enough to conclude that the discovery of these documents warranted the complete rewriting of Miranda's career, with the excellent result of which Mr. Ybarra writes in such complimentary phrases.

After tracing briefly the adventures of Miranda, of whom Dr. Robertson speaks as "Precursor, Knight-Errant and Promoter of Spanish American liberty," the Times critic turns to a consideration of the author's success in so vividly and honestly exploiting the almost unlimited possibilities of his subject matter: "Such a career offers dazzling opportunities to a biographer and Professor Robertson has not missed them. . . . There is such a wealth of detail that the course of the narrative is slowed up on almost every page. Nevertheless, Professor Robertson has an easy style and a sense of the dramatic.

"Miranda's latest biographer proves himself again and again a cool, impartial judge. . . . He makes no attempt to conceal or palliate the damaging evidence against Miranda, on which other biographers—and, it may be said, most students of South American history—have based their charges of incompetence and even cowardice and treason against the ill-fated adventurer.

"Similarly, in the matter of the arrest of Miranda by Bolivar and other Venezuelan patriots . . . Professor Robertson . . . by no means exonerates the latter at the expense of the man chosen by destiny to succeed where Miranda failed. . . . He is equally conscientious as regards Bolivar."

And again returning to discuss the use of the documentary material found in the archives of Miranda: "Throughout his book Professor Robertson makes copious use of the immensely valuable Miranda documents which he unearthed after a century of oblivion in England."

Tar Heels Show New Form In Trouncing Wake Forest Quint 37-15 In Slow Game

Tom Alexander Leads Carolina Scorers With 11 Points; Edwards Gets 7.

MILLS LEADS DEACONS

University Five Takes Lead Early In Contest; On Top 22-6 At Half-Way Mark; Ashmore Uses Many Substitutes.

Carolina's rejuvenated team took a slow, uneventful game from Wake Forest last night to the tune of 37-15. The score at the end of the half was 22-6.

Wake Forest scored first, R. Edwards dropping in a goal within the first half minute. P. Edwards scored first for Carolina and was followed by Alexander, Carolina taking the lead. The rest of the half was all Carolina, with Alexander leading the attack. Mills' field goal and foul and Jones' free throw accounted for Wake Forest's remaining four points during the half.

The second half opened slowly with Marpet sinking the first goal after two minutes of play. Alexander followed with two free throws, making the score 26-6. At the end of four minutes Allen accounted for one of Wake Forest's two field goals during the half. Practically all of the Carolina team scored during the half. Marpet led the scoring with three points. Nearly half the points scored in this period came as a result of fouls.

Frosh To Meet State

After dropping a 5-2 decision to the Oak Ridge boxers, the Tar Baby team will take on the State College R. O. T. C. mitmen Thursday night in the Frank Thompson gymnasium in Raleigh.

As State College does not recognize boxing as an intercollegiate sport, the meet will be more on an exhibition than an athletic event between the two institutions. The show is being held to indicate the amount of interest in boxing as an intercollegiate sport in the Raleigh school, but will be held under the regular Southern Conference regulations, with seven fights being held, each of three two-minute rounds.

Boxing at State is in charge of Cadet Major John Lepo, 1929 captain of football. In the last few weeks about 25 men have been trying out for the team, and the seven men to fight will probably be chosen soon.

Coach Sapp has not announced the team but will probably fight pretty nearly the same team that went against the Oak Ridgers, who are: 125 pounds, Levinson; 135 pounds, Lumpkin; 145 lbs., Jackson; 165 lbs., Patterson; 175 pounds, Landis; unlimited, Miller. Gaylord may get the call in the 135 pound as might Wilson in the heavy, or Gray in the 125 pound class.

S. I. C. SPORTS

(By Browning Roach)

After the noise and shouting of Saturday's games have all quieted down, we find two teams perched serenely on top of the conference heap, undefeated and unchallenged for leadership—Alabama and Washington and Lee. The Generals stole a march on the Alabama boys by toppling over two victims while Alabama got but one, and bringing their totals to nine in the win column.

Both victims of Washington and Lee are members of the northern sector of the conference. Virginia fell before the Generals Thursday night 36 to 34, and Maryland took the count 36 to 21. The Generals entertain the tough Duke five at Lexington tomorrow, and although the Blue Devils fell before the onslaught of "Big Boy" Williams and his teammates early in the season, it is problematical whether they will submit again.

Alabama kept pace with Washington and Lee and boosted its total of victories to nine at the expense of the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets whom it defeated at Tuscaloosa Wednesday night 36 to 28.

Kentucky, Duke and Tennessee retained their positions in third, fourth and fifth places, with Kentucky trimming Georgia 36 to 23, Duke taking in South Carolina 53 to 26 and North Carolina 37 to 36, while the Vols were satisfied with their 6-2 standing and remained idle.

Georgia's loss to Kentucky and Sewanee's victory over Vandy caused these two teams to exchange positions in the conference rankings. Georgia dropped back to seventh place and surrendered the next round above to Sewanee.

Clemson and Florida made the greatest forward progress last week. The Tigers clawed through the 'Gators, on successive nights 33-28 and 47-20 and then tucked Georgia Tech under 40-26 to move from 12th place up to ninth. The 'Gators, despite the double loss to Clemson and a lone 40-17 victory over South Carolina, rose from 22nd to 14th place in the standings.

N. C. State clamped a tighter hold on eighth place by a close win over North Carolina Tuesday 28 to 26. Carolina also dropped a close one to Duke 37 to 36 and slipped down a couple of notches in the rankings.

In other conference games, Ole Miss and Mississippi Aggies divided a double engagement, Auburn took a pair of beatings from Tulane, and Maryland outpointed V. M. I. and V. P. I. but fell before Washington and Lee.

Team standings:

TEAM	W.	L.	PCT.
Alabama	9	0	1.000
W. and L.	9	0	1.000
Kentucky	8	1	.889
Duke	7	1	.875

Frosh Get Revenge For Former Defeat

The Tar Babies, flashing a strong offense, overwhelmed the Wake Forest Baby Deacons 26-18 in a rough contest in the Tin Can last night. Last month the Tar Babies lost a tough game to the Deacons, but their fine playing last night completely baffled the visitors.

The Tar Babies got off to an early lead and were never headed, flashing a fine offense and defense.

Joe Dunn, forward, and "Stud" Henry, guard, were the bright lights in the Carolina victory. "Stud" was all over the floor, keeping the Deacon forwards in check and scoring 4 points, while Dunn played a great game at forward, garnering 5 markers. Barnes played a sterling game for the losers.

The lineup:

Carolina (26)		W. F. (18)
Dunn (5)		Bost
	R. F.
Hines (5)		Barnes (4)
	L. F.
Beale (6)		Joyner (8)

Lineberger		Earp (4)

Substitutions: for Carolina—Connor (2), Markham (4); for Wake Forest—Barham, Green, Gardner (2).

Referee: Goodwin (State).

"TENNESSEE" TO TRY TO CONQUER "GEORGIA" TODAY

Bulldogs Fighting To Maintain Clean Slate During Winter Football Season.

KENAN STADIUM 4:00 P. M.

The crack "Georgia" squad meets "Tennessee" in Kenan stadium here this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the seventh of the Tar Heels' winter grid battles. The former will be fighting to carry on its undefeated record, and the latter will be struggling to climb up and out of its lowly cellar post.

In last week's games the "Bulldogs" ran their string of victories to three by a 13-0 win over "Georgia Tech." Little Johnny Branch was the big hero that day, wriggling and squirming his way to a total gain of 150 yards.

"Tennessee" put up a valiant struggle but fell before the onslaught of "Virginia," 6-0, on the margin of a 15-yard pass, Magner to Slusser, followed by a 55-yard sprint by the latter speed-merchant.

The "Bulldogs" will again pin their hopes of victory on their wrecking crew of backs. The varsity trio of Branch, Nash and House, with the freshman Croom, have run roughshod over all opposition in three preceding games. Line strength promises to be very nearly even, but "Georgia" should have an edge once more on backfield power.

"Tennessee" will present a rookie backfield that has shown especial power via the aerial route. Moore, quarter, and McAlister, fullback, were varsity reserves last fall, and Halfbacks Chandler and Daniels were among the best of the freshman backs.

The five-week grid season will close two short weeks hence, and interest is rising high already in the forthcoming annual feature between the Monograms and the Rookies, to be played Saturday, March 8.

During the history of Princeton University, five members of the faculty have served a half century or more with the University.

Weeks Leads Theta Chi

Theta Chi won an easy victory over Phi Alpha yesterday afternoon by the score of 38 to 13. The game was one-sided and uninteresting.

Weeks led the scoring for Theta Chi with 14 points, while Minsker led the opposition with five markers.

Neiman Loses Mustache

David "Weasel" Neiman, Carolina's versatile forward, appeared on the floor last night minus an old standby—his mustache. When the "Weasel" was asked about it, he said that he wished to change his luck, but judging by the great ball he has been playing it doesn't seem as if he needs anything to change his luck. "Weasel" scored 17 points against Duke last Saturday and played a great game last night against Wake Forest.

Fencing Notice

Because of the basketball game this evening, H. H. Hendlin, director of fencing, will not interview those interested in the sport at the scheduled hour but will see them immediately after the game at 313 Old East. Students from the following dormitories and fraternities will be interviewed at that time: Steele, Old East, Old West, Carr, Mangum, S. A. E., D. K. E., Phi Gamma Delta, Zeta Psi, Phi Delta Chi, S. P. E. and A. T. O.

Old Liners Won In First Contest With University Quintet 34-26.

HARPER WILL BE OUT.

Battle Of Centers Will Be Missing In Clash Between Teams Tonight; Edwards To Play.

The Tar Heel quint will take on one of the strongest teams in the conference when Maryland comes to the Tin Can tonight at 8:30 o'clock.

In a previous meeting at College Park, Maryland crashed through with a great last-half comeback to trounce the Tar Heels 34-26. That measure of hospitality the Tar Heels will attempt to repay in kind tonight.

In the way of comparative scores, Maryland lost to State and Duke by two-point margins. Carolina beat State by two points once and lost to the Wolves by two points in a second game, while losing two to Duke by 35-14 and 37-36.

The previous Maryland victory over the Tar Heels came on the margin of great work at center by "Bozie" Berger. Berger held Harper to a single foul shot, was all over the court leading his team's offense and defense, and managed to ring 11 points himself.

The Berger-Harper duel at center will not be repeated tonight. Harper is out with a sprained ankle sustained in the Duke game. John Edwards, lanky substitute, will get his try at stopping the rangy star, who rates with the South's best.

Carolina will probably start Dameron and Neiman, forwards; Edwards, center; and Marpet and Brown, guards.

Maryland's starting lineup will probably show Radice and Chalmers, forwards; Berger, center; and Taylor and Heagy, guards.

Heidelburg Frosh Play Basket-Ball Under New Rules

Tiffin, Ohio, Feb. 17.—(IP)—Heidelberg college freshmen tried out the new Sayger basketball rules, originated by Herman Sayger, coach of the college, here recently. The Reds defeated the Blacks, 69 to 55, in a wild game full of passing and basket-making.

The new rules eliminated the center tip-off, the ball being played in from the sidelines and allowed the two teams to shoot at either basket. The game was played in sixths, with three five-minute periods in each half.

In an exhibition game played later, a similar game resulted.

Chi Phi Wins 21-19

Chi Phi topped Kappa Sigma yesterday afternoon by two points, 21-19. Bagby, Kappa Sig, was high scorer with 9 points. Abel as usual was the star for Chi Phi, coming second with 8. The score was close all the way through. Kappa Sigma led at the half, 10-9.

J. M. Davis, 25, white, gave a worthless check to Sol Lipman, Chapel Hill tailor, 22 months ago and left town. Last week he returned. Monday morning he appeared at recorder's court to answer a complaint filed against him.

The case was continued until next week and Davis is at liberty under a bond of $25.

Midnight Wagon Ride Of State College Boys Stopped By Prof.

Raleigh, Feb. 17.—(Special)—The midnight wagon ride of a dozen State College students, capping a series of other pranks Wednesday, ended early Thursday morning when police escorted the youths to the police station and a college professor, attired in full evening dress, steered the nag back to her stall in the college barn.

The boys were detained by police for more than an hour. No charges were lodged against the midnight rovers.

About midnight the group rattled off the campus explaining to passers-by that they intended to ride uptown and back. They were overtaken by a student employee of the Animal Husbandry Department, who instructed the boys to drive the outfit back to the campus.

The coachman did an about turn and steered the craft west. Soon they were overtaken again, this time by the police. The officers rode slowly in their car alongside the wagon intent on seeing the horse and wagon safely returned to the barn.

After they had traversed a short distance, R. H. Ruffner, professor of animal husbandry, accosted them. The irate professor demanded that police "lock up the whole bunch." The confusion and the professor dressed in evening clothes were too much for the nervous system of "Old Dobbin." She reared and pitched and threatened to run wildly up the street. All the boys protested absolute ignorance of beasts of burden, none of them willing to take the reins. Professor "Bull" Ruffner himself climbed onto the wagon seat, took the reins and hawed the "old gray mare" back to her stall in the college barn.

The youths were carried or asked to come to police station. One boy walked the full distance, more than a mile. The collegians wise-cracked and joked with policemen while the minions of the law awaited instructions from the professor.

The information came by telephone. Professor Ruffner told the police that the boys not only stole the college horse, but turned the cows out of the pasture as well. Later he again called, instructing police that he would file no charge.

At about 2 p. m. the lads, sleepy and tired, wandered back to the campus.

The raid on the college animals followed upon the heels of numerous other pranks. Earlier Wednesday night an airplane over 20 feet long was removed from the highway to the room of Watauga Hall, a machine placed on the second floor, and "State College Gangsters" hung in effigy. Early Wednesday afternoon a coffee pot, ten feet high and six feet in diameter, was hoisted to the roof of Sixth Dormitory.

Graduate Students Of Education Meet

A regular meeting was held last night at 7:30 of the graduate students in education, Dr. Edgar W. Knight presiding. This is the second of such meetings that have been held during the winter quarter. Reports on research work now in progress were made by the students present. Following these reports, Professor M. R. Trabue, director of the bureau of educational research of the school of education, spoke briefly on his work in connection with investigations being conducted by the American Historical Association.

"SALLY" BIGGEST HIT ON BROADWAY, HERE TODAY

"Sally" has conquered Broadway again!

Just as the original musical comedy broke all box office records during its run of two seasons at the New Amsterdam Theatre, so the all-color screen version, with Marilyn Miller starring as she did on the stage, has established itself as the reigning hit of the Greatest Street in the World.

At $2 apiece for reserved seat tickets, "Sally" has been a sell-out at every performance since the world premiere; and it has usually been necessary to make one's reservations a week or two weeks ahead.

"Sally" will be shown at the Carolina today and tomorrow.

It is one of the great satisfactions of the screen that wherever such a picture goes, one is sure to see the original production. There are no "road companies" with second-rate players and wornout scenery and costumes. "Sally," at the Carolina theatre, will be the "Sally" that has swept blase Broadway off its feet—the complete First National and Vitaphone production, in which the dazzling Miss Miller is supported by an all-star cast including such celebrities of stage and screen as Alexander Gray, Joe E. Brown, Pert Kelton, T. Roy Barnes, Jack Duffy and Maude Turner Gordon. Not to mention the huge chorus of girls and men, and the scintillating Albertina Rasch dancers!

Garden And Sketch Clubs Meet Today

Both the Sketch and Garden clubs will hold their regular meetings this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The former will meet as usual with Mrs. W. E. Caldwell, 412 Rosemary lane, while the garden group will meet with Mrs. C. E. Preston at 14 Westwood drive.

In the absence of Dr. J. H. Beaumont of State college who was to have conducted a round table discussion on horticulture, Paul Lindley from the Van Lindley nurseries of Greensboro, will talk to the Garden club on the subject of rock gardens.

Last evening in the social rooms of the Methodist church, Mrs. Raymond Adams, Miss Nora Beust, and Mrs. Urban T. Holmes gave a story-telling program before the literature department of the community club.

Cobb Gives Valuable Volumes To Library

The University has recently received the first two volumes of the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society of London for the year 1845 and 1846.

These volumes were donated to the library by Dr. Collier Cobb of the department of geology, and were formerly the property of Dr. Cobb's grandfather.

The library has long been trying to procure the first two volumes, but due to the scarcity and the costly price the library has not obtained them until now. The set is valued at over $70.

This completes the library's file of this journal.

McINTOSH BACK AT WORK

C. R. McIntosh, executive secretary of the school of education, who was confined to Watts hospital at Durham during the past week-end with an infected eye, returned to Chapel Hill Monday evening and was able to resume his work at his desk Tuesday morning.

Miss Gladys Smith has been added to the Periodical staff of the library.

Sutton's Dog Causes Disturbance In Court

A German police dog is being held in the medical laboratory for observation; on Monday of next week the animal's fate will be announced by Judge C. P. Hinshaw of the Chapel Hill recorder's court. Perhaps it will die. Perhaps it will be sent to a distant farm to live its life in peace and freedom from children who tease it.

The case of Chapel Hill vs. J. L. Sutton, local druggist, attracted much interest in Monday evening's session of the court, held in the Pickwick theatre. Fully a score of Carolina faculty members helped to make up a crowd which filled the courtroom.

E. V. Kyser, pharmacy professor, who lives at 307 Hillsboro street, opposite the Sutton home, testified that Sutton's dog had twice bitten his little girl. The first occasion was nearly a year ago, and the second occurred last week, necessitating four stitches by Dr. E. A. Abernethy in the child's ankle.

Mrs. E. C. Metzenthin, wife of a member of the German department, who lives at 402 Hillsboro street, next door to Sutton, testified that the dog had been friendly with her children, but had taken a dislike to others, notably the Kyser girl. Other testimony elicited the information that the dog, ordinarily kept behind a wire enclosure, was teased often by children.

J. L. Sutton was called to the stand to show cause why he should not be fined $50 for violation of an ordinance which prohibits dogs running at large unless muzzled or under leash, particularly because the offense was a second one.

Dr. E. A. Abernethy showed himself a true dog lover when he admitted the gravity of the situation, but suggested that the animal be sent into the country.

Judge Hinshaw will announce his decision at the next session of the court, 10 a. m. Monday.

Phi Kappa Delta announces the pledging of D. H. Clifton of Faison, L. M. Newlin of Graham and J. H. Van Hoy of Walkertown.

plan it has devised. Through complete control it can plan how a given desired good can be produced, how it will be distributed, and what will be the agency of consumption. It can determine what prices are to be and then by control of the monetary system it can manipulate currency so that the anticipated prices are obtained.

Every agency for production, from the immediate producer to the most minute contributing agent is under the control of the central commission, the "Gosplan," which is thus able to direct Russia's economic activities into the desired fields.

The general policy for the economic agents of Russia for several years is laid out, then yearly plans are made, and finally quarterly and monthly instructions are issued to the smallest units which arrange their programs to conform to the instructions from the central commission.

In contrast with the United States, the speaker showed how it is absolutely impossible for any industrial organization to make a fixed program involving all phases of its activities and then stick to this program. The forces of competition and the inability to judge what the other man will do make this impossible. In Russia, he said, there is no competition, and everything is so controlled that these long range policies are possible.

It is doubtful that any such policy can be applied in this country, Professor Strong stated, "but we can study the results shown by Russia and see what complete economic control will contribute to Russia after a period of several years."

The talk by Professor Strong was one of a series being given before the society by faculty members who are presenting subjects related to management. Other speakers for this quarter are Professor Taylor, who will talk next week, and Dean D. D. Carroll who will speak March 4.

Officers of the Taylor Society state that the meetings of the group are open to the public and that everyone interested in the subjects presented is invited to attend.

Edgar W. Knight Says Teachers Managers Of Our Biggest Business

ping waiter or porter, responding to the plaintive petition of the page who chants the name of Dr. Smith throughout the lobby of the hotel, or ordering breakfast or cracked ice and White Rock or Canada Dry to Room 1620, please, or giving the countersign to a brother from some enchanted realm, his little deeds of kindness and words of love are generally done and said with the dignity of a gentleman, the care of a scholar, and the gentleness of a boy scout.

"Even the slanguage of these schoolmen is kept up to date. They know how 'to wham' the public and move taxpayers to 'put out' in the interest of our boys and girls. They generally know their public, from which cometh their help, and their audiences, from whom they know how to get a hand when needed. This is not to say that the workers in education are less sincere than those in other fields or that they are insincere at all. But 'putting it over' or 'putting it across' has become a favorite expression with public school administrators because it is in reality one of their most necessary chores. The public and even the critics who condemn them demand that their school managers, as their athletic coaches, get results. They must 'click' or they will be 'kissed off' and forced 'to lam' or 'scram' to a place of obscurity and therefore of doubtful usefulness in the educational bush league. Therefore, public school superintendents must be up early and doing. Those who are up earliest and appear to do most, generally have the most tricks and are in most demand. They are the 'biggies,' sneer their ill-wishers; but they know how to get and stay on the 'up and up,' you bet. If they appear to sit with dignity right under the eaves of the Absolute with one educational hemisphere on one shoulder and the other on the other, and to indulge the conceit that they are searching for the Ultimate, it should be kept in mind that the nature of their occupation makes them so.

"One of the jobs of the superintendent is to increase the number of those who look at him as portentous, even though he may know for a certainty that some of them may be seeing through glasses darkly. He may seem to be brutal in aggressiveness and the master of those who blow. But he should be applauded and not condemned. For without pushful school administrators democratic Gilead could not have been blessed with the balm of universal education.

"But it is not intended to give the impression here that all public school superintendents always play by the rules or otherwise represent the best spirit of the profession, nor to deny that a great deal of our public education of all grades and degrees is still homespun. Education, as the other arts, whether black or fine, or the other sciences, whether exact, pseudo, or experimental, has its share of amateurs, dilettantes, medicine men, quacks, charlatans, mountebanks, shysters, buffoons, fatheads, and just plain mediocrities of the backslaping, handshaking, hello pete variety, as well as those who are sadly lacking in intestinal fortitude. Few actors have larger repertories than some of those who strut upon the educational stage. Far too many of them have large chances of impressing the public and of holding for periods entirely too long apparently strong positions as cultural leaders in many communities. In too many places a superintendent who can boast of an alma mater whose reputation is not positively unsavory can hold his place as a public pensioner if he is carefully sheltered by membership in the proper political party, the leading luncheon club, and the men's class in the most forward-looking church; if he manages not to mar every good story in the telling; and if he points at the proper places in his public addresses to a few examples of underprivileged children that have come directly under his observation.

"But with an increse n the tendency of the public towant want an end of uncertainties in educational administration and to prefer superintendents of schools who know much about their business and do it well and with dignity, there appears to be a decrease in those who know little and do even less. Most of the men and women to whom our school system is intrusted are prepared for intelligent educational management, and largely through the direction of such leaders has public education reached its present creditable height and depth and breadth, even though a great deal of it is still rude and too many of those who have charge of it vulgar. It is doubtful, however, if even the critics could stand unmoved in a national assembly of those who have really invested their lives in the public school and witness the intelligence, the faith, and the courage that go into their tasks."

RATAN DEVI WILL PRESENT CONCERT HERE NEXT MONTH

Entertainment Committee To Bring Noted Performer Here March 6 in Swain Hall.

Ratan Devi will give a costume recital of folk songs of the East on March 6 in Swain hall as the next number on the student entertainment program for this quarter.

The artist is an American who married an East Indian and thus has lived quite a while in the East. During her stay there she became interested in the life and folk songs of the people; her knowledge of them has enabled her to sing their songs with an interpretation and sincerity unusual in the West.

Her program offers a variety of songs, including some Kashmiri folk songs and East Indian Ragas. She has added to her program a few exquisite songs collected in Andulasia and Hungary and in response to numerous requests, old English folk songs.

Madame Devi has had enthusiastic press comments wherever she has appeared. The New York Times said of her recent appearances in New York: "Ratan Devi's singing of both the classical Indian Ragas, Kashmiri folk-songs was remarkable — especially in the Ragas. Her voice has a beautiful richness of timbre, and her vocal technique, especially in the management of the long phrases and ornamental figures, of a sort not often met with." Edward Moore said of her in the Chicago Tribune: "There were dance songs that had the whole spirit of the dance in them; there were love songs that lamented and pleaded, even though in an unknown tongue; there were lullabies that spoke a world-wide lullaby language. And Ratan Devi was both vivid and humorous in her explanations."

Her recitals will be preceded by a short talk on life in India especially in relation to its music.

CERCLE FRANCAIS TO MEET FRIDAY

R. W. Linker Will Read And Portray Several Selections From "Carmen."

Robert W. Linker, instructor in the romance language department, will feature the next meeting of the Cercle Francais at the graduate club, Smith building, Friday night at 7:30, according to an announcement by President Taylor.

The entertainment will consist of several selections from "Carmen" which will be played and explained in French by Mr. Linker. Following this part of the program the meeting will be opened for informal conversation and refreshments.

According to officials of the club, succeeding meetings of the French-speaking group will be entertained in the near future by various faculty members. Dr. Finley will be one of the speakers at a meeting soon to be announced. A series of programs has been worked out and will be followed during this quarter and the next. It is hoped that all students at present taking French or who have a knowledge of the language will attend.

Phi And Di To Be Hosts To Duke And Carolina Students

Speaker John Lang Announces Meeting to Take Place at Joint Session of Two Societies February 26 in Gerrard Hall; Students and Faculty Members Invited.

The Philanthropic and Dialectic societies will sponsor a joint meeting of the student bodies of Duke and Carolina to be held Wednesday night, February 26, in Gerrard hall, according to an announcement by John A. Lang, speaker of the Philanthropic society. A representative of the societies has visited the student leaders and faculty members of Duke and has secured their support for the project. The meeting will be held as the quarterly joint session of the Philanthropic and Dialectic societies, of which the Philanthropic society will be the hosts. Speaker Lang has issued a special invitation to students and faculty members to attend the meeting.

Duke students interviewed by the representative, who have endorsed the meeting, include President Savage of the student body, the presidents of the two literary societies, the editor of the annual, and the president of the student Y. M. C. A. The editor of the student newspaper could not be reached. A number of faculty members of Duke, including the dean of students, have expressed their willingness to cooperate. Presidents Savage and Farris will be asked to deliver addresses at the meeting.

Seven resolutions have been prepared by Speaker John Lang for discussion at the joint meeting. The resolutions include endorsements of inter-faculty dinners, cooperation and joint sessions of societies on the two campuses, friendly rivalry between the two institutions, reciprocal undertakings by the student publications, and joint availability of the facilities of the institutions. The president of the Duke student body has stated that mimeographed copies of the resolutions will be distributed to the studens.

John Lang, in an invitation to the student body and faculty of the University, state: "In view of the proximity of the University of North Carolina and Duke University and the consequent opportunity for either wasteful antagonism or fruitful cooperation, the two literary societies of the University of North Carolina have invited the students of Duke University over here to discuss with our students next Wednesday night ways and means by which more friendly relations between the students of the two universities may be effected. As speaker of the Philanthropic Assembly and chairman of the joint committee of our two societies, I extend a special invitation to every student and faculty member of this university to attend this meeting and to take part in the discussions."

Aldermen Vote To Amend Bumming Law

The much-discussed "bumming ordinance" which was enacted some time ago and provided that persons seeking to "bum" rides must not stand on "traveled portions of the highway," has been amended to provide for "additional safety," according to City Manager John Foushee.

The legal phrasing of the amendment follows:

"Be it ordained by the board of alderman, town of Chapel Hill, that the Bumming Ordinance recorded in Book 4, Page 246, be, and the same is, hereby amended,

"That after the word 'street' in section 1, the following shall be added:

"Section 1 (a). That it shall be unlawful for any person to stop any motor vehicle in the streets of Chapel Hill to pick up any pedestrian without first drawing up to the right-hand curb."

Students who do not possess cars and who resort to bumming for their journeyings have expressed a belief that the new amendment will hamper their travel. Motorists, they explain, "will stop oftentimes when they will not pull over to the curb. Of course, it adds to safety, but not to the ease of bumming."

FACULTY-STUDENT RELATIONS AIRED IN CHAPEL TALK

R. B. House and Horace Williams Discuss Tendency of Aloofness.

R. B. House spoke yesterday in chapel on faculty-student relations, emphasizing their importance and need of improvement. The executive secretary named the lack of contact between students and faculty members as one of the problems coming with the University's advance and one that the present college generation must seek to overcome.

Professor Horace Williams, who was present in the audience, lent to the discussion an expression of the opinion that the present difficulties are due chiefly to the quarter system. Eleven weeks he declared to be too short a time for students and instructors to develop a mutual interest that is essential to worthwhile associations.

Reciting his own experiences as a student, Mr. House said that his most cherished acquainances had been with faculty members. He deplored the present-day prejudices they stigmatize as booting any approach toward an instructor and urged that students escape from them. An aggressiveness in seeking the acquaintance of any person on the faculty is a policy which he recommended as perfectly conventional and natural.

Constant questioning and resulting shifting of methods do not indicate weakness or instability in the school, the speaker said. The University is and must continue as a place of study and experimentation that alone can lead to improvement.

Benefit Bridge Party Carolina Inn Tuesday

An opportunity for students to mingle with the faculty and still have no suspicion of "booting" attached to the meeting will be offered next Tuesday afternoon when the Louise Manning circle of the Episcopal church will give a benefit bridge party at the Carolina Inn.

According to the announcement issued yesterday, there will be a prize offered for each table, and refreshments will be served during the afternoon.

Reservations can be made through Mrs. J. B. Bullitt, whose telephone number is 5101.

Optional Class Attendance For Upperclassmen In A.B. College May Be Abolished

Faculty Decides to Do Away With Attendance Privilege of Juniors and Seniors.

DECIDE AT NEXT MEETING

Liberal Arts School Faculty Pass Motion By Margin of Two Votes; Second Motion To Reconsider Is Also Passed.

At the last meeting of the undergraduate faculty of the school of liberal arts, held last Friday afternoon, it was voted by a majority of two votes to abolish optional attendance for the upperclassmen in the A. B. school. After the motion had passed, a second motion was made to reconsider the matter. It will be brought to the attention of the faculty at the next regular faculty meeting.

In the opinion of many members of the faculty, the present system of class attendance has brought with it many evils in the form of lowered scholastic standings, careless and irregular habits, etc.

At the same meeting, the faculty passed the following ruling: "To be eligible for graduation a student must secure the grade of "C" or higher on at least half of his courses."

As an interpretation of the ruling it was further stated that:

(1) The rule will go into effect in September 1930 to apply to all undergraduate students for work passed subsequent to that date.

(2) A student who completes 36 required courses but with grades which do not entitle him to his degree will be allowed to take additional junior-senior courses until such time as he meets the requirement of the rule.

(3) Transfer with advanced standing will come under this rule only for those courses pursued at this institution.

MED GRADS TO HOLD REUNION

Raleigh Branch Of Alumni To Continue Annual Custom February 22 In Capital City.

The alumni of the Raleigh branch of the University school of medicine will hold a reunion in Raleigh, February 22. This reunion has become an annual custom and, due to the success it enjoyed last year, large attendance is expected.

The clinical department, as the school was called, was an extension of the University medical school. Here students were enabled to complete their last two years of study and obtain their M. D. degree from the University, only a two-year course being available in Chapel Hill. Although this branch was sadly lacking in equipment, it attained quite a noticeable success. During the period of its existence, from 1902 to 1910, eighty-four men were graduated with their M. D. degrees. Of this group of alumni there are many who have gained state-wide recognition.

Dr. Quinton H. Cook of Rich Square holds the office of president of the association. Under his guidance plans for the coming reunion have been made largely along the same line as those of last year. This will make the convention quite a social affair in the state capital.

At present there are several prominent doctors in Raleigh who were connected with the clinical department of the University. Dr. Hubert Royster, former dean of the division, Dr. Caveness, Mr. McGee and Dr. Noble are outstanding among them.

Aldermen Change Stop Places for Local Bus

An ordinance to speed the movement of traffic and prevent accidents due to frequent stopping of busses on Franklin street was enacted this week by the board of aldermen. It reads as follows:

Section 1. Be it ordained by the board of aldermen, town of Chapel Hill, that it shall be unlawful for any person operating a bus on Franklin street between Columbia and Hillsboro streets, to stop said bus for the purpose of admitting or discharging passengers, except at the following stations: the bus station, the Carolina theatre and Spencer hall.

Section 2. This ordinance shall become effective Monday, February 24, 1930.

Section 3. Any person violating the terms of this ordinance shall be fined not exceeding $50 or imprisoned not to exceed 30 days.

The army troop school will meet in Davie hall this evening at 7:30.

A THOUGHT A DAY

In essence, poetry is the love of life—not mere brutish tenacity of sensation, but a passion for all the honesties that make life free and generous and clean.—Christopher Morley.

The Anti-Carolina Theatre Movement

For the past several days a movement has been underway to launch a boycott against the Carolina theatre unless the price of admission is reduced by the management from forty to thirty cents. Thirty - seven copies of an agreement to stop patronizing the theatre on and after March 3 until the admission price is reduced are now being circulated, according to the promulgators of the movement.

In the Readers' Opinions column on this page appears a letter requesting the manager of the Carolina to state the valuation of the theatre, the profits received from it last year, and the rate paid on the investment since the vitaphone was installed, figured on an annual basis. The Tar Heel agrees with the authors of the Readers' Opinions letter that the Carolina management should be given an opportunity to defend itself against the charge that it is exploiting the students by charging unreasonably high admission prices.

Last week a communication to the Readers' Opinions column was received, in which it was alleged that the Carolina is "the greatest paying enterprise in the state according to its size." Several similar allegations were made, all of them without substantiation. After careful investigation, we were unable to discover any evidence that admission prices at the local theatre are unreasonable in comparison with those prevailing elsewhere in the state for a similar quality of pictures, or upon the basis of return on the investment here. Therefore we did not publish the letter, believing that the Tar Heel would not be justified in furthering the boycott movement without positive evidence that the theatre is exploiting the students by charging unfair prices.

A movement of the scope and nature attempted by the originators of the boycott idea should be based upon clearly demonstrated facts. It is to be hoped that Mr. Smith answers the challenge contained in this morning's Readers' Opinions letter, in order that the students may determine whether the proposed boycott is justified, but the management of the theatre is his own business and there is no valid reason why he should reveal the details of it unless he wishes to do so.

Too Effective Laws

That there can be laws in America which are proving too harsh seems almost unbelievable in the face of all that has been written about the laxity of law enforcement n the country. But, typically illustrative of the brainlessness of our lawmakers is the Baumes law of New York state, which carries with the conviction of a felon for his or her fourth offense a mandatory life sentence. If this law were applied with discretion and tempered with wisdom it would be a splendid thing; that New York has already succeeded in materially reducing her crime record is proof of its effectiveness as it stands.

But the law assumes the monstrous inhumanity of the prereform days in England the way it is applied in some instances. Recently, a woman who had been convicted of shop lifting for the fourth time was sent to the penitentiary for life. There was no question of a jury's mercy or a judge's tempering humanity; the law said life imprisonment and the prisoner suffered. It is a credit to the judge that he promised to take steps for action in securing the unfortunate woman's freedom after the lapse of a reasonable time, but this action was an individual matter. The Baumes law provides for no extenuating circumstances; there is no leaven of differentiation between the character of common offenses against society.

When the law was first established as an existing factor in the legislative machine of New York the entire country was interested, looking upon it as an experiment. Its power was felt at once; the effect of the legal innovation was evident from the very first in the hasty exodus of large numbers of criminals from under the shadow of this harsh enforcement. But the law was soon seen as a two-edged sword, knowing no discretion in its arbitrary action, when it began operating against numbers of petty felons whose law breaking, while chronic, was not dangerous.

It is for this weakness that the law is to be condemned. Let its application in the case of petty law breaking be modified, let some sensible scheme of differentiation be established—and the Baumes law can remain in a point of pride with the state of New York. Such an action would not indicate sentimentality; there is too much of that now in the treatment of the enemies of society. But a leaven of humanity is necessary in our present state of civilization; we cannot allow the hopeless, tortured dope fiend or the incorrigible sneak thief to be sent to prison for the rest of his life like the gangster, the dope peddler, or the daring criminals with long records of grand larceny and murder behind them.—R. H.

Armed Peace and National Security

More than ever before, the statesmen of the world are trying to devise some means for establishing and guaranteeing a condition of world peace. All over the civilized world of late has appeared a wave of literature, speeches and pictures designed to bring the horrors of war into the limelight of popular thought in an effort to outlaw the demon destroyer of men and wealth. The aim of statesmen and other world thinkers in this connection is to cause the glory and glamour of war as portrayed by so-called patriotic influences to fade into a more realistic conception of the bloody devastation which has been wrought in numerous conflicts "to make the world safe for democracy," or some equally noble and impossible ideal.

In our anxiety over the success of the London conference which is now in session, we are apt to overlook the serious situations which are now existent in Central Europe — conditions which make the effective execution of any plan of world peace an impossibility. In Central Europe are 12 small states which comprise one-fourth of the entire population of the continent and which are likely to open hostilities among themselves at any time. There are 30,000,000 people in Europe who are discontented with the government which rules them. Furthermore, each of these 12 states is suspicious of the others. Nearly all of these smaller countries are continually being exploited by the larger nations of the continent. In one European nation the minority party, which is by far the most incapable party, is the ruling element. Although we are a staunch advocate of world peace, we cannot help seeing in these conditions the seeds of future wars which are apt to assume a world-wide scope.

Although we talk a great deal about naval parity between the United States and Great Britain, such a condition would mean little toward the permanent abolition of war as long as the seeds of war are being constantly sown in Central Europe. It is high time for the statesmen of the world to forget limitations for a while and turn their attention to the conditions now existing in that region of the "tortured continent."

Far be it from the intentions of the writer to minimize the work of the London conference which is now in session, but we do believe that all plans to bring about world peace will fail until such time as a spirit of international confidence has been developed. At present the great power and wealth of the United States make her the logical nation to take the initial step toward complete disarmament down to the point of the police power, but she does not have sufficient confidence in the other nations of the world to warrant her making this important move. Greed and jealousy, the arch enemies of peace, are still very obviously existent.

Self preservation is often referred to as the first law of nature. It is equally true that national preservation is the first law of nations. The glory of war still completely overshadows its horrors in the mind of the average man. When considered aside from the present political and social conditions of the nations of the world, the principle of disarmament and numerous other plans for bringing about international peace as a permanent thing are sound; but the attitudes of the peoples of the world favor conflict rather than peace. Before peace can be guaranteed disarmament must be thought of as something more than the mere mechanical act—it must be a psychological step actuated from within and by virtue of an attitude of horror of war—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

MORE LIGHT ON MR. HUGHES

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

In an editorial appearing in the columns of this journal a few days ago, in which I commented on the selection of Charles Evans Hughes as chief justice, I made two points as to why the man selected is not qualified. Considering the first point, disqualification on the grounds that Mr. Hughes made no protestation of the corruption of the Harding cabinet, there is no need of a further statement to those who read the editorial under consideration.

That Mr. Hughes resigned from the supreme court to run for the presidency in 1916, thus placing his political ambitions above the court, the second point, is undeniably contrary to the fine tradition of the court of aloofness from political ambitions on the part of its members. Hughes proved by his action, regardless of whether he was running for office on the basis of his convictions that the United States should enter the war at that time (as J. W. implies), that he preferred the presidency to the chief justiceship, for which position he was in line at the time.

The analogy between Hughes and Chase is quite clear. It was merely stated that we condemn Chase for his political ombitions while a member of the court and that likewise Hughes should be condemned. Their cases are much the same. If Chase was allied with a faction, so is Hughes allied with the Coolidge - Hoover - Republican - Conservative faction, if such may be called a faction. And I might say here to J. W., who so rebuked my recent editorial effort, as a bit of information, that Chase himself was not in the habit of attending political conventions, although he coveted the support of certain conventions to a degree which probably cost him his supreme desire.

Defenders of Mr. Hughes, especially J. W., point to his ability as a lawyer and to his record as secretary of state as his qualifications for the high office of chief justice of the United States. It is a well known fact that Hughes has been primarily in the courts a defender of corporations and big-business interests. He is not a man of the common people, nor as chief justice does he represent the common people. He is the representative of the financial powers and it is not strange that Hoover appointed him. As secretary of state he ruined what might have been a creditable record by his narrow views on the Central-American situation. His watchword then was protection, protection of American property interests at any costs to the transgressed. He might have shown the world that the United States, a nation which dotes on democratic principles, was ready to guarantee independence and a democratic form of government to her weaker neighbors. Instead, the world got the impression of the giant transgressor, the United States, oppressing the pygmy-like Central American states. So, after all, Mr. Hughes's achievements have not shown such "brilliance" as J. W. would have us believe.

If you please, J. W., this assistant editor who offers this rejoinder will be grateful if you will excuse his "unsound reasoning and false analogy" because he, being fortunate enough to have a reader, dislikes to annoy by such as the above. B. M.

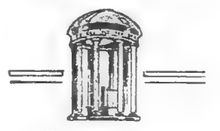
INFORMATION DESIRED

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

For the last few days I have heard many discussions on the question that seems now to be the sensation of the campus, and it is very strange that the question has not reached the Tar Heel before now. But disregarding that fact, I wish to ask Mr. Smith in this article, which I hope will reach the open forum, a few questions which I hope he will answer in the Tuesday issue of the Tar Heel next week. And I will have to know the answer before I can state my opinion in regards to this situation. I understand that there has been a great effort by certain parties on the campus to obtain such information on the theatre from the revenue department of the state, but it refuses to give out such information to the public.

What is the valuation of the Carolina Theatre in Chapel Hill?

What were the profits received from it last year?



What has been the rate paid on the investment since the vitaphone has been installed, figured on an annual basis?

These are only facts that the whole student body should know before they take too great a jump in the reduction of the prices.

Hoping this will not be ignored, we are,

G. W. FLEMING,
FRANK ERINO,
G. R. HINTON.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

If you should happen to drop into 6 Pettigrew some time between now and commencement you wouldn't be there long before you would get told about a great and glorious tour of America which the various science departments of the University are taking part in next summer. For the occupants of this room are Wallace Kuralt and Scottie, locquacious young scientists, notorious for their geologic tendencies. Being all set for the summer's tour they spend a great deal of their leisure time thinking and talking about it, and have in such manner worked up a prodigious amount of enthusiasm and anticipation for the trip.

The tour stretches to the Pacific coast and back, but according to the boys it's going to be more than a see-America-first affair, and the members are going to do many things besides go around with a little hammer tapping gneisses and schists. It seems there are to be about forty co-eds on the trip.

The two geology students tell us that the tour is under the educational direction of the University extension division, and that college courses are offered in geology, botany, general science, sociology, and economics; that the party leaves Chapel Hill June 7 and gets back August 2; that the itinerary includes eighteen states and Mexico; that Yellowstone National Park, Salt Lake City, Reno, Yosemite National Park, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Hollywood, Death Valley, Zion National Park, the Grand Canyon, the Painted Desert, and Jaurez, Mexico, are among the stopping places, and that the entire trip will be made by motor.

As the boys get warmed to the subject they start pulling out gorgeously illustrated booklets and pamphlets dealing with the big western parks and resorts. The pictures in these books depict the canyons and mountains and other natural wonders of the west in all their colors and brilliancy, and describe them in words as glowing as the pictures, so that whosoever looks upon them is moved to enroll in the University's educational transcontinental tour. One page dazzles the eye with the glistening walls of the Great White Throne; another with the fantastic colors of the Grand Canyon.

Only when Wallace comes to a railroad time-table among the travel literature does he pause to throw it in the waste basket and say, "I don't see why they send me that; I don't want that." Then he goes on with more about the trip, saying, among other things, that the group of University professors to accompany the party includes Drs. Prouty, Totten, Preston, Brooks, and MacCarthy.

Such a tour as this and the extension division's European tours certainly bespeak a progressive university. They let the world know more about Carolina and they help Carolina know more about the world.

National Oratorical Contest Ends Mar. 31

Although March 25 is the closing date for entries in the sixth national intercollegiate oratorical contest on the Constitution, already 81 colleges and universities from 29 states have written to P. Caspar Harvey, national director, Liberty, Mo.

Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., national winner in 1925, was the first school to enter the 1930 contest.

The competition for the greatest forensic honor open to college students in America foreshadows bringing together this year the largest group of colleges and universities in any project of the kind in the history of American higher education, according to the announcement made this week at the national headquarters. A total of $5000 in prizes will be awarded, and the winner, who will become the national intercollegiate champion orator for 1930, will be awarded a prize of $1500. Second place will give a prize of $1000, scaling down to $400 for seventh place.

Old Liners Pull Second Half Rally To Down Tar Heels In Tin Can 29-22

Maryland Quintet Takes Second Straight Win From Carolina Varsity.

MARPET-ALEXANDER STAR

University Team Gets Early Lead, But Lose It Before Strong Rally By College Park Five in Last Part of Game.

A fast-moving quintet from College Park defeated the Carolina Tar Heels 29-22 in a hectic game played in the Tin Can last night. The game, which was a return contest, gave the Maryland five a clean sweep in the season's series, the Tar Heels having previously lost to the Old Liners at College Park.

The first half showed the White Phantoms at their best, the offense and defense being well-nigh perfect. The Tar Heel defense was so tight that four of the Old Liners' five field goals resulted from long shots.

Marpet opened the scoring with a foul shot, but Rooney soon evened matters by sinking a free toss. Alexander, Neiman and Marpet then tossed in beautiful long shots and soon had the score up to 9-3. Three Maryland regulars then entered the game to stop the fast-moving Tar Heels, and as a result, play became tight. Gaylor, Heagy and Ronkin combined to bring Maryland to within two points of Carolina when the half ended 14-12.

In the second half the Tar Heel attack went to pieces. Gaylor sank a beauty to tie the score at 14-14, but Alexander put the Tar Heels ahead with another long one. Maryland then steadily forged ahead, Gaylor repeatedly finding the basket for scores. Carolina then tried to score by the long-shot route, but the inability of the Tar Heels to follow up their shots brought the ball down to the other end of the floor.

Tom Alexander, who has replaced Billy Brown, is still keeping up his spectacular playing. Besides scoring eight points, Tommy played a sterling game at guard, continually breaking up the visitors' combinations. "Weasel" Neiman and Artie Marpet also played well for Carolina. For the victors the work of Gaylor and Berger stood out. Gaylor was high point man with 12 markers, while Berger scored seven.

The next game for the Tar Heels will be with the V. P. I. Cadets Friday evening in the Tin Can.

Steele defeated Old East yesterday, 22-12. Purser led in scoring with 11 points. Old East made a last minute rally, but the lead was far too great for them.

Old East having been undefeated up to now, there remains only Aycock (F) with a clean record. Old East and Steele have one loss apiece.

WRESTLERS MEET CHAMPS SATURDAY

Carolina Team Works Hard for Coming Matches Against V. P. I.

With the meet with State tucked safely away, the varsity grapplers are priming for the meet with the crack V. M. I. wrestling team Saturday night in Lexington.

Time trials were held yesterday afternoon in the Tin Can. In the 115-pound division, Gilchrist won a time advantage over Barwick with 4 minutes 30 seconds to his credit. Captain Wayne Woodard won from Albright in the 135-pound class with a time advantage of 9:40, while Sanders won from Taylor in the 155 pound division in the same manner with an advantage of 2:35. In the 165-pound class, Cowper beat Houghton by time with an advantage of 8:55.

Coach Chuck Quinlan has not announced his lineup against V. M. I., last year's conference champions, but it is thought that he will start the same men that wrestled against State.

Coach Peyton Abbott will send his freshman team to Lexington to twist horns with the V. M. I. Rats the same night that the varsity meets the Cadet team.

George Stallings, 125-pound flash, will fight in Lexington Saturday, and with him he carries a great portion of the Tar Heels' hopes. In five fights so far this season, Stallings has four falls and one time decision for a total of 23 points to lead the Tar Heel scoring. Other outstanding men on the team are Captain Woodard and Cowper.

BOXERS PREPARE FOR PENN STATE

Captain Allen May Not Face Nittany Lions in Bouts Here.

With only two more days left in which to work out before the meet with Penn State's intercollegiate champions, the Tar Heel mitmen are working hard to get in shape for the meet which will be held in the Tin Can Saturday night.

Captain Archie Allen is suffering with a cut over his eye, an injury which he received in the Florida meet, and Coach Crayton Rowe is doubtful as to whether the crack middleweight will be able to fight Saturday. In case Allen does not fight, Hoke Webb, who won his fight at South Carolina Monday, will probably get the call.

Evan Vaughn, veteran bantam, who has been unable to fight for several weeks, was out yesterday, and is trying to get in shape for the southern conference meet the last of the month. He did not work out in the ring, but took a good workout on the bags, and with the ropes.

Add Warren, former Carolina captain, and now a promising professional, was on the job working out the heavies, and gave them all a good workout. John Warren, Add's younger brother, looked good in the ring, as did Koenig, varsity heavyweight.

Several likely looking bantam prospects were on the job, and although they will not fight this year, Coach Rowe might be able to use them next year.

Coach Rowe will fight his regular varsity lineup against Penn State, with the possible excep-

THE CHEERING at Carolina is almost nil! The modesty of some Carolina student in signing his name prevents the publishing, in the Open Forum column, of some sound advice to the student body. However, this column has purloined these valuable paragraphs and heartily endorses them. Parts of the letter follow:

"Before coming to Carolina I heard very much about the excellency of the cheering and the school spirit. My first impression, I must confess, was very much the nature of the reports—very favorable. Last year Bill Chandler organized a cheering section of all the freshman class to take the place of the much smaller group of the older "Cheerios." This seemed to me to be a fairly successful undertaking, but what happened this year? Groups of "loyal" Carolina supporters were scattered all over the stadium, and the combined efforts of six hard-working cheer leaders could not get even a feeble piping when Carolina was on the short end of the score. This was in football! The other night at the Loyola basketball game the students depended for their pep on a phonograph record, and the leadership of an old grad finally to start the school song!"

The purloined paragraphs went on to say that "on the Pacific coast huge organized cheering sections help their teams along, and are oftentimes so colorful that they are one of the main points of interest about the game. We see none of that in the south now! Why not make Carolina take the lead in this project of organized cheering as she has in so many other projects?"

The anonymous writer stated that he had heard many of the best athletes say that a good cheering section went a long way toward helping the team along to victory. The modest writer was of the opinion that had there been organized cheering in three recent basketball games Carolina would probably have overcome the total of four points by which Carolina lost.

The unsigned letter stated that "it may be too late to start anything much for the basketball season in the way of cheering, but why not organize for baseball, is a trail fashion at least, and have some REAL cheering next fall?"

This letter seems to be a challenge to the student body, and a suggestion to the cheer leaders. Let's hope that it is heeded!

CREDIT WHERE CREDIT is due! The well deserved Duke victory of the last Carolina-Duke meeting in Durham brings much to the attention of the Carolina student body. The phonograph that has been used in the Tin Can was supplemented by the cooperating of the Duke students in cheering. The Alma Mater was led by cheer leaders, instead of graduates. The cheering was organized!

Question Marks Win

The Question Marks overwhelmed Old West yesterday afternoon, 25-9. The Question Marks were superior in every way, and it was seldom that Old West got past the center line. E. Beam's 12 points took scoring honors, H. Beam trailing with 5. Hinton played a good game for Old West.

CLASS A HIGH SCHOOL SERIES NEARING CLOSE

Charlotte Leads Western Division; Raleigh And Durham Tied For Lead In East.

TITLE GAME IN TIN CAN

With a clean record of nine victories the Central high school of Charlotte is practically assured of the championship in the western class A basketball conference; however, the Charlotte quint is closely followed by the Maroons of Asheville high with only a single defeat, administered by the Queen City cagers, to impair their standing.

It is probable, then, that the outcome of the western race will not be decided until the conclusion of play on March 1. In the east, on the other hand, the series has resolved itself to a fight between Raleigh and Durham. Both teams have five victories, so the game scheduled between Durham and Raleigh in the Bull City Friday night will decide the final results of eastern play, since the last games of the season in eastern competition are being played this week.

The standings of the teams in the two sections follow:

CLASS A WESTERN

TEAM	W.	L.	PCT.
Charlotte	9	0	1.000
Asheville	8	1	.889
Winston-Salem	4	4	.500

E. R. Rankin of the University extension division, secretary of the North Carolina High School Athletic Association, announced yesterday that the state championship game will be played here between the winners of the two groups on Wednesday, March 5. The title game will be run off in the Tin Can.

Chapel Hill High Wins Over Burlington 30-15

After being held scoreless for the first quarter and trailing 5 to 9 at the half, the Chapel Hill boys warmed up their attack and defeated Burlington here Tuesday night 30-15. Chapel Hill started the game with one or two subs in the lineup, but turned loose with full strength in the middle of the game and left the reserves to wind up the play in the last period.

Macomson, with 10 points to his credit, was the main bet of the visitors on the offensive, while Council and Lawrence led the locals with 13 and 12 points respectively.

Lineups:

C. H. (30)		Burlington (15)
Prouty (5)		Macomson (10)
Council (13)		Heath (3)
Reynolds		Walker (2)
Barbour		Brown
Williams		Blanchard

Substitutions: Chapel Hill—Neville, Henderson, Umstead, Lawrence (12), Reynolds, Canady, Caldwell; for Burlington—Ephland, Riber, Hall, Lyord.

Referee: Perkin.

Neither Phi Kappa Alpha nor Sigma Nu appeared to play their scheduled game yesterday afternoon.

Delta Sigma Phi forfeited to Phi Sigma Kappa yesterday afternoon.

Fencing Notice

The manager of University fencing, "Hinkey" Hendlin, will meet any men in the following organizations who are interested in competing in intramural fencing:

9 p. m.—New Dorms, Graduate Club, Best House, and any independent group.

These organizations are requested to see Hendlin at 313 Old East.

FRESHMEN PRIMING F O R V. P. I. GAME

After taking the Wake Forest Baby Deacons in camp by virtue of a 16-18 victory, Carolina's freshman quintet is priming for a hard contest with the strong Virginia Polytechnic Institute aggregation on the local floor Friday night.

Accurate shooting and tight defensive work are responsible for the Tar Babies' triumph over the Baby Deacons. Dunn and Henry, who were both in excellent form Tuesday night, will be counted on for strong support in the V. P. I. game. Hines failed to carry of scoring honors in the Deacon contest as he was closely guarded; however his shooting is up to par and has been consistently good all season.

The floor work of the team as a whole is excellent and their chances of avenging their previous loss to V. P. I. are good.

Saturday night the Tar Babies meet the Washington and Lee frosh here in a preliminary to the Carolina-Washington and Lee varsity game.

NEW BLINDS AT LIBRARY

The windows of the seminar rooms of the library on the third floor have been equipped with Venetian blinds, similar to those used throughout the stack rooms. These blinds replace the temporary curtains that were in the seminar rooms previously.

GEORGIA KEEPS SLATE CLEAN BY WIN OVER VOLS

Undefeated Winter Grid Team Adds Another Victory to List; Branch Stars.

A well-mixed passing and running attack was too much for "Tennessee" and "Georgia" registered an 18-0 victory yesterday afternoon in Kenan stadium.

McAllister kicked off for Tennessee, Branch receiving the ball on his 30-yard line and returning it to the 35. Three line plays were good for a first down. White passed to Branch and the midget quarter raced 30 yards, giving Georgia a first down on the 22-yard line. Morrisey went around end for a touchdown on the sixth play of the game. Harden failed to make the distance for extra point.

McAllister returned Branch's kick to his own 40-yard marker. Chandler passed to Moore for 16 yards and to Daniels for 20, placing the ball on the 24-yard line. Three line bucks and a pass failed and the ball went over. Nash got three, Branch failed to gain and punted to midfield. Moore passed to Walker for 18 yards and a first down, but Morrisey intercepted Chandler's attempt on the 19-yard line. Nash slipped off tackle for 11. Branch caught the Tennessee team off guard and his punt straight up the sideline was good for 60 yards, giving the ball to Tennessee on the 10-yard line as the quarter ended.

Little happened during the second quarter.

In the third quarter Georgia scored. After Suggs punted to Branch, Harden gained three, Morrisey lost the same distance and then Morrisey passed to Harden for 21 yards and first down on the eight-yard line. Morrisey made four in two tries and passed to White for the touchdown. Branch's dropkick failed.

Morrisey passed to Branch for 17 yards to begin the march for the third touchdown. White made 15 around end. Morrisey

BROOKS SPEAKS BEFORE CHURCH ABOUT MARRIAGE

University Professor Tells Audience Of United Church That Husband And Wife Should Be Real Partners.

"Good homes do not happen, they are made." said Professor Brooks in an address on "Modern Marriage Partnership" delivered Sunday night to the young people's forum of the United Church.

The true partnership agreement is more predominant than ever in marriage relations with husband and wife cooperation on a 50-50 plan and the children playing the role of junior partners, Mr. Brooks believes. The detailed plans and agreements of relations must be thrashed out in days of courtship, long before the ringing of wedding bells, and this is as essential to a successful marriage as is the same agreements before entering into business relations.

The true partnership agreement immediately suggests an interdependence of partners and an interest in each other's work. But very few duties are inherently woman's and the old "Bring-me-my-slippers" attitude of men in the home is passing out of the modern program. The partnership must enhance all phases of marital relations, which includes: the major expressions of affection; little courtesies; cooperation in home duties; interest and ability to give council in each other's problems; cooperation in play; and child rearing. Hobbies, too, have great power as unifying agents.

Civil Engineers To Discuss Co-op Work

The William Cain student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers will hold its regular meeting this evening at 7 o'clock in Phillips hall. The junior members of the society will deliver a series of talks in which they will describe the various cooperative jobs on which they have been working.

For the purpose of acquainting the sophomore members of the society with the various cooperative jobs that will be open to them next year, several junior members will make short talks on the jobs that they have been working on during this year.

Talks will be given describing the work with the location and bridge departments of the state highway commission, the Charlotte water department, the Southern Railway at Danville, the Chapel Hill filteration plant, and the state department of conservation and development at Chapel Hill.

The officers of the society urge that all sophomore engineering students in the department of civil engineering attend this meeting, as at this time a student description and opinion of each job will be presented.

DEBATERS WILL ARGUE QUESTION OF SCIENCE

In pursuance of its study of "Resolved: That modern science tends to destroy theistic faith," the debate class will meet tonight in 201 Murphey hall and will come prepared to raise the issues of the negative side of the query. The plan for the meeting is to conduct an open forum discussion, the teams which are to debate Emory and Georgia Tech taking the affirmative of the question, and the members of the class raising the issues of the negative.

All members of the debate class are expected to attend, as this discussion will constitute a regular part of the work outlined in debating 1.

Brummitt To Attend Law Class Meeting

Attorney General Dennis G. Brummitt will attend the meeting of the class in Administration of Justice this afternoon at two o'clock. The course in Administration of Justice, which was instituted for the first time this year, gives the law student an understanding of the problems involved in the actual administration of justice, together with suggested improvements in our legal institutions. The traditional law courses, with their emphasis on the doctrines of law, do not deal with the very important matters of administration of law and justice. All members of the law faculty participate in the teaching of the course, Professor Wettach being in charge of the February meeting of the class. The class of forty students is divided into groups, and at each monthly meeting, the members of one of these groups report on particular phases of the general problem assigned for the month.

The topic for the meeting this afternoon is: "A Ministry of Justice." The following papers will be presented by members of the class:

"The Ministry of Justice in France" by J. G. Edwards, "A Ministry of Justice in England" by W. S. Jenkins, "The United States Department of Justice" by A. T. Daniel, "Office of Attorney General in North Carolina" by O. A. Warren, "Need for Centralization of Law Enforcement in North Carolina" by A. M. Covington, "Need for Law-Recommending Body in North Carolina" by M. S. Benton, and "Proposed Legislation for a North Carolina Department of Justice" by H. B. Parker.

Mr. Brummitt stated that Assistant Attorney General Nash would accompany him, and the law faculty will entertain them at a luncheon at the Carolina Inn immediately preceding the meeting of the class.

Engineers To Hear Lowery and Knoop

The regular meeting of the University of North Carolina Student branch of the American Society of Civil Engineers will be held this evening at 7:15 in room 319 Phillips hall. E. L. Lowery will give an illustrated talk on "Deisel Engines" and Frederick Knoop will speak on the life of Walter Craig Kerr, a prominent mechanical engineer.

After the program of the meeting has been presented membership cards in the society will be distributed and the question of who shall attend the meeting of the Raleigh branch of the A. S. M. E. as representatives of the local branch will be discussed.

Mr. Lowry's talk will be illustrated with slides showing the various features of deisel engines and several large installations of these machines.

Mr. Knoop will present the life of Mr. Kerr and will show what contributions to mechanical engineering were made by this man, who was intimately connected with Mr. Westinghouse, who was organizer of Westinghouse, Church, Kerr, and Co., which, at the time of his death, was the largest organization of its kind in the world.

Fire Behind Library Causes Little Damage

The Chapel Hill fire department was called out at 7 o'clock Wednesday morning to extinguish a fire at the camp of T. C. Thompson, contractor, behind the library. A large truck had caught fire because of defective wiring, but its driver had smothered the flames before the arrival of the local department.

and White made two for a first passed to White for eight yards down on the eight-yard line as the quarter ended.

Frazier slashed through tackle for the touchdown on the first play of the new quarter. Branch failed to kick goal.

The fourth quarter was a desperate continuance of the passing attack on the part of Tennessee, while Georgia resorted largely to punting to protect its lead. Tennessee's midfield passes resulted in frequent gains, but Georgia always managed to stop them when the goal line was threatened.

By way of consoling itself for its defeat Tennessee rolled up 11 first downs to eight for Georgia. Ten of the eleven were made on passes, Chandler's 20-yard jaunt around end accounting for the other. Johnny Branch played his usual spectacular game and was the chief luminary for his team. Sharing the spotlight with him were Morrisey and White. Chandler, Daniel and Moore accounted for most of the Tennessee yardage.

The lineup:

"Georgia"		"Tennessee"
Reid	L. E.	Johnson
Smith	L. T.	Daniels
Kerr	L. G.	McEver
Gilbreath	C.	Koehl
Petree	R. G.	Philpott
McDade	R. T.	Rose
Brown	R. E.	Walker
Branch	Q. B.	Moore
White	L. H.	Chandler
Morrisey	R. H.	Daniel
Harden	F. B.	McAllister

Scoring touchdowns: White, Morrisey and Frazier (substitute for Harden).

tion of Captain Allen. The lineup consists of the following men: 125 pounds, Harry Sheffield; 135 pounds, Noah Goodridge; 145 pounds, Captain Allen or Hoke Webb; 165 pounds, Obie Davis; 175 pounds, John Warren; unlimited, Bill Koenig.

The possible loss of Captain Allen will hurt the Tar Heel's chances against the Nittany Lions, but the team is expected to show up to advantage the national champions.

Coach Odell Sapp will take his freshman boxers against the State R. O. T. C. team this afternoon. The Tar Babies lost a hard 5-2 decision to Oak Ridge last Saturday, but are now in good condition to fight in Raleigh. Nothing is known of the strength of the Raleigh aggregation, except that they are coached by John Lepo, star tackle on the football team.

Coach Sapp will take along the following men to fight: 125 pounds, Levinson; 135 pounds, Gaylord; 145 pounds, Jackson; 165 pounds, Patterson; 175 pounds, Landis; the unlimited man has not been chosen.

Laprade of the history department of Duke University spoke to the club on the subject of "Washington and Lincoln as Heroes." In this address Dr. Laprade pointed out the qualities which made these men famous, and he also stressed the human elements in them which are characteristic of present day men.

INDUSTRIAL CLASS VISITS FURNITURE PLANT AT MEBANE

Professor G. T. Schwenning's class in industrial management Monday afternoon inspected the plant of the White Furniture Manufacturing Company in Mebane. The trip was the second of a series that the class is making this quarter. Last Friday the class visited the Riverside and Dan River Mills at Danville, Va.

The White Furniture Company is among the oldest in the south and is at present one of the largest producers of furniture in this part of the United States.

White Cross School Children Pay Visit To the University

A group of 35 children from the White Cross school in Orange county visited the University yesterday, accompanied by the principal of their school, Mrs. Mattox, and other teachers. The pupils were conducted on a pre-arranged tour of the campus by members of the University extension division.

They were shown major points of interest here, including the library, gymnasium, Playmakers theatre, the arboretum, Memorial hall being torn down, and other features. The tour was concluded at the stadium where the children witnessed a part of the football game between "Georgia" and "Tennessee."

It would perhaps be interesting to know that this was the first time that the majority of these pupils had ever visited the University, though living in the same county.

The Y deputation team left here yesterday afternoon for Fayetteville where it will give a series of programs over the week-end. This team, which has made a name for itself in past years, has at present only four places to be visited this year. They are Fayetteville, Wilmington, Rocky Mount and Greensboro.

Tonight at Fayetteville, this team will talk to the Hi-Y club, and will also give an entertainment in the county jail. Friday morning will be taken up with programs in the schools, while the afternoon will be given over to the visiting of the Confederate Woman's Home. The program for Saturday morning will be filled with visits to the hospitals and the "shut-ins." The team will take dinner and give a program at the Kiwanis luncheon at 1 o'clock and during the afternoon a hike will be made with some of the smaller boys in the city. Sunday morning each member of the team will be sent to one of the Sunday schools in the city, and at 11 o'clock a special boys' sermon will be preached in one of the churches. At a special boys' meeting Sunday afternoon the team will close its program and will return to the University sometime during the latter part of the afternoon.

The program, with several minor exceptions, will be that of the fall tour. The contest numbers will be given as usual under the direction of Ewan S. Clark, student leader. Mr. Nelson Kennedy of the music department will offer two piano groups.

A new choice song, "Sea Song," by Gaines, will be used by the club in the national contest, rather than Arcadelt's "Ave Maria" as sung in the last one. The new piece will be given Monday in the Raleigh concert.

To Continue Presidential Duties Here Until Commencement Before Leaving To Assume New Position In Mid-West

During Chase's Presidency University Has Become Leader Among Southern Institutions.

TO LEAVE FOR URBANA DURING COMING SUMMER

Illinois Ranks Among First Six Educational Institutions In United States; Chase Succeeds Dr. David Kinley.

(By R. W. Madry)

Announcement here last night of the resignation of Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase as president of the University to accept the presidency of the University of Illinois was greeted with expressions of keen regret in all quarters.

During the day rumors that Dr. Chase was planning to resign the presidency here gained general circulation over the campus. Dr. Chase could not be reached for a statement, having left for Hollins College where he is to deliver the Founder's Day address today. At his office Secretary R. B. House informed inquirers that any news regarding possible developments would have to come from Illinois.

Consequently last night's announcement did not take the town wholly by surprise. Many of the folks here were half way prepared for it. To people out in the state, however, it will be big news. Dr. Chase had closely guarded his negotiations with the Illinois officials, fearing that any premature announcement of his plans might result in misunderstanding both here and in Illinois. He was particularly fearful lest somebody get the impression that he was "playing" for a raise in salary.

It was learned yesterday that Dr. Chase had a tentative offer from the Illinois committee when he and Mrs. Chase left here two weeks ago to visit their campus. He was first approached by the committee last fall, and at the time he informed them that he was quite sure he would not be interested. In January they came back at him again with the request that he reconsider. Further negotiations led to his decision to visit the Illinois campus. He had not made up his mind at the time he went although he confessed to several close associates that he was strongly tempted.

Dr. Chase's letter of resignation did not reveal the salary involved in the Illinois offer, but it was learned that it represents a tremendous increase over the $10,000 he receives here, along with a liberal retiring allowance and other inducements. One report was that he is to get double his present salary.

His associates expressed the view last night, however, that the opportunity to work with an institution that occupies such a significant position in the future development of higher education in America was the chief factor in determining his decision.

The University of Illinois is one of the half-dozen largest institutions in America in student enrollment and faculty. It is said to represent one of the most

Chase To Deliver Founders Day Talk At Hollins College

Dr. Chase will deliver the Founders Day address at Hollins College, Virginia girls' school, this morning, according to an announcement from his office yesterday. The subject of his address will be "The Opportunity of College." Hollins College, founded in 1842, will be celebrating its 88th anniversary today.

Circus Actor Fined For Alleged Assault

Dwight Bean, 28, circus trapeze performer who lives in Chapel Hill during the months when circuses hibernate, was the defendant in a trial at Chapel Hill Recorder's court Monday evening. He was charged with assault with a deadly weapon.

His victim was Eric Sparrow, son of Joe Sparrow, University employee, whom Bean accused of undue familiarity with Mrs. Bean.

Bean found the pair at the home of Mrs. Beulah Sykes in Carrboro, whereupon he was alleged to have assaulted Sparrow. After rendering his victim nearly unconscious, Bean was alleged to have "stomped on" Sparrow, then to have thrown him out of doors into the mud, whereupon he took his departure.

Witnesses failed to prove the use of anything in the nature of a deadly weapon save Bean's large fists, although Dr. E. A. Abernethy testified that some of the wounds he closed with a total of 15 stitches, were sharp cuts. A portion of Sparrow's ear, he said, seemed to have been cut off.

Attorney for Bean compromised the case with Prosecutor Sawyer, and the accused was given a four month's sentence on the road, and a fine of ten dollars and costs. The road sentence was suspended upon payment of physician and hospital fees and remuneration for loss of time to Sparrow.

McKIE RECEIVES PLANS FOR ORATORICAL MEET

According to information received recently by Professor George McKie, the sixth annual intercollegiate oratorical contest on "The Constitution" will be held in Los Angeles on June 19. All entries must be made by March 25.

Prior to the final contest in Los Angeles a number of regional and sectional elimination contests will be held, from which the finalists will be selected.

GERMAN CLUB IS ALMOST SURE TO HAVE LOMBARDO

Officials Await Return of Duplicate Contract from Booking Offices.

Only the return of a duplicate contract from the Music Corporation of America is now necessary for the absolute surety that Guy Lombardo and his "Royal Canadians" will play for the final dances of the German Club to be held this spring.

In the returning of the original contract, the German Club officials added a clause to the effect that this would be Lombardo's first appearance in the state of North Carolina. A telegram was received which stated that this extra stipulation would be agreeable. The duplicate copy of the contract is now expected at any time.

Lombardo's band is classified as one of the best dance orchestras in the country, and it will doubtless add quite a bit of color to the naturally colorful final dances of the German Club.

Due to the conflict between the dates of the final dances and the dates for the beginning of the Carolina summer school, it will be necessary to have the dances in the Tin Can. Plans are now being made as to how the Tin Can will be divided and other details. It is expected that an unusually large crowd will attend these dances due to the presence of Lombardo and his orchestra, so the extra amount of space in the Tin Can may prove very valuable.

Guy Lombardo and His Royal Canadians are recognized as one of the most popular of all music dispensers in the country. They have long been favorites of the great radio audience, and their selections are recorded consistently by the Columbia Recording Company. Sought after all over the country, it will certainly be a feather in Carolina's social cap if this orchestra is secured. It would be Lombardo's first appearance in the south.

In an effort to trace the ancestry of the canine family, Yale University is to make a collection of and hold an exhibition of the skulls of 79 species of dogs.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

We are still not far removed from the stage in which Vesalius was in 1543 when he wrote: "But how the brain performs, its functions in imagination, in reasoning, in thinking and in memory, I can form no opinion whatever."—Professor G. H. Parker.

President Chase Resigns

The announcement of President Chase's resignation comes as a distinct blow to the University and to the entire state. Although most of those connected with the University were prepared for the announcement, it comes as a distinct shock to many persons throughout North Carolina. A veil of secrecy had been drawn over the negotiations in order that they might not produce misunderstanding here and in Illinois.

During the eleven years that Dr. Chase has served as president of the University, it has undergone marvelous material and spiritual development. Since he became president in 1919 the student enrollment has more than doubled, nine new dormitories and four class room buildings have been erected. But it is not in material facilities that the greatest development of the University has taken place under President Chase's leadership. He has been a constant advocate of intellectual freedom, and it is primarily through his influence the University has become famous throughout the nation as a center of liberal thought.

A great leader, a man of remarkable personal charm and splendid executive ability, President Chase brought to the difficult office of the presidency of the University a combination of talents and abilities rarely witnessed in one man. He guided the University through a period of "growing pains," of rapid development and constantly increasing enrollment. There was grave danger that the institution would lose some of its finest heritages of liberalness and independent thought during this period, but Dr. Chase succeeded in retaining and even in increasing those intangible possessions which may be either the greatest attributes or the most objectionable features of an educational institution.

It was inevitable that a larger and more wealthy institution should succeed in inducing Dr. Chase to resign his position here. His qualities and abilities have attracted national attention, and it was a foregone conclusion that the University would not be able to offer him a salary commensurate with his services. But it is with keenest regret that students, faculty members, alumni—all those who make up the great body of University people—witness the occurence of the inevitable.

The City Fathers Further Restrict "Bumming"

Chapel Hill's city aldermen have passed another ordinance, designed in general to promote safety, but more specifically to curb "bumming." All cars stopping to pick up students must pull over to the right curb before stopping. A ruling passed last year prohibited students from standing in the street; they must stay on the curb.

We fail to see the necessity for the new ordinance. If a man decides to stop to pick up a student, he will necessarily look around before stopping; if it is necessary, he will pull over to the curb. If no car is coming, he may stop in the street. But under the new rule all cars must pull over to the curb and stop. Many motorists in a hurry will not take the trouble to do this; the result will be that "bumming" will be seriously-hampered.

Much objection to "bumming" has been voiced by the bus companies, motor clubs, insurance companies, and bad-natured drivers. If a man sees fit to give a college boy a lift on the highway, it is nobody else's business but his own. If those who do not want to pick up boys ride on, there is no hard feeling. Many traveling men are pleased to have a companion and often pick up boys; they will continue to do so if not hampered by a lot of unnecessary rules.

In passing the new ordinance affecting "bumming" the city fathers did not take the view point of the students into consideration. We feel that any effort to curb bumming is a trespass upon the rights of the students and the privileges of motorists. The less restriction we have the better.—J. D. M.

A Rare Combination

Much has been said in recent years about the remarkable progress the University has made during the last decade. Not only has it several times doubled the size of its student body, and greatly increased the number of its buildings, but its fame as one of the intellectually select colleges of America has traveled up and down the continent. And just as progress inevitably spells the decline of tradition, so the University, during its journey toward renown and higher usefulness has perhaps lost some of that provincial charm which we are told once characterized it.

But has it lost anything it could not afford to lose? It is true that the ancient Carolina custom of yelling "Fire!" every time a woman sets foot on the campus has almost died out, and that the freshman rock pile out at Piney Prospect has been turned into a magnificent spooning bench for the co-eds and their swains. All the students aren't personally acquainted with each other any more, and the hello habit has about gone out of style here. Cows are no longer hoisted to the belfry of Old South, hazing is not what it used to be, and there isn't any compulsory 7:30 a. m. chapel as there once was. If the dying out of such things as these represent the victory of progress over tradition, then good-by and Godspeed to tradition!

Of course time and growth have pushed aside a few of the old phases that were really worth keeping. A prominent member of the faculty declared at a class smoker last spring that the fiber of the student body was not as strong as formerly, and that there seemed to be a growing lack of support of honesty among the students. That such changes as these should accompany the growth of the University is indeed lamentable.

But the truth of the matter is that this University hasn't really lost its ancient charms and traditions. We have been fortunate enough to become a large and efficient school and at the same time to preserve most of the desirable attributes of a small school. It is a rare combination.

Old South, within whose walls roomed James K. Polk, is still here; and so is Old East, the oldest building on the campus of an American state university. A replica of the Old Well still sentinels the center of the campus. Not far from it stands Davie Poplar, and most of the students know its story. Even today there are students who can tell you about the myth of Dromgoole Rock. There are many other reminders of the University's ancient past.

Phillips Russell, returning to Chapel Hill after 25 years' absence, says that the village is handsomer and neater than it was in his day, but that a rural breath still runs through the streets. We strongly suspect that Chapel Hill, of all the towns in the state, is among the last to retain a measure of their former interest and quaintness, and that the University has done a marvelously good job of carrying her past in one hand and her future in the other.—J. Readers' Opinions

NO SPREE!

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

People who throw stones should not throw boomerangs. We are referring to a paragraph run in Mr. J. E. Dungan's column called "In the Wake of the News" yesterday. Therein Mr. Dungan claimed that we had been on a spree.

Now, the title of the column itself is an indication of the value of the reports he prints in it. Mr. Dungan is apparently very, very far in the wake of the news. And the facts are just exactly opposite to those stated.

We admit (and trust the student council will not see this) that we had had a Coca-Cola or so—and perhaps even a pretzel. But we did this thing for a purpose—the purpose of keeping Mr. Dungan himself on the straight and narrow path. We wished our example of apparently enjoying soft drinks to affect Mr. Dungan in such a manner that he would quit enjoying such hard drinks as lime water, and ammonia.

At the time of which Mr. Dungan wrote, we were accompanying him down Franklin street. He will not deny, we are sure, (and numerous observers will corroborate) that he was reeling around the sidewalks, waving his arm, laughing in an exaggerated manner, and was extremely and generally obstreperous. In Patterson's Drug Store we were very much embarassed by his inebriated behavior, and did our level best to save his good name, by keeping as quiet as possible.

Our thanks for all this? A public accusation that we had been imbibing dopes too freely and shamelessly eating pretzels. We did, but as we have pointed out, to shield Mr. Dungan. Mr. Dungan shall go unshielded henceforth.

STUDENT ROWDINESS

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Is the Carolina theatre to degenerate into an atmosphere similar to the old "Pickwick"—one of extreme boistreousness and rowdiness, so much so that elder people felt great compunction in going? Recent exhibitions at the "Carolina" seem to justify this. Students yell, hiss, boo, and generally make asses of themsleves on numerous occasions of late, especially a picture possessing, shall we say, "faint suggestion."

The Carolina student body must fast realize that it does not hold as high esteem in gentlemanly conduct, as it is prone to believe. The late display of frightful rudeness and poor sportsmanship at the Duke-Carolina game is to be heartily condemned and held up to the student body as a blotch on its escutcheon.

I ask that one or two per cent, whatever it may be, who, thru their own thoughtlessness make it unpleasant and embarrassing to others, realize their position as members of the Carolina student body. —C. C. D.

They appear to be very heavy but are of less than ordinary weight and should prove to be a favorite with those who do not wear rings because they are annoyed by the weight on their hands. These rings make fine brass knuckles and may sometime be very useful. (sic).

The most gratifying piece of news that it has yet been the good fortune of this writer to uncover is the fact that a few days ago, no less than 17 pairs of spats were seen on the campus. A Woman's Tragedy

by

With the date of the Southern Conference tournament at Atlanta only a week hence, the question arises as to who shall and who shall not be invited to participate. Alabama, W. and L., Kentucky, Duke, Tennessee, Sewanee, Georgia, N. C. State, Clemson, Maryland, L. S. U., Tulane and Ole Miss are practically certain to rate the tournament; while Auburn, Vanderbilt, Virginia and South Carolina are equally sure not to get a bid. That leaves six teams from which three will be selected to fill out the quota of 16 for the elimination series in Atlanta.

Among these six is Carolina. After last week's play the Tar Heels held 16th place in the rankings—just barely within the list of those eligible for tournament play. And the licking by Maryland Wednesday night dropped the stock a few points more. A victory over V. M. I. tomorrow night would give Carolina a slightly higher percentage than she had at the beginning of the week. Whether Carolina will be extended an invitation to compete in the tournament depends on the showing made by the other five teams in the doubtful class. Florida, V. M. I., Georgia Tech, V. P. I. and Mississippi A. and M. are all racing for the goal—the Southern Conference tournament.

Troy and Candor meet tomorrow night in the finals for the group two basketball title. Candor won over Biscoe 33-15 in the semi-finals, while Troy defeated Mount Gilead 35-15. Both of these teams have been showing up well this season, having defeated several of the larger schools as well as triumphing over their class B opponents. From past performances we predict the Candor boys to come through this contest unscathed and we also concede them a good chance at the state class B title.

Intramural athletics have grown so much in favor in the last year or two that a large portion of the undergraduate body is now taking part in one form or another. But there is still room for improvement and growth. Personally we would like to see intramural tennis get under way. More students take part in this sport than in any other sport on the campus except bull-shooting, and the organization of an intramural tennis league would be a relatively simple matter. Expense for equipment would be at a minimum, since the great majority of those who would take part are already supplied with the necessities of the game—very bare necessities, to be sure, in some instances. Some of our otherwise sartorially elegant young men are in the habit of appearing on the courts arrayed in various representations of what the college man is not wearing. A much begrimed gym suit—or a fragment thereof—constitutes in the minds of many the logical apparel pour le jeu de paume. But to prescribe the ideal tennis costume is outside our sphere. We'll leave that to our esteemed contemporary Beau Gent. And besides, on some of these warm spring days we're not so sure but that the comfort and freedom of movement granted by a gym suit do not partially offset the sartorial disadvantages.

Two Great Boxing Teams To Meet Tomorrow Night

Penn State Mitmen National Champions and Tar Heels Southern Title Holders Last Year; Archie Allen May Not Fight; Extra Seats Being Erected In Tin Can.

The Tar Heel boxers, southern champions, will probably face Penn State's national collegiate champions here tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock without the services of their star Captain Archie Allen and without a bantamweight.

There is a capable substitute for Captain Allen in Hoke Webb, Phi Beta Kappa puncher from Raleigh, but the Tar Heels will bank their hopes of victory principally on five fighting regulars in the feather, light, middle, light heavy and heavy weights.

Captain Allen received a cut over the eye in winning a knockout from Florida's welterweight last Saturday night that will keep him out of the fight Saturday night. Evan Vaughan, the Tar Heels' one bantam, has been on the sick list the last three meets and will probably not be back in shape before the southern tournament.

The other boys are in good shape though, and primed to give the Lions from Pennsylvania the scrap of their lives — Harry Sheffield, star featherweight; Noah Goodridge, 135-pounder; Obie Davis, 160-pounder, and John Warren, light heavy, who have each lost but one close decision all season; and Bill Koenig, the grid star who has been coming out so rapidly as a heavyweight.

Penn State will present one of the greatest college clubs ever developed in this country, despite the fact that two national college champions graduated last year.

Epstein is 115-pound college champion, and since the Tar Heels will be without a bantam, may be moved up to fight the scrappy 125-pound Sheffield.

Casoni, lightweight, is a veteran, and his fight with Goodridge should be a great feature. Struble and Captain McAndrews, Penn's two heavies, are likewise veterans, and should show some great fighting against Warren and Koenig.

Stoop, 125-pounder; Lewis, welterweight, and Chaikowsky, middleweight, are newcomers on the team, but all are good men, especially Stoop and Lewis.

CAGERS TO PLAY LAST CONFERENCE CONTEST TONIGHT

Game With V. P. I. To Decide Whether or Not Team Will Be in Tournament.

North Carolina's White Phantoms will close their 1930 southern conference season in a game here Friday night with V. P. I.'s Gobblers.

A final Big Five battle with Davidson remains on the schedule for next week, but the Gobbler game will close out the Tar Heels' conference play.

It may decide also whether the Tar Heels, high and mighty rulers of the conference four of the last eight seasons, will make the select 16 teams who get invitations to the tournament this year.

The Tar Heels rated No. 16, just on the border line, last Sunday. A victory will be almost essential to send to the conference tourney the team that was once ruler supreme.

The Phantoms conquered the Gobblers, 30-21, in a previous engagement, and will be fighting with all might and main to avoid upsets in Friday night's game.

Coach Jim Ashmore, the team, and supporters have all eyes set on the team's participation in the tournament, it seems.

With a big outfit, but handicapped by an utter lack of veteran forwards, the Phantoms have had a season that has just been "so-so."

Their offensive showing has improved every game, however, and that and their fine fighting spirit has been amply attested in recent 28-26, 26-25, and 37-36 showings against such strong quints as State's southern champions, Loyola and Duke.

Folks think now that just such a team might prove the dark horse of the tournament, as State did last year.

Coach Jim Ashmore said today that he would probably start Neiman and Dameron, forwards; Edwards, center; and Marpet and Alexander, guards, in an attempt to blast the Gobblers and win an invitation to the tournament for the Tar Heels.

The game is scheduled to begin at 8:30 just following a battle between the Carolina and V. P. I. freshmen.

Baseball Notice

All pitchers and catchers, both varsity and freshman, must report to Emerson field stadium this afternoon at 4:00 o'clock. Bunn Hearn, who is to coach pitchers and catchers, is here and work is to start immediately.

MATMEN WORKING HARD FOR V. M. I

Quinlan Expects Lexington Meet Saturday Night to Be Hardest of Season.

Coach Chuck Quinlan is grooming the Tar Heel wrestlers for one of their toughest meets of the season, scheduled with V. M. I. at Lexington, Saturday night.

V. M. I. tied with Duke for the best wrestling record in the conference last season, and took a close meet from North Carolina that relegated the Tar Heels into second place honors.

This season the Tar Heels are undefeated in the Big Five and Southern Conference, and if V. M. I. can be passed, their chances for a victory in the first annual tournament should be ace-high.

V. M. I. has mainly a team of veterans back from last year's fine team, and looks like a tough test.

Carolina will present its own veterans, headed by one of the best wrestlers developed in the South in Fred Stallings, brilliant 125-pounder, who is undefeated for the season and who numbers among his victories falls won over strong Princeton and Navy wrestlers.

Stallings will get the call at the 125-pound post, with Bell or Usher wrestling 115; Captain Wayne Woodard or Albright wrestling 135; Tsumas or Sanders caring for the 145-pound post; and Ferguson, who has lost but one match, wrestling 175, and Houston taking care of the heavy post.

"VIRGINIA" AND "GEORGIA TECH" CLASH TOMORROW

Will Fight It Out in Kenan Stadium at 2 O'clock for Second Place in Grid League.

"Virginia" and "Georgia Tech" clash in Kenan stadium at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon in the eighth of the Tar Heels' winter practice games.

With four games won and none lost, and but one more game to play, the mythical "Georgia" team, led by its backfield stars Nash, Branch and House, has the winter championship sewed up. "Virginia," with principal strength concentrated in the Magner-Slusser halfback combine, bowed previously to "Tech's" fine line by 18-0, "Tech" doing its scoring on a passing attack and several long sprints by Chuck Erickson. The "Cavaliers," who beat "Tennessee" 6-0, when the latter had beaten "Tech" by the same margin, will be hoping to write a different story in tomorrow's battle.

Probable lineups are:

"Virginia"		"Ga. Tech"
Nelson	L. E.	Nichols
Oliver	L. T.	Sharkey
Crew	L. G.	Blackwood
Grier	C.	Allen
Dunavant	R. G.	Fysal
Underwood	R. T.	Collins
Allen	R. E.	Parsley
Peacock	Q. B.	Wyrick
Magner	L. H.	Jackson
Slusser	R. H.	Erickson
McNeil	F. B.	Suggs

HENDLIN REQUESTS FENCERS SEE HIM

Fencing director Hinkey Hendlin announces that anyone who is interested in fencing, whether he has had any experience or not, is urged to compete in intramural fencing. It is not necessary that he be the picked representative of any fraternity or dormitory. Anyone who can get two other men to form a team with him may compete; if anyone cannot get others to form a team but is interested in fencing, he should see Mr. Hendlin, room 313 Old East, and he will be placed upon an independent team.

Regular intramural points will be given, not only to the winning teams but to any team that competes. At the end of the season a banquet will be given to the winning team.

Director Hendlin will choose an all-campus team, whose members will be asked to compete in varsity matches and will be rewarded with gold tie-pin foils.

Anyone who is at all interested is urged to see Hendlin at once to receive instructions and advice. Several men have made appointments with him recently but have failed to keep them; he urges these men and all newcomers to see him this week if possible. He will be in his room after any basketball games this week and will also be in Thursday night from 9 to 11.

The varsity fencing team schedule has not as yet been made out. Matches have been tentatively scheduled with Alabama, South Carolina, Georgia, and Georgia Tech; matches with several other schools are under consideration.

Southern Indoor Games Draw Host Of Stars Here March 8

Hamm, Graydon, Flippin, Wisner, Day, Young, and McGinn Practically Sure of Coming.

FIRST OF KIND IN SOUTH

Meet Attracting Much Attention In Athletic Circles; Carolina Runners-up Last Year, To Make Strong Bid for High Honors.

Advance dope indicates that the cream of the south's cindermen will converge on the University of North Carolina for the first southern conference indoor games here March 8.

The meet will be the first indoor championship track meet ever held by the southern conference, and is attracting wide attention.

Georgia Tech has already signified intention of sending a large delegation, and that means Ed Hamm and Doug Graydon among others will be present.

Hamm holds the world's broad-jump record at 25 feet 11 1-8 inches. Graydon hurls the javelin 205 feet. Both boys are among the south's best sprinters as well.

The University of Virginia is reported to be planning to send a large delegation headed by the satellites Flippin, Wisner, and Day. Wisner is perhaps Hamm's toughest southern rival at the sport of propelling the human body through air. Day ranks with the south's best shot putters. Flippin is co-holder of a world's hurdle record.

Washington and Lee will send its southern conference championship mile-relay team, composed this year of the veterans Shepard and Dickey and the newcomers Sandifer and Broderick, along with other stars.

Georgia is reported to have plans of sending an all-star aggregation headed by Bob Young, who has won the last two southern conference cross country runs, and who placed second in the mile-run at the conference last year.

The home-town Tar Heels, state champions an eighth consecutive season and southern runners-up last year, will make their own strong bid to carry off honors in the first tournament.

State and Duke, also among the homefolks, are reported to be planning their own campaigns. McGinn, second in the conference 880 last year, will probably head the Wolfpack delegation, and Simon, who broke the navy cross country course record, the Dukemen.

The meet is to be held in the big Tin Can here, beginning at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon and at 6:45 Saturday night. There will be four freshman events and seven events for high and prep schools, as well as 12 varsity events.

Co-Eds Drop Second Game to Leaksville By Score of 36-16

The Tar Heelettes lost to Leaksville Y.W.C.A. by a score of 36 to 16 Wednesday night at Leaksville. The co-eds played a brilliant game, but the accurate shooting of Brooks, scintillating forward for the winners, was too much for Coach Farris' protegees. Johnson topped the Tar Heelettes with 10 points, and Brooks was high scorer for the winners with 14 points.

This is the second loss of the season to Leaksville for the co-eds.

The lineup:

Co-Eds		Leaksville
Johnson	Forward	McCullum
Thacker	Forward	Landrith
Lee	Forward	Brooks
Currie	Guard	Brown
Curry	Guard	Gallimore
Hill	Guard	Young

Substitutes: for Leaksville: Hayden, Hall.

Referee: Merritt.

Best House Wins

Best house defeated Law School yesterday 44 to 22. The game was not unusually interesting as Best house was better organized into a smooth working team and had little difficulty in downing the lawyers.

Leonard, with 17 points was the star for Best house, but was closely followed by Harper with 16 markers.

Kellogg led Law School's scoring with 13 tallies.

The lineup:

Best (44)		Lawyers No. 2 (22)
Leonard (17)		Story (3)
Powell (5)		Kellogg (13)
Harper (16)		Benton
Tsumas (6)		Morse (2)
Wright		Parker (4)

Zeta Psi Wins 33-20

Zeta Psi beat Chi Psi yesterday afternoon, 33-20. Campbell, Chi Psi ace, was closely guarded and was not able to find the basket with his uncannily accurate long shots as much as usual. Snow was high man with 14. Barber and Wilson came second with 9 each.

Lineup:

Zeta Psi (33)		Chi Psi (20)
Snow (14)		Campbell (8)
Barber (9)		Hovis (4)
Wilson (9)		Atwood
Williams (1)		Swope (7)
Whitehead		Hollett (1)

COLLINS PARTIAL TO 99

People locally think "Chuck" Collins, Tar Heel coach, must believe in number "99." Captain Ray Farris carried that number as he led the Tar Heel grid forces through a sensational 346-point season last year. And now Coach Collins' Chrysler coupe besports the license number "99." Strud Nash, halfback and captain-elect for 1930, wore "61" last season. Folks are wondering if Coach Collins will require the new captain to carry "99" again.

GRIDDERS MAY FEATURE S. C. INDOOR SPRINTS

Football players may play a prominent part in the sprint events at the first Southern Conference indoor games at the University on March 8. The Tar Heels will present their own halfbacks Slusser and Erickson, and Tulane is reported to be sending the all-southern Billy Banker. If Alabama sent its all-American Tony Holm, the sprints would take on an almost wholly griddish air.

CHASE ACCEPTS ILLINOIS OFFER

complete expressions of the state university idea. The University is located in Urbana-Champaign, a community with a population of 30,000 and about 130 miles south of Chicago. It was founded in 1867. The enrollment last year, not including the summer session, was 12,800. There are 1454 members on the faculty and administrative staffs.

The institution has been given generous support by the state. For maintenance for the current biennium it has approximately eleven millions. There was recently completed an extensive building program. It has a main campus of 400 acres and other property to make up a total of 2500 acres. There are 64 buildings on the main campus and 28 buildings on the experimental farms. The schools of medicine, dentistry and pharmacy are located in Chicago.

There are nine members on the board of trustees, elected for a term of six years each. The governor and state superintendent of public instruction are ex-officio members.

It is coeducational and the single institution for higher education in the state. It admits women to all classes and departments and includes agriculture and engineering in its courses. It represents the sum total of the University, State College and North Carolina College for Women in this state.

Dr. David Kinley, who retires at the end of the present academic year, is 67 years of age. He has been president for the last ten years.

Dr. Chase and his family are planning to move to Illinois sometime during the summer.

There was much speculation on the campus last night as to a possible successor. Members of the faculty most frequently suggested were R. D. W. Connor, Frank Graham and Archibald Henderson. Dr. F. P. Gaines, president of Wake Forest College, was among outsiders mentioned.

The resignation of Dr. Chase is regarded as a tremendous loss to the university and to the state. It will be difficult to replace him. When he was picked for the presidency eleven years ago he was unheralded and unsung. He was the "dark horse" among the many men then suggested. His job was made all the more difficult by virtue of the fact that he was to take up work that the late Edward K. Graham had carried on so brilliantly.

How well Dr. Chase has fitted into the job and grown with it has been the marvel of even those who had confidence in him at the time he was selected. He is today regarded as the outstanding college president in the south and one of the most distinguished in the country.

It has been during his administration that the University has seen its greatest material growth and development to date. In 1921 came the great educational campaign that swept the state from Cherokee to Currituck. It was inspired and directed from Chapel Hill. The result was a bond issue of $20,000,000 for permanent improvements for charitable and educational institutions to cover a six-year period. The results are in evidence here today as on other campuses. Since 1919 the student enrollment has more than doubled, nine new dormitories and four classroom buildings have been erected, a number of the older buildings have been remodeled, and the University has been given foremost rank among leading educational institutions of the country.

Dr. Chase has been virtually a crusader for the forces of intellectual freedom, emphasizing at the same time that it is far more important to teach students how to think than what to think. His firm stand was largely instrumental in defeating the first anti-evolution bill in the state legislature in 1925.

The Chase policies have commanded the respect of leading educators throughout the country. Evidences of this fact were his election to the presidency of the National Association of State Universities, of his election to membership on the General Education Board, a Rockefeller foundation, and to a directorship of the Julius Rosenwald fund; and the election of the University to the institutional presidency of the Association of American Universities.

Further evidence is found in the fact that previously he has been offered the presidency of the universities of Oregon and Cincinnati, Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, and the Social Science Research Council of New York.

Dr. Chase is 46 years old. He was born in Groveland, Mass., the son of Charles and Agnes (Woodburn) Chase. He was graduated from Dartmouth with the A. B. degree in 1904, being awarded a master's degree by the same institution in 1908. He won his doctorate from Clark University in 1910.

Honorary degrees have been conferred on him by Lenoir-Rhyne College, Wake Forest College, University of Georgia and Dartmouth.

In 1910 he was married to Miss Lucretta Crum of Logansport, Ind. They have one daughter, Elizabeth Woodburn.

Dr. Chase is a psychologist. In 1909 and 1910 he was director of the clinic for subnormal children of Clark University. He came to the University of North Carolina in 1910 as professor of the philosophy of education, being made professor of psychology in 1914. In 1918 on the death of Dr. Graham, Dr. Chase succeeded the late Marvin H. Stacy, who had been elected chairman of the faculty, as acting dean of the college of liberal arts. On the death of Dean Stacy Dr. Chase was elected chairman of the faculty in January, 1919, being elected to the presidency in June of that year.

Dekes Win Another

The D. K. E. team added another to its string of victories by defeating Theta Kappa Nu Wednesday 31 to 12. The superior height of the D. K. E. basketeers game them an advantage which the Theta Kappa Nu's were unable to overcome. Despite this handicap the losers put up a gallant fight that made the game one of the most interesting of the series.

Fenner starred for D. K. E. with 10 points, while Chatham and Craig followed with 8 each. Wall, with 8 points to his credti, was outstanding for Theta Kappa Nu.

The lineup:

D. K. E. (31)	Th. K. N. (12)
Chatham (8)	Wall (8)
Fenner (10)	Lufty (2)
Willis (4)	Henry
Craig (8)	Jones (1)
Dunn (1)	Midgett (1)

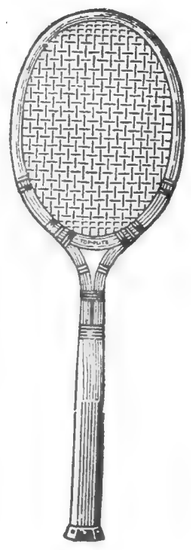
"HER PRIVATE AFFAIR" AT CAROLINA TODAY

Production of Ann Harding's all-dialogue star picture, "Her Private Affair," at the Pathe studio marked a reunion between Harry Bannister, who plays the leading masculine role, and Rollo Lloyd, director of dialogue on the picture.

About three years ago Bannister played the featured leading man's role in "Tenth Avenue," which Lloyd, then one of the best known figures in the New York theatrical world, produced and directed.



Lloyd acted as dialogue director of "Her Private Affair" in conjunction with Paul Stein, who directed this all-talking picture, which will be seen and heard at the Carolina theatre today. Well known stage and screen players who fill important characterizations in support of Miss Harding are Kay Hammond, John Loder, William Orlamond, Lawford Davidson, Elmer Ballard and Arthur Hoyt.

Child Labor Needs More Legislation States Mrs. Swift

"North Carolina has no educational requirement whatever for children under 16 years who leave school for work," Mrs. Bulus Bagby Swift, chairman of the child welfare committee of the North Carolina League of Women Voters, told the members of the North Carolina club in a lecture here Wednesday night.

Lecturing on the subject, "The North Carolina Child in Industry," Mrs. Swift contrasted the conditions of child labor in this state with those of other southern states. She pointed out that only two states in the union permit as long working hours in manufacturing establishments and that only one other state permits as long a working period in cotton and woolen mills as North Carolina.

"North Carolina has a maximum 8-hour day and 48-hour week for children under 16," Mrs. Swift said, "but this is virtually nullified by the exemption of children between 14 and 16 who have completed the fourth grade of school."

In 46 states there is some legislation against the employment of children under 16—in some states 18—years of age in dangerous occupations. North Carolina, on the other hand, "has no legislative restriction on the employment of children in any occupation except mining and quarrying," Mrs. Swift said.

As a remedy for these conditions Mrs. Swift recommended the establishment of an 8-hour working day for children 16 years of age or under, the requirement of at least a sixth grade education for children 16 or under leaving school for work, and the prohibition of the employment of children under 16 in a specified list of hazardous occupations—such as working with machinery in motion, dangerous gases, naked electric wires, and elevators.

Campus Is Saddened By Dr. Chase's Resignation

Much Speculation Concerning Successor; Connor, Henderson And Graham Most Frequently Mentioned.

(By R. W. Madry)

A pall of sadness tinged with pride hung low over the University of North Carolina campus today when it was learned officially that President Harry Woodburn Chase had tendered his resignation.

In the twenty years that he has been here the University community has learned to know and to love Dr. Chase. He and his faculty have been a happy official family. They have worked as teammates and always in the closest harmony. As was the case in the Graham administration, there have been no factions in the Chase administration.

The students held him in highest regard as their leader. They respected him for his educational statesmanship and his catholic views, but they loved him most perhaps because they felt that he was so human. They never found in Dr. Chase anything that resembled sham or hypocrisy.

Mingled with this sadness and regret over his resignation was a strong pride in the great opportunity that will come to him as president of the University of Illinois, one of the half dozen largest universities in the country.

Students and faculty alike were comforted today by the thought that in calling Dr. Chase away from Chapel Hill the University of Illinois had not only given him an enlarged opportunity to serve the nation but at the same time had paid the University of North Carolina in particular and the south in general the highest of tributes.

Messages of regret and congratulation poured in all day. Most of the congratulations came from Illinois, most of the regrets from North Carolina, although a number of telegrams contained both. Dr. David Kinley, who is retiring and whom Dr. Chase is to succeed, was one of the first to offer felicitations. Then came messages from Illinois alumni association, from the faculty, student body, trustees, and numerous student organizations. They all ran in the same vein. They were all tremendously enthusiastic and gratified that Dr. Chase was coming to live with them.

One of the most enthusiastic messages came from President L. D. Cuffman of the University of Minnesota.

It is understood that Governor Max Gardner is to call a special meeting of the board of trustees to consider a successor to Dr. Chase.

If there are any avowed candidates they were not announcing themselves today. That fact, however, did not prevent the community from indulging in a generous amount of speculation.

The view was expressed by many that the next head of the

KNOOP ADDRESSES ENGINEERS' MEET

Tells Why Walter Craig Kerr Is Considered One Of Foremost Engineers Of His Time.

The University student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers held its regular meeting last night in Phillips hall. The program presented consisted of a talk by Frederick Knoop on the life of Walter Craig Kerr and an illustrated talk by E. L. Lowery on deisel engines.

Mr. Knoop gave a brief sketch of the life of Mr. Kerr and then pointed out the facts in his career which have caused him to be considered one of the foremost engineers of his time.

The principles of operation of deisel engines as well as descriptions of several large installations of this type of power plant were presented by Mr. Lowery.

At this meeting plans were made for representatives of the local branch to attend the meeting of the Raleigh branch of the A. S. M. E. next Tuesday. This meeting will be in the nature of a joint meeting, and several members of the local student branch will attend.

LAW MEN ORGANIZE FIRST YEAR CLUBS

Four law clubs are now being organized by Waddell Gholson, president of the law school association. The clubs will be composed of members of the first year class, and will bear the names of Battle, McGehee, Manning, and Pearson, or other names which may be selected by the groups. Members of the faculty who have agreed to serve as advisers are Professors McIntosh, Breckenridge, Wettach, and McCall. The clubs are regular institutions of the law school, being reorganized each year. They are designed to give training in preparing written briefs and in making arguments under conditions identical to those in the Supreme Court of the state. Each club is to conduct three cases, the first two comprising the preliminaries. All members of the clubs will participate in one of the preliminaries, and judges will be selected from the third year class. Winners of the preliminaries will face each other in arguing the third case, when the faculty adviser will serve as Chief Justice.

Statement of the facts of the cases are to be furnished by the faculty advisers in a form corresponding to the record of trial in a state supreme court case. Argument of the preliminary cases will be held 7:30 p. m. March 13th. Procedure will be identical to that of the supreme court, and no student will be allowed to read from a brief.

CO-OP STUDENTS TO SCATTER TO DISTANT POINTS

Junior Engineering Men Will Start Practical Experience Monday; Some To Middle-West.

Monday morning twenty members of group 1 of the junior cooperative engineering students will report for work with the various firms to which they have been assigned, and the men whom they are replacing will begin a seven week's period of study here at the University.

Since 1922 when the system of a cooperative junior year was installed in the school of engineering, junior students in this school have spent half their time at the University and the other half doing actual work with various firms who use the students in their organizations.

This year the students are working with many different organizations, some in Chapel Hill and some as far away as Illinois. Within the state the group will go to the Armature Winding Company, the Duke Power Company, R. H. Bouligny and Company, and the Charlotte Filter Plant, all in Charlotte; the Tidewater Power and Light Company at Wilmington; the U. C. S. P. and the State Department of Conservation and Development in Chapel Hill; and the locating and bridge departments of the State Highway at Marion and Raleigh.

Outside the state the men will go to the Maintenance Department of the Southern Railway at Danville, the Catipillar Tractor Company in Peoria, Illinois, the Illinois Telephone Company at Chicago, and the Milwaukee Sewage Commission in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

The system of cooperative work which is used at the University is known as the Harvard plan in which one year of the course is spent in cooperative work with the students spending half their time in school and the other half on the job. The idea of having students do cooperative work originated at the University of Cincinnati about 1906, when a five year curriculum was adapted which included the feature that half of the student's time was to be spent doing actual work. This plan was altered at Harvard to include only one year of cooperative work. This plan was adopted here in 1922.

The plan of cooperative work for students in the school of engineering was installed because through it the students obtain a

ENGINEERS DISCUSS CO-OPERATIVE JOBS

At the meeting of the William Cain student chapter of the A. S. C. E. Thursday night, five junior members of the society gave brief descriptions of the co-operative jobs on which they have been working this year.

The work with the Southern Railway at Danville, the State Department of Conservation and Development, the locating and bridge divisions of the State Highway Commission, the Charlotte Water Works, and the Chapel Hill Filtration Plant was discussed briefly by the students who have been working on these jobs.

The program, which was under the direction of "Chuck" Erickson, vice-president of the society, was presented for the purpose of acquainting the sophomore members with the jobs that will be open to them next year.

Meetings Of Taylor Society Open To All

To correct a false impression that has arisen in the minds of some, that the meetings of the University branch of the Taylor Society are open to members only, the president of the branch, W. C. Burnett, has stated that all meeting of the Society are open to the public and that anyone interested in the subjects under discussion at the meetings is urged to attend.

During this quarter the Society has heard several faculty speakers who have spoken on various matters related to business management. At the next meeting, Tuesday evening, Professor Taylor, of the school of commerce and economics, will speak on "Scientific Management in Marketing."

College Students Who Drop Out Of School Become Business Men

(By Jay Dratler)

Lo! and behold! We have at last discovered, without the aid of the incomparable Sherlock Holmes and his bewildered Dr. Watson, what becomes of men who drop out of school before the end of the quarter.

David W. Bell of Washington, D. C., dropped out of school a couple of weeks ago because of ill health. And because of ill wealth he promptly searched around for a job. He finally got one in Durham—to be near his girl friend, he said—with a publishing and advertising concern.

The firm was in its infancy when Bell secured the job, and it was incorporated a few days later; he bought some of the first stock issued. The "Seeing America First and Telling the World Co." as it was named, invited all of the original stockholders to serve on the board of directors and Bell was included.

Soon afterward he displayed such diligence and aptitude that the president of the firm, W. M. Laughorn of Virginia, made him general sales manager. And now, after about two weeks, he is major stockholder in the corporation, a member of the board of directors, and general sales manager of a half-million dollar concern. Now you know what happens to fellows who don't want to study. They become big business men. That's it, exactly.

Candidates To Be Chosen From Districts Instead Of States; A Total Of Thirty-Two Scholarships From United States.

The recent changes in the administration of the Rhodes Scholarship Fund will affect the applications from the University of North Carolina students, according to an announcement from Dean Addison Hibbard of the College of Liberal Arts.

Local candidates for the scholarships which begin in October of 1931, must be in the hands of Mr. Hibbard, head of the local committee, by October 18 of this year. On December 6th two candidates will be selected to represent North Carolina at the district meeting which will be held about two weeks later. The district which this state is in includes Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Tennessee. Four candidates will be selected out of each of the eight districts in the United States, thus making thirty-two Rhodes Scholars from this country.

Another important change is that beginning in 1930 Rhodes Scholars will be allowed the option of spending their third year at Oxford or at any other University in the world, outside their native country, provided it may be best for the pursuance of their studies. They will be allowed to take their third year's work immediately after the completion of the first and second year's work, or they may return to the United States after the first two years at Oxford and work here several years and then return to England for the third year.

The stipend of a Rhodes Scholar is 400 pounds (approximately $2,000), and no restriction is placed upon the choice of studies of a Rhodes Scholar. In order to become eligible for the candidacy of a Rhodes Scholarship the applicant must be a male citizen of the United States between the ages of 19 and 25 and unmarried. He also must have completed at least his sophomore year in college. A candidate may apply in the state in which he resides or in the one where he has received two years or more of his college education.

The qualities considered in making the selection are as follows:

(1) Literary and scholastic ability and attainments.

(2) Qualities of manhood, truth, courage, devotion to duty, sympathy, kindliness, usefulness and fellowship.

(3) Exhibition of moral force of character and of instincts to lead and to take an interest in his schoolmates.

(4) Physical vigor as shown by interest in outdoor sports or in other ways.

McCormick To Harvard

SCOUT SEMINAR COMES TO CLOSE THIS AFTERNOON

Executive Meeting Under Direction Of Commodore Longfellow To Conduct Business Session Today.

The Boy Scout Seminar, being held here under the auspices of the University extension division and the regional educational committee of the Boy Scouts of America, will be brought to a close by the final sessions today.

Since the opening Thursday evening, the seminar has, according to those in charge of the program, proved quite successful for the small number of executives from over the state who are attending. This seminar is the second of the year, the first having been given in January. The 12 hours work of each executive at this session will complete the quota of 25 hours required by the standards of the national organization.

Three talks by prominent scouting leaders of the state featured the opening program Thursday evening. Paul Schenck of Greensboro, who is Boy Scout Commissioner for the south, delivered the first of these. Executive Claude Humphries of Raleigh spoke on the growth of the Boy Scout movement in North Carolina. The final talk of the evening was given by Executive R. M. Shiele of Gastonia on the subject of taxidermy. Mr. Shiele had a number of specimens with which he explained the fundamentals of his subject.

The meetings of the seminar yesterday morning were conducted by Dr. McPherson of the medical school, who gave the development of public health, and by Dr. Plyler of the physics department, who demonstrated some of the latest experiments in physics. The work yesterday afternoon was directed by Commodore Longfellow, first aid director of the American Red Cross.

The executives were guests of the Athletic Association last night at the Carolina-V. P. I. basketball game. After the game Dr. Fussler of the physics department spoke to a meeting of the seminar on astronomy.

The first meeting today will be under the direction of Commodore Longfellow. Afterwards the seminar will be brought to a close by a business session.

Wilder Injured In Motorcycle Crash

J. F. Wilder, freshman in the University, sustained a broken leg and several minor lacerations Thursday night as result of collision between two cars and the motorcycle on which he was riding. The collision occurred near Spencer dormitory while Wilder was on an errand for Sutton's Drug Store. He was taken to the infirmary, where the leg was temporarily bandaged, and was later taken to Watt's hospital in Durham to have his leg set.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

There is enough alcohol in the yield of an acre of potatoes to drive the machinery necessary to cultivate the field for a hundred years.—Henry Ford.

A Backward Step

At the next meeting of the undergraduate faculty the fate of optional attendance at the University will be decided. Last week optional attendance for upperclassmen in the A.B. school was abolished by the scant margin of two votes, but fortunately a group of progressive faculty men were so emphatic in their opposition that a second motion to reconsider the matter was passed.

During the past few years the University has made remarkable advances. It has gained a nation-wide reputation as one of the most liberal and progressive institutions in the country. But abolition of optional class attendance would be a distinct mark of retrogression; it is a rather remarkable coincidence that the movement for a return to iron-clad rules of academic routine should come at a time when it is a foregone conclusion that the University will lose one of the most eminent and liberal presidents it has ever had.

By voting for abolition of optional attendance, a member of the faculty is practically admitting that he is a failure as a teacher, that he cannot make his classes interesting and beneficial enough to furnish the student an incentive to attend them regularly. According to modern theories of education, the student must exhibit initiative, a genuine desire for knowledge and a willingness to secure for himself the real benefits of college. Compulsory attendance defeats its own purpose; it establishes a dull routine that effectually destroys student initiative and places a premium upon blind acceptance of the interpretations and opinions of others.

The most proficient and learned professors in the world cannot hand out college educations, tied up in neat packages like medicine or boxes of candy. Although it has been repeated until it has become almost trite, the statement that nobody can give a man an education, that he must secure it for himself, has lost none of its truth. Optional attendance fosters in the student the attitude that it is up to him to make of his courses what he will. If he has a real desire for knowledge, he will utilize the classroom lectures to supplement and direct his own study and research, rather than depend upon them for whatever pre-digested scraps of learning he may pick up—and almost immediately forget.

Frequently a student may study in the library or in his own room during the class period in order to determine for himself some point in the course concerning which his mind is not clear, thereby benefitting far more than he could by a half-dozen lectures or "question and answer" sessions. To be sure, there are always a few who will abuse the privileges afforded by optional attendance, but they are mere collegiate derelicts, who would not be materially bettered by attendance upon ten thousand classes.

Abolition of optional attendance would be a distinct backward step. It would seriously endanger the progress of the University and the reputation for liberalness of which everyone connected with it is justly proud.

Undergraduate "Fun"

One of the much condemned characteristics of Carolina as a university is the prep school spirit alleged to prevail. The student body is often accused of boisterousness and small-boy playfulness utterly out of keeping with the dignity and maturity supposedly associated with university undergraduates. There seems to be a current idea that the average Carolina student is an irresponsible fellow whose conduct is hoyden, and whose seriousness and earnestness are nil.

From many standpoints this observation is, unfortunately, too true. As a student body Carolina undergraduates do not present a unified front of serious effort,—far from it. This is not saying that other institutions, that Duke or Tulane or Washington and Lee, are free from the rough housing, horse playing element; nor is it advocating the stiff affectation of reserve commonly associated with, for example, Harvard. It is saying, however, that such an element is too much in evidence on this campus, especially in the dormitories. No dormitory escapes rowdyism of some degree or other. If there are not exuberant whoops and yells at any time during the day, and worse, at night, often expressing itself at that time with Rabelasian gusto between residents of adjacent dormitories, then there is that indefinable but unmistakable outbreak known as horseplay.

Horseplay consists in wreaking damage to a room regardless of the furniture, and with no thought of the sanctity to the owner of any personal objects in the room. Sometimes this horseplay is spontaneous, coming as the result of good humored wrestling or of a general exuberance of spirits demanding noisemaking as the outlet of fun; at other times perpetrated when the occupant is absent.

One cannot wish for an artificial formality among groups of boys thrown together in intimate contact for nine months; like soldiers in barracks, college boys in dormitories cannot be expected to pose for plaster saints. But there are times when even the bounds of masculine decorum are severely strained, and merely as a commonly accepted understanding, as an individual consideration for others if nothing else, a certain restraint should be exercised. One's room should be inviolable except possibly in the case of friends; and if these friends choose to indulge in the undergraduate brand of fun it depends entirely upon the occupant as to how long it will last and how long others around about will continue to be annoyed.

This characteristic trait of "cutting up" among the students is perhaps inevitable in a heterogeneous assembly of more or less normal and healthy adolescents. It cannot be attributed to a deliberate rudeness or to unthinking discourtesy; we can be charitable and say that such antics and pranks spring from youthful humor and liveliness. But if a quality of moderation is applied to the boisterousness of dormitory existence, where one seems not compelled to observe the amenities of home, and this noticeable feature of the campus is lessened, then the students can face themselves with more self respect and there will be less misgivings when a visitor speaks of the even tenor of student life in other institutions. —R. H.

Carolina, The Training Ground

In the light of recent developments, we are forced to believe that the leading universities of the nation have come to think of the University of North Carolina as a training ground, where eminent college professors and presidents "get started." No sooner is a member of our faculty accorded a little praise in sundry parts of the educational world than tempting offers pour in to him from other and richer institutions. When a member of the Carolina faculty receives an offer which carries with it a salary twice as large as he draws here, one cannot humanly expect him to reject it.

There can be no doubt that it is a marked tribute to the University of North Carolina that other universities of the highest rank are constantly making attractive bids for the members of its faculty. But how can we secure and retain great teachers and presidents by offering them salaries which are, relatively speaking, very meager? The best universities of the land keep ever before them the purpose of employing the best scholars and teachers available. If the University of North Carolina is to prosecute a program during the next decade which will be commensurate with the progressive strides which it has taken during the last decade, then the trustees and other officials must retain the fine teachers which we already have and, in addition, enter the competition for additional ones. And this cannot be done unless larger salaries are made available.

Many faculty members have remained here at great financial sacrifice, largely because of their faith in the future of the state and their loyalty to the University itself. But even these will not stay here much longer if the people of the state do not respond to the demand for more funds. The number who have been so greatly attached to Chapel Hill and the surrounding territory that they would not leave is very small. The vast majority of those who have received better offers have yielded to the pressure. Such is certainly to be expected. We feel that it is a slam on the University of North Carolina for a man to be lured away from Chapel Hill, and yet we cannot help it, because the salaries which we offer great scholars are much smaller than those which other universities of the same rank offer them. We lament the departure of a great professor or president, but we can't blame either. We, ourselves, would do the same thing if we were in similar circumstances.

The writer feels that the people of the state must be made to realize the fact that the University is being forced to engage in nation-wide competition for its teachers, and that without reasonable salaries it will always play the part of the loser in the race for great professors and executives. They linger here for "but a moment," and then pass on.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

MORE FRATERNITIES WANTED

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

A few weeks ago a communication appeared in your columns signed "Frank Adamson" wherein the writer asked why there were not more fraternities at Carolina, thus allowing a larger number of men to participate in the advantages of fraternity life.

Last week a copy of "Banta's Greek Exchange" came to my attention, and a list it contained would indicate with actual figures that there are three national men's social fraternities in existence for every one which is represented at Carolina.

Why is it that these organizations do not establish chapters here? Certainly there are plenty of unaffiliated men who would become members, and many advantages would accrue, not the least of which would be a closer tying of alumni with their alma mater through the medium of their fraternities.

The writer would be pleased to learn the answer to this question.

MORRIS MOORE.

A SILLY "BUMMING" ORDINANCE

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Judging from the recent unjustifiable amendment to the Chapel Hill Bumming Ordinance, making it "unlawful for any person to stop any motor vehicle in the streets of Chapel Hill to pick up any pedestrian without first drawing up to the right-hand curb," we should not be surprised if an attempt should be made shortly to prohibit crossing from the east side of Franklin street to the west side, within the specially sanctified territory, between Spencer hall on the one hand and the red stop light on the other. When that worthy deed is accomplished we shall then probably be prohibited from smoking on Franklin street, or at least we may expect to escape by merely being ordered to carry the cigarette in the left-hand side only of the mouth, or perhaps we shall be allowed to smoke like real men between the hours of three and four in the afternoon.

The new bumming amendment seems about as uncalled for and silly as the above suggestions. No one has been injured while stepping into a car with the intention of going to Durham though the car be a few feet from the right-hand curb. No smash-up has occurred due to the fact that some one has taken compassion on a would-be week-ender, and has stopped right in the middle of the street, though such manner of stopping is seldom the case, to carry the fortunate boy fifty miles or a hundred miles, or a hundred and fifty miles right to his own front door. We think a protest might properly be raised in regard to this amendment which requires the motorist to draw up to the curb before picking up a student. When a car stops a few feet from the curb, is the would-be bummer to stand modestly on the side-walk and request the man at the wheel to 'drive over a little closer if you please!' No, he will not; he is going to get right in, and go to Durham, or home to see his mother, or somewhere else to see his sweetheart. I would wager that all of the town aldermen in existence, and all of the bumming ordinances, and all of the amendments could not prevent this. No, it would require an armed regiment, and even these would be friendly enough to let the boys catch rides. But that isn't the point.

The point is this: it is that young men are taught early in life that laws can be evil. The boy sees nothing wrong in the act of friendship rendered him by another which results in pleasure to the boy and his befriender. The bumming ordinance amendment, for him, establishes an unsurmountable barrier between him and the car in which he wishes to catch a ride. Those few feet present an impenetrable void. What is the boy going to do? The question has been answered; he is going to step over those few feet. May it be asked, with a measure of sanity, why it is necessary to erect this barrier between the student and his week-end trips? Many cars do pull over to the curb, the majority do, but why breed in the state's finest body of youth a disrespect and loathing for one law, and consequently for all law and all lawmakers in general.

Why not prohibit sunshine? It is about as useful and wholesome as bumming. Some people do get sun-stroke, and some people do have accidents while bumming. Nevertheless, such an enactment could not possibly create in the mind of the student a greater disrespect for law and authority.

Co-Op Students To Go To Various Points

contact with outside engineering interests and gain experience which develops characteristics which can be obtained in no other way.

Those students who are coming to Chapel Hill Monday for seven weeks of scholastic work will go back to the jobs on April 28 and will stay there until June 7, when they will return for a summer session of 7 weeks. Those going out on the jobs now will return to the University on April 28 for seven weeks, and on June 7 they will go back to work where they will remain until the latter part of August.

By means of the cooperative plan used in the school of engineering, the students are enabled to obtain in one year six months of work and six months of experience on the job and still not sever all connections with the University community, for the periods are short and periods of scholastic work are alternated with periods of work away from the University.

LAWYERS READ PAPERS ON JUSTICE IN EUROPE

At the meeting held recently in the law school building of the members of the new course in administration of justice, Attorney-General Brummitt and assistant Attorney-General Nash expressed great interest in the topic of discussion. Seven student papers dealing with the desirability of organizing a centralized department of justice in N. C. were read. The departments of justice of France, England, and the U. S. were examined, and a need in N. C. for control by the Attorney General of the work of prosecuting solicitors in the counties was agreed upon.

The Arrow - Man

By J. C. (Red) Williams

In the last issue of "Campus Snapshots" we asked a couple of questions which we promised to answer:

Question one—Why is it that the majority of Carolina students turn their heads to the left when called from the rear?

Answer—Medical science has found that the left ear is appreciably stronger than the right. This can be explained as follows: In the days of our grandfathers the old crank type of telephone was the only kind known. Since the crank was on the right side, the receiver was put on the left side. Through the medium of this extra use, the left ear gradually became stronger than the right. Although we have the dial system today which does not require a crank, there would be no point in changing the receiver from the left side of the instrument to the right side in order to accomodate the right hand.

Question two—Why is it that seventy-five percent of Carolina students enter and depart the hallways of Murphey, Saunders, Bingham, etc., by way of the left door rather than by way of the right one?

Now we've done it!

The numerous dogs with which our beloved campus is infested are to be commended for one virtue: They attend chapel with more assiduous regularity and pay much better attention than our friends, the freshmen.

'Twas Wordsworth who said:

"A perfect woman, nobly planned,
To warn, to comfort, and command."

We agree with the poet on all but one count. We consider that he let his instinct for rime run away with his reason when he said "to command." No sane man ever thought woman was made to command!

Fencing is one of the most valuable of modern sports. It requires a more accurate and alert brain than the average athletic game. Speed, steadiness, and skill are the determining factors. We are especially glad to note that a fencing team has been organized at Carolina, because the sport tends to develop and to augment the very factors which determine the outcome.

Tar Heel Boxers To Meet Penn State Team Tonight

Webb Will Take Allen's Place In Lineup; Pennsylvanians Have Excellent Record, And Some Hard Fighting Is Expected.

When the Tar Heel boxers meet Penn State's national champions tonight in the Tin Can, they will run up against a team of first class fighters, fighters who are "ring wise" in every sense of the word. Led by Captain Epstein, national intercollegiate bantamweight champion, the Lions have had a very successful season, having won from West Virginia 6-1, and having defeated the strong Western Maryland team 4-3.

The Heels will meet Penn State without the services of Captain Archie Allen, southern champion, and undefeated middleweight star. Hoke Webb, who will take Captain Allen's place in the lineup, will meet a mighty strong man in Lewis, of Penn State. Lewis is undefeated this season, having won from both West Virginia and Western Maryland by the knockout route.

A good fight is apt to be witnessed in the 125 pound division when Harry Sheffield, hard hitting little Tar Heel, meets Stroops of Penn State. Stroops is another undefeated Lion, having won from West Virginia on a judges' decision, and from Western Maryland by a knockout.

The Penn State team has another undefeated man in the 165 pound division, Chaikowski, who has won judges' decisions in both of his fights. Obie Davis will be the Tar Heel to oppose Chaikowski. Davis is a good fighter, and knows how to mix matters up.

The lineup:

Bantamweight, North Carolina will not enter a man.

Flyweight, Sheffield, N. C., will fight Stroops.

Lightweight, Goodridge, N. C., will meet Casoni.

Middleweight, Webb, N. C., will meet Lewis.

Welterweight, Davis, N. C., will meet Chaikowski.

Light heavyweight, Warren, N. C., will meet MacAndrews.

Heavyweight, Koenig, N. C., will meet Veneroso.

New Dorms Defeat "J"

New Dorms defeated J yesterday 37 to 18. The game was a real scrap, despite the fact that New Dorms had a superior team.

Vinson was leading scorer for New Dorms with 14 points. Lathan led J with 9 markers, while Shuford ran a close second with 8 points.

New Dorms (37)	J (18
Vinson (14)	Freeman
McMillan (2)	Lathan (9)
Hampton (8)	Rankin (1)
Love (8)	Shapiro
Forney (2)	Shuford (8)

Substitutions for New Dorms: Sale (3).

Old East Wins 61-8

Old East added another to its long list of victories by defeating Grimes 61 to 8 yesterday. Old East had a walkaway, scoring almost at will against the Grimes team, who found themselves covered every time that they came within range of the basket.

Hendlin led the scoring of Old East with the unusual number of 34 points. With his superior height, he seemed to have no trouble whatever of dropping the ball into the net.

Bontamise, with 4 points, led the scoring of Grimes.

Old East (61)	Grimes (8)
Hendlin (34)	Bontamise (4)

TAR BABIES BEAT V. P. I. RATS 20-15

Dave Henry's Playing Was Feature Of Freshman Attack.

In one of the roughest games played on the local floor this season, the Tar Babies defeated the V. P. I. Rats 20-15 in the second game last night in the Tin Can. As the play became faster it also became rougher and soon resembled a football game more than a basketball contest.

About three weeks ago the Tar Babies lost a hectic battle to the Rats, and last night's victory gave them an even break on the season's records.

The passwork and shooting of the Tar Babies has improved considerably in the past few games and they are now playing heads up basketball.

Dave Henry's playing was the backbone of the Tar Baby attack. Besides being high scorer with 10 points, Dave played a great defensive game stopping the majority of the Rat's attacks. Joe Dunn, forward, also played a good game for the Tar Babies. Hall was the star for the visitors.

The lineup:

Carolina (20)	V. P. I. (15)
Hines (2)	Hall (9)
Forward
Dunn (2)	Bosley (2)
Forward
Beale (3)	Seamon (2)
Center
Connor (2)	Wolfe (1)

Substitutions: Carolina Markham (1); Moore. V. P. I. Wilkinson; Kasun; Schareberg.

BASKETBALL TEAM TO FILL HURRIED DATE WITH NAVY

Leave Annapolis for Atlanta Tournament Immediately After Saturday Game.

The University of North Carolina basketball team will face Navy at Annapolis this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in its last intersectional tilt of the season.

Coach Jim Ashmore took a squad of nine men for the battle with the Middies, which showed full strength except for Lacy Harper, 6 foot 6 center, who received a sprained ankle in last Saturday night's Duke game that has kept him from working all week.

Men making the trip were Edwards, Neiman, Greene, and Hutchinson, forwards; Dameron, center; and Marpet, Alexander, Brown and Choate, guards; and Manager Lloyd Thompson.

Dameron, who has been running at forward, will work again at center, with the rookie Edwards taking Dameron's forward post. Neiman, forward, and Marpet and Alexander, guards, will probably round out the Tar Heel lineup.

Navy proved its power by a recent win over George Washington and is said to have one of the toughest quints in the East.

The game will be the harder for the Tar Heels by virtue of the fact that they will be playing without their veteran center and by virtue of the long trip, which is to begin immediately following tonight's final Southern Conference battle here with V. P. I.

SIDELIGHTS

by Sports Editor

FENCING SEEMS TO BE established at Carolina with its introduction into the intramural schedule as another item on the winter program. The awarding of points to the winners in the intramural fencing league will probably be along the same lines as in the regular football, basketball, or baseball leagues of the intramural department. Hinkey Hendlin, who seems to be the leader of the new movement as well as the coach, says that the all-campus fencing team that he will pick at the end of the tournament will receive gold tie-pin foils, and will also be asked to participate in any of the varsity matches in which their services are needed. Several of the dormitories and fraternities have already entered teams, but many more are expected to be represented before the league starts in the near future.

THE SOUTHERN CONFERence title seems to have numerous claimants. The Tar Heel Fencers have several strong teams as rival claimants to the throne, and matches have been arranged with some of them. Tentative matches have been scheduled with Georgia, Georgia Tech, and South Carolina, while negotiations are being made with other schools for matches. Several of last year's fencers are back in school and will probably be the strongest foils on the varsity. In addition to Hendlin, Fred and Dig Wardlaw, and Alfredo Nazareno have returned.

THE INDOOR MEET IN the Tin Can in a couple of weeks is the biggest sports event at Carolina in the near future. Numerous stars of gridiron and cinder path fame are reported as being entered for the first indoor southern conference track meet. The Tar Heel track and field men have been practicing daily in preparation for this meet, and for the beginning of the outdoor track schedule shortly afterward.

THE TAR HEEL CINDERpath men have an unusually strong schedule to face this year, which has only been possible to arrange because of Carolina's record in recent years in track. The sprints seem to be the Tar Heels' strongest point this year with several fast sophomores in addition to many of last year's sprinters. Ken Gay is the fastest sprinter from last year's team, but he will be given some close competition by Farmer and Slusser. Gay accounted for a large number of Carolina's points in the meets last spring, and placed among the highest individual Tar Heel scorers. Captain Dave Nims will probably hold down the half-mile run this year, although he has turned in good time in the 440-yard dash. Nims was one of the most versatile men on the varsity last year, and was easily shifted from one dash to another, however his usual run is 880 yards. Bill Perry, the only outstanding hurdler from 1929, will represent Carolina in both of the hurdle races, but his specialty is the highs. Ty Reid, prominent soph hurdler, will probably fill Stafford's place in the low hurdles in case Stafford does not return. Minor Barkley, recent captain of cross country, was a stellar miler last year and will return to that run this year. Cliff Baucom will no doubt be called upon to fill Johnnie Henderson's, last year's captain, position in the two mile run. Baucom showed up unusually well last year as a sophomore and was one of the few sophs to win his letter. Baucom ran Henderson close races in nearly all of the meets, and finished ahead of him in others. Baucom has just been elected to the cross country captaincy. The loss of Clarence Phoenix and George Pierce from last year's freshman team will be keenly felt in the distance runs.

Carolina Cagers Overwhelm V. P. I. Cadets By 41-23 Score

BATTERIES START EARLY WORKOUTS

Bunn Hearn, Former Carolina Hurler And Professional Player, Is Coaching Aspirants.

The crack of ball and bat was heard on Emerson field yesterday for the first time this season as baseball men donned their uniforms and settled down to the task of getting into shape for the 1930 season. Formal practice for the entire squad has not begun yet, but several ambitious aspirants for team berths have been taking advantage of the pre-spring weather and have been limbering up chasing flies and poling them out.

Regular practice for pitchers and catchers has begun, however, and Bunn Hearn, who is handling the batteries this year, says the prospects for a good outfit from the delivery side look good. Fleming and Wright, veteran hurlers, have started cutting loose with the kind of curves and speedy balls that it takes to ruin the batting averages of Carolina's opponents. Edwards, Johnny Greene, and "Long Tom" Longest are at present tied up with varsity basketball, but are expected to turn out for pitching practice soon.

Among the prospects for the backstop position are Captain Jimmie Maus, Bob Kushner, who caught for the freshmen last year, Johnson and Potter. These men have greased up their mitts and are getting ready to stop the throws behind the plate.

When regular practice gets under way, which will occur shortly if weather permits, a promising array of freshmen and subs will appear on the field to dispute the places the old men are lined up for. Satterfield, Cox, Barnhart, and Ball are missing from last year's lineup and competition for their places will be keen. Whitehead, shortstop, Maus, catcher, Lufty, first base, Jessup and Sher, right field, Fleming and Wright, pitchers, Jackson, second base, and Henry House, outfield, are among the old men expected to be in the run for a place on the varsity nine.

Coach Jim Ashmore will be in charge of the squad as usual this year as soon as the basketball tournament is over. Meanwhile Bunn Hearn, who takes over the pitching staff, is starting the men to work. Hearn, Carolina pitching ace a couple of decades ago, has had ample experience in professional baseball since leaving his alma mater and has returned here at odd times to assist with rounding the batteries into shape. After leaving here in 1910, Hearn went into professional ball and played for 20 years with various professional leagues. Among the teams with which he has played are the old Carolina League, the National League, the International, Virginia, and Piedmont Leagues and with York, Pennsylvania, in the New York-Pennsylvania circuit.

While playing with the Boston Braves, Hearn trained the Yale nine in preparation for the Harvard-Yale series, and in 1918 and 1919 he aided in putting out one of Carolina's most powerful teams. He has of late been making his home in Wilson.

Tar Heels' Last Conference Game Is Listless; Contest Called at 7 O'Clock To Enable White Phantoms To Leave Early For Annapolis.

In a listless contest, the Tar Heel quintet inflicted a crushing defeat upon the V. P. I. Cadets 41-23 in the Tin Can last night. The game was played at 7:00 instead of the originally planned 8:30 to enable the White Phantoms to catch a train for Annapolis where they will meet the Midshipmen this afternoon.

The Cadets offered very little opposition, the Tar Heel forwards continually breaking through their defense for scores. The Tar Heels would have undoubtedly rolled up a larger score was it not for their inability to follow up their shots. If the White Phantoms expect to do things at Atlanta, they had better follow up the rebounds.

The visitors opened the scoring with Tibbs sinking a goal from close range, but consecutive tallies by Green, Neiman, Marpet, Dameron, and Neiman soon had the score to 10-2. Zirkle put a stop to the Carolina scoring, sinking two free tosses, but the onrushing Tar Heels continued their scoring spree and added 7 more points before the half ended 17-7.

Carolina started off the final period with a rush, Neiman's excellent shooting and floorwork standing out. In this period the Tar Heels played their best brand of basketball, following their shots and playing air-tight ball. The first string defense was so tight that the Cadets were held scoreless for 15 minutes.

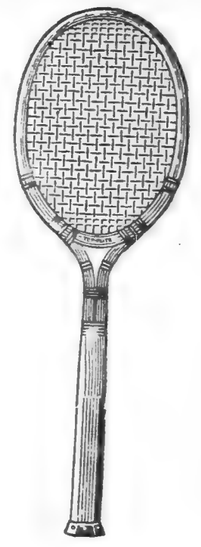
With 5 minutes to go Coach Ashmore shoved in the reserves. It was at this point that the Cadets rallied and mainly through the efforts of Zirkle, their star center, the score was brought up to 41-23 as the game ended.

"Weasel" Neiman was easily the outstanding player on the floor. Weasel's floor work and shooting were beautiful. He was high scorer with 13 points. Not far behind the Weasel was Art Marpet, who played a stellar game at guard, holding his opponent scoreless, and breaking up the visitor's combinations.

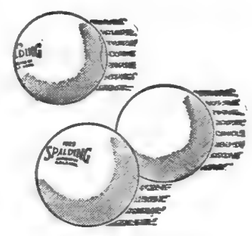
Zirkle was the best player for the Cadets and was closely followed by Captain Looney.

The lineup:

Carolina (41)	V. P. I. (23)
Neiman (13)	Tibbs (3)
Forward
Greene (6)	Baker (2)
Forward
Dameron (4)	Zirkle (10)
Center
Marpet (6)	Looney (4)
Guard
Alexander (4)	Owens (3)
Guard



Substitutions: Carolina: Hutchinson (3); Cleland (2); Edwards (3); Brown; Choate. V. P. I.: Amolie; Donaldson (1); Allebough; Yeggi. Referee: Pat Crawford (Davidson).



Manly Whips Steele

Manly defeated Steele yesterday by the score of 26 to 14. Although only four men played on each side, the game was packed with thrills. Each side played as if the southern conference championship hung in the balance. Fouls were numerous.

Barnwell starred for Manly with 10 points, while Smith led the scoring for Steele with 10 tallies.

Manly (26)	Steele (14)
Ball (8)	Fussell (4)
Barnwell (10)	Smith (10)

FOUR GAMES LEFT FOR GRIDDERS ON WINTER SCHEDULE

Coach Collins Working Hard On Lines And Backfields As Practice Season Closes.

Coach Collins is working the lines and the backfields as the end of the winter football season draws near. Special emphasis is being laid upon the offensive line, and scrimmages are held every day in an effort to strengthen the weaknesses of linemen.

There remain but four games to be played by the men on the squads:

Feb. 22: Ga. Tech vs. Virginia
Feb. 26: Georgia vs. Virginia.
March 1: Ga. Tech vs. Tenn.
March 1: Ga. Tech vs. Tenn.
March 8: Monograms vs. New Men.

The game between the Monograms and the New Men should be of great interest to the football fans as they will see a royal battle between the new contenders against the old holders of varsity positions. There are many freshmen who will give varsity men a strong race for their places on the team.

Among these are Allen, Greer, and Cole who have been making good at center; Petree, Newcombe, Philpott, and Oliverio at guard; McDade, Smith, Atkins, Collins, and Hodges are showing up well at tackle. At end Walker, Cole, Nichols, and Davis.

At half Jackson, Lassiter, Chandler, Croom, Ferebee, and Daniels are showing ball carrying ability. Fullbacks Coates, McNeil, White and Morissey are doing well, while Peacock is the leading quarterback.

There will be openings for a number of these men next season, especially in the line. Other men who have already had a year with the varsity squad and who are showing up well are Rhodes, Blackwood, Underwood, Brown, Suggs, and others. They have displayed great football form and are sure to see much service in the hard schedule of the forthcoming year.

The present standing of the winter grid teams finds Georgia at the head of the line with a clean slate. Seven games have been played and the standing is as follows:

Team	W.	L.
Georgia	4	0
Ga. Tech	1	2
Virginia	1	2
Tennessee	1	3

Eight Teams Have Entered Basketball Tourney at Atlanta

With the Southern Conference tournament committee scheduled to meet Sunday and make the drawings for the annual basketball tournament to be held in Atlanta starting Friday, February 28, the deadline for receipt of entrance fees of $100 was set for Saturday night.

Fees have already been received from Carolina, Duke, Maryland, Washington and Lee, Georgia, Alabama, Sewanee and Tennessee.

The committee at the meeting Sunday will decide on the officials, and work out other definite details of the contests.

Play will start Friday, February 28, at 1 o'clock and will continue with a brief pause for supper until almost midnight. Night games will be carded for the first day's play. Saturday, two afternoon and two evening engagements will bring the survivors to the semi-finals, which will be staged Monday night, with the finals to run off on Tuesday night.

W. and L. Star Leads Conference Scorers

Cox, Washington and Lee's sharpshooting forward, leads the Southern Conference in individual scoring with 104 markers to his credit as the competitive season draws to a close. It has been due mainly to the excellent tossing by Cox and his teammate Williams, who is third on the list with 98 points, that Washington and Lee has made such a fine showing in conference circles. Despite the fact that Auburn has a poor season record, Jorden, forward, ranks second in scoring and just three points behind Cox.

Haar, North Carolina State's veteran from the championship team of last year, has been a consistent shooter since the season's start and has amassed a total of 96 points, sharing fourth place with Jones of Clemson.

Thomas, the diminutive Clemson forward who has thrown a scare into the opposition all season, ranks next with 82 points, while R. Brown of V. M. I. with 80 points is the only other Conference player in the magic scoring circle of 80.

There are still a few games scheduled for the conference, but most of the teams will finish up by next Saturday. A week later the annual Southern Conference tournament will be held at Atlanta, which means that the individual scorers will have but a short while to increase their total of points.

The standing of leading scorers through games of Tuesday night follows:

Cox, W. & L.	10	104
Jorden, Auburn	10	101
Williams, W. & L.	10	98
Haar, N. C. State	11	96
Jones, Clemson	13	96
Thomas, Clemson	13	82
Brown, V. M. I.	6	80
Palmer, Georgia	9	78
Tannehill, L. S. U.	11	78
Sanford, Georgia	9	75
Dawson, Sewanee	7	74
Coffee, Vandy	9	73
Strange, Ole Miss.	12	73
Mayo, Virginia	10	71
Brown, N. C. State	11	68
Wilson, Ga. Tech	11	68

Isemann, former holder of the world's title, Miss Lorraine Gulli, woman's national champion, Miss Elsie Dyer, leading woman bowler of Virginia, and fifteen year old Willis Sensenbach, champion duck pin bowler of North Carolina.

And while we are on the subject, we have a new slogan to submit to our recruiting officers: Join the Navy and see the dismantling.

Campus Saddened By News Of Resignation Of Dr. H. W. Chase

University will be picked from the faculty provided a selection can be made without creating factions. In other words, if the faculty and students can agree on a man without fighting among themselves it seems highly probable that such a man would be chosen by the trustees without great delay. But there is a distinct dislike for any move that would split the faculty into groups.

The faculty names mentioned most frequently in the past, when it appeared that the University would lose Dr. Chase, have been those of Frank Graham, Archibald Henderson, and R. D. W. Connor. All three are native Tar Heels, were prominent as University undergraduates, and have served the institution with distinction for a number of years. Henderson, a classmate of the late Edward K. Graham, was graduated in 1898 and has been on the faculty since 1899. Connor was graduated in 1899 and has been on the faculty since 1921. Graham was graduated in 1909 and has been a faculty member since 1914.

To this list of faculty names others were being suggested today, among them being the names of Louis R. Wilson, Addison Hibbard, Howard W. Odum, and Edgar W. Knight.

Girls Representing Nearly Every Part Of This State Feature Mid-Winter Hops

Series Of Five Dances Came To A Brilliant Close Last Night By Ball Featuring German Club Figure.

The mid-winter set of dances of the German club was brought to a close last night by a ball featured by the club figure. Steve Millender of Asheville with Miss Frances Moore of Rock Hill, S. C., led the final figure, assisted by Arthur Sickles of Rochester, N. Y., with Miss Elizabeth Barber of Raleigh and Barron Grier with Miss Pauline Webb of Statesville.

The set of five dances opened Friday afternoon with a tea dance in Bynum gymnasium, and a ball Friday night. The junior figure was the feature Friday night and was led by Willis Henderson and Miss Alice Quarles of Charlotte. Several states and almost every section of North Carolina were represented by the girls attending the dances.

The Pi Kappa Phi fraternity held the only house party of the week-end with over a dozen girls attending. Among these were: Misses Elizabeth Bryan and Mary Simmons Andrews of Raleigh; Elizabeth Morris, Roxboro; Nell Adams, Alice Fries and Alice Caldwell of High Point; Glenn McDougal, Clarkton; Billie Gholson, Henderson; Julia Pendergraph, Mount Airy; and Sue Thomas of Charleston, S. C.

Bynum gymnasium was converted into a ballroom and was attractively decorated to represent an outdoor scene. Frazier Glenn and Baron Holmes, University students, had charge of the decorations which consisted of festoons of vari-colored crepe paper streamers which covered the ceiling, while a canopy of gold centered the whole. The orchestra stand and the chap-

DR. COKER HEADS TEACHING STAFF

Will Teach Field Zoology This Summer At Allegany School Of Natural History.

The general education supervision at the Allegany School of National History is furnished by Dr. Charles C. Adams, director of the New York State Museum. The teaching staff will again be headed by Dr. Robert E. Coker, professor of zoology, University of North Carolina. At various times Dr. Coker has been special investigator for marine birds and fishes, Peru; director, United States Fisheries Biological Stations, Fairport, Iowa; and Woods Hole, Mass.; and chief, division of scientific inquiry, United States Bureau of Fisheries. He has been the director since the school was established and has held high standards in inspiring his students to develop the ability "for stimulating others to the study and appreciation of nature. Dr. Coker will teach field zoology.

This outdoor training school, which has an exceptionally interesting and varied terrain for its purposes, has established an outstanding reputation among the growing number of such centers for field instruction.

Bradshaw To Return From Atlantic City

F. F. Bradshaw, dean of students, was in Atlantic City the latter part of the week attending the meetings of the National Association of Personnel and Placement Officers and the National Vocational Guidance Association.

Dean Bradshaw is president of the former organization which is holding its meeting at the same time the National Education Association and several allied groups are meeting in Atlantic City.

Mr. Bradshaw will return to Chapel Hill today.

GLEE CLUB WILL SING IN RALEIGH

The Entire Group To Appear In St. Mary's College Auditorium Monday Night.

Tomorrow night at 8:15 in the St. Mary's College auditorium, Raleigh, the full Carolina Glee Club of 35 men will give a program similar to those of the fall tour.

During all of next week these 35 members will be closely observed by glee club officials, in order that the best 28 can be determined for the national contest of March 8.

In connection with the contest, the glee club has had the special honor to be invited to luncheon at the Harvard Club, the day of the contest, as guests of Albert E. Pickernell.

Mr. Pickernell, a wealthy financier, has been almost solely responsible for the Intercollegiate Glee Club Association's active and successful existance, which has extended over a period of more than 12 years.

Among those who will appear tomorrow night and who will be considered for the New York trip are: Brown, Boynton, Bremer, Barfield, Carter, Clark, Connolly, Fleming, Goodwin, Humphreys, Hammond, Lyon, Lynch, Miller, Duffy, Midgett, Overman, Parsley, Petty, Patton, Prouty, Park, Reynolds, Stimpson, Swain, Stewart, Stahr, Scurlock, Slaughter, Trull, Whitsett, Winston, and Wilson.

DEUTSCHER KLUB WILL MEET THIS AFTERNOON

The meeting of the Deutscher Klub, which was postponed from last Sunday, will take place at 4:30 this afternoon at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Metzenthin, 402 Hillsboro St. During the last week a group of students have been practising Die Deutsche Studentlieder, some of the most popular German student songs, in preparaing.

Those who studied and practiced the songs, which are selected from more than 250 folksongs, are unanimous in proclaiming them not only charming in their musical setting, but also rich in the combination of deep romantic sentiment with wholesome humor.

Dr. Metzenthin urges that anyone interested in typical German songs and willing to join heartily in the singing of them attend this informal meetion for this meeting.

CORNERSTONE OF MEMORIAL HALL IS SOLID GRANITE

Much Regret Felt Because The Stone Contains No Papers Or Other Valuable Tokens.

The forty-seven year cornerstone, located on the northeast side of Memorial hall, was removed Saturday morning from the dismantled building. Upon examination the cornerstone was found to be solid granite and it does not contain a box.

Disappointment was felt among University officials, students, and even a part of the wrecking crew, because the cornerstone did not yield any papers or other valuable tokens. Much speculation was prevalent as to the contents of the cornerstone. Some students thought that a part of the observations taken by Dr. Caldwell at his observatory might be found, but alas! According to Charles T. Woollen, business manager of the University, the building committee of Memorial hall was unable to give much time or money to putting a box in the cornerstone, as they were hard pressed for funds during the whole time of the erection of this structure.

The cornerstone measures twelve inches in thickness, thirty inches in height and forty inches in width. The weight of the stone is approximately 1200 pounds. The cornerstone was removed with little difficulty, for, like the rest of the building it was not properly set up.

The United States geological survey has its official mark upon the stone showing the elevation of the land adjacent to the building, which is 503 feet above sea level. By way of protection this official marker bears the following inscription: "250 dollars fine for disturbing this mark." The elevation was calculated and the mark set up by "B. M."

The Memorial hall cornerstone was erected September 25th, 1883. The building committee was composed of Paul C. Cameron, Kemp P. Battle and John Manning, while Samuel Sloan was architect and Henry Richards was mason.

SCOUT SEMINAR CLOSES AFTER THREE-DAY MEET

Votes To Hold Meeting In Chapel Hill Again Next Year.

The second Boy Scout Seminar to be held at the University during the current academic year came to a close this afternoon with a meeting conducted by Commodore Longfellow, head of the life saving work of the Red Cross.

The Scout executives have been holding a three-day session under the joint auspices of the University Extension Division and the Regional Educational Committee of the Boy Scouts of America.

The seminar consisted of a series of discussions by University faculty members and scouting officials on subjects pertaining to scouting, such as public health, life saving, taxidermy, and the growth of the Scout movement.

At the final session it was voted to hold similar sessions here next year and to request the University to offer a credit course in scouting. A committee was appointed to arrange for the patrol leaders camp to be held here this summer.

North Carolina scout officials in attendance were J. E. Steere of Charlotte, A. W. Allen of Asheville, B. W. Hackney of High Point, Claude Humphries of Raleigh, O. B. Gorman of Reidsville, Herbert Stuckey of Wilson, H. T. Thompson and W. E. Vaughn-Lloyd of Winston-Salem, W. B. White of Greensboro, E. E. Shields of Gastonia, and W. E. Pennington of Goldsboro. Paul Scheneck, Boy Scout Commissioner of the South, of Greensboro; D. E. Dabbs, field secretary, of Atlanta; and Commodore Longfellow, head of the life saving work of the Red Cross, of Washington, D. C., were special officials at the seminar.

University faculty members who led discussions were Professors H. D. Meyer, D. A. McPherson, E. K. Plyler, and K. H. Fussler.

Daily Tar Heel Manager States View On Theatre Controversy

For the benefit of any students who may not understand the Daily Tar Heel's position regarding the recent move to boycott the Carolina Theatre, concerning which false and misleading rumors may have been circulated, the following explanation is offered.

The student paper this year derives approximately 40 per cent of its revenue from student fees. The other 60 per cent is provided by advertisers, the bulk of whom are local concerns, catering to student trade.

These advertisers have always been most generous in helping to maintain the student paper, and to forward other student activities.

The Daily Tar Heel is, assuredly, a student paper, with whom student interests must always come first.

Receiving its support, however, as it does, from local business houses as well as from students, The Daily Tar Heel has always been required as a matter of policy to steer clear of participation in controversial matters between students and local business concerns.

That, of course, does not mean that the Daily Tar Heel might not link itself, and gladly, with a movement to cause the lowering of prices that were outwardly and manifestly proven to be unfair.

Visibly, the local theatre was showing the best, first-run Vitaphone attractions at 40 cents, when 50 cents was the prevailing price in other theatres in the state. The local theatre was bringing six first-run shows a week to Carolina when other theatres were buying one, two and three a week at lower prices. The local concern in other ways was proving itself most generous in entertaining students and forwarding student activities.

In the absence of manifest proof of unfair prices, the Daily Tar Heel attempted as a matter of policy to steer clear of the recent movement concerning the theatre.

No one student, nor no small group of students, on the staff were responsible for this stand. The action was taken by those in

Joint Meeting Of Literary Societies Duke - Carolina Receives Much Approval

Many Faculty Members And Student Leaders Indorse Session Which Is To Be Held Here Wednesday Night.

The joint meeting of the Carolina and Duke literary societies here, next Wednesday night, February 26, seems to be gaining more support and endorsement every day. The students of Duke have enthusiastically received and indorsed the plan for this meeting, and they have promised to come by the hundreds. From all indications, it seems as though Gerrard hall will not hold the large crowd that is expected to attend this meeting. Speaker John Lang, however, has announced that a larger auditorium will be resorted to if Gerrard is unable to take care of the crowd next Wednesday night.

A number of endorsements of this joint session have been received from some of the University's most outstanding faculty members. In endorsing this meeting, Professor R. D. W. Connor says: "Fine business! The plan has my hearty endorsement. I trust that the plan proposed will meet with enthusiastic and sustained support from both institutions."

Dean Addison Hibbard in speaking of this session says: "With so much possible through cooperation and common effort, it is difficult to believe that any one could find reason for objection to the programme outlined by the four cooperating literary societies." Professor Frank Graham considers this meeting as the natural step in bringing about wholesome cooperation between the two universities. Doctor Howard W. Odum thinks that the Duke-Carolina combination offers an

A Textile Survey

On the editorial page of this issue the editor presents a suggestion for a nation-wide, impartial economic and social survey of the textile industry, including the tentative personnel of a commission proposed to conduct the survey. This suggestion is an outgrowth of the statement prepared by a group of ten of North Carolina's most thoughtful men and women, signed by 415 of the state's most prominent citizens, and published last Sunday in a number of newspapers.

PLAYMAKERS ARE PRAISED HIGHLY

Receive Commendation From South Carolina And Georgia Newspapers.

Reviewers are being favorably impressed with the work of the Carolina Playmakers at every city where the famous group plays. The Southern tour is taking the Playmakers through South Carolina, Georgia, and North Carolina.

In Greenville, South Carolina, where the group played Monday night the Greenville News has the following to say: "The plays were rich in presentation of the human element, and the characters themselves interpreted the plays in a faithful and characteristic fashion, copying well the locality in which the drama was laid by the authors." Homles Bryson who is playing the lead in Paul Green's "No 'Count Boy" and Loretto Carroll Bailey who is playing the part of Kizzie in her own play "Black Water" received especial commendation for their work.

Concerning the Playmakers performance at Emory college on the following night the Atlanta Constitution said: "Emory College Tuesday night was given a privilege that should have gone to metropolitan Atlanta, that of convenient attendance at the Carolina Playmakers' program of three acts, the best non-professional dramatic performance that is apt to grace Atlanta's boards this season."

Wednesday night the players appeared in Columbus, Ga., and the Columbia Enquirer-Sun said of them, "The wide interest felt in the Carolina Playmakers and in their director and originator, Professor Koch; the human element which dominated the plays written by the Playmakers themselves; and the artistry of the actors who presented them all contributed to make the performance of the student actors last night at the Springer opera house a memorable one."

ENGINEERS NOT TO MEET

The University of North Carolina student branch of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers will not hold a meeting this week, because of the engineers' ball which will take place Friday evening.

The Chi Phi fraternity announces the pledging of W. B. Patterson, of Rochester, N. Y.

TAYLOR SOCIETY TO MEET TUESDAY

Malcolm D. Taylor, Associate Professor Of Economics To Speak On Marketing Management.

At the meeting of the University student branch of the Taylor Society to be held Tuesday evening in Bingham hall, Malcolm D. Taylor, associate professor of economics, will speak on "Scientific Marketing Management."

Professor Taylor, who is a specialist in merchandising and advertising, teaches the courses in salesmanship and purchasing, sales management, retail merchandizing, and sales relations in the school of commerce and economics.

In his talk Professor Taylor will discuss the part of scientific management in marketing, the phase of industry which has yearly received more and more attention from those operating producing and distributing units.

Professor Taylor is the fifth of a series of faculty speakers who are speaking before the Taylor Society this quarter on subjects related to business. At the following meeting, March 4, Dean D. D. Carroll, head of the school of commerce and economics, will speak on "Education for Business Leadership."

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

A great poem is like a briar pipe—it darkens and mellows and sweetens with use.—Christopher Morley.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

Girls bob their hair, smoke cigarettes and generally try to look as boyish as possible, but so far none of them have deliberately tried to grow a mustache.—Toledo Blade.

Since the fall of the dictatorship, things are looking pretty desperate in Spain. There is even some talk of allowing King Alfonso some voice in government.—The New Yorker.

The federal trade commision is fussy about paid testimonials for cigarets. It should now take up these statesmen who indorse prohibition, but never use it personally.—The New Yorker.

Tar Heel Topics

The linotype operator who set up a recent Tar Heel story of a speech on "Family Relations" to read "Martial Relations" is evidently married.

Now if the Duke co-eds would only consent to participate in the next "Love Feast" with Carolina, this "peace conference" business would be absolutely perfect.

If North Carolina college presidents keep on resigning at the rate they have in the past few days, the state's unemployment problem will be in a fair way of being solved.

"Changes in Rhodes Scholarships Will Affect Carolina Students," according to one of the Tar Heel's aspiring young headwriters. Yeah, but not many, buddy, not many.

Those who served in France say that they can't repress a shudder when they pass the vicinity of old Memorial hall these days—it reminds them of a battle-torn village. We mere stay-at-homes couldn't keep from shuddering when we looked at the "architectural monstrosity" before they started tearing it down.

A Nation-Wide Non-Partisan Survey Of Textile Industry

Last Sunday a statement of "working principles" for the guidance of North Carolina in its industrial crisis was published in a number of leading newspapers. Prepared by a committee composed of ten of the state's most moderate and thoughtful men and women and signed by 415 of its most prominent citizens, the statement is a model of clear, sane reasoning.

In the brief interval since its publication, the statement has attracted national attention. As was to be expected, most of the comment upon it has centered about the third of the four principles, a request for a "nation-wide non-partisan economic and social survey and analysis of the textile industry." Unprejudiced and thoughtful men will not dispute the other three "working principles for guidance": equal rights of person and property and lawful freedom of speech and assembly for all persons; collective bargaining; and social adjustment to economic changes.

Probably the most conclusive indication of the real value of this suggestion for a textile survey is the fact that it has been attacked by representatives of the two extremes of thought concerning the present industrial crisis—the radicals and the reactionaries. Several communistic organizations have circulated ed petitions intended to counteract whatever influence the statement signed by "North Carolina's Four Hundred" may have. while the Southern Textile Bulletin, organ of the ultra-conservative group, has bitterly attacked both the statement and its promulgators.

Denounced on one side by those who favor blood-and-thunder methods of force and violence unless all needed reforms are accomplished immediately, and on the other by those who dogmatically assert that "the mills are ours: we have a right to run them as we please and we know how to run them best; the State has no call to interfere in our business, and we want no assistance from sharp-nosed busybodies," the proposal has evoked the enthusiastic approval of the great middle group between these two extremes. Thoughtful men of this middle group realize that the mill owners need expert advice from outside, that they have demonstrated through the depression of the industry during the past ten years that they are not conducting their plants as economically and efficiently as they might. The suggestion for the survey represents an attempt to secure the true facts concerning the textile situation and to utilize them in devising means of extricating the industry from its present critical position, with mutual benefit to mill owners, workers and the general public.

A recent analysis of the textile situation by Dr. C. T. Murchison demonstrates the possibilities of the proposed survey. Appearing in the current issue of the Virginia Quarterly Review, his article has received nation-wide commendation. It was selected as one of the ten most important magazine articles of the month, and textile experts have praised it highly. Already some of the facts revealed by his study have been used to bring about actual improvement in the situation. The proposed survey would be a gigantic elaboration of Dr. Murchison's study.

While the committee which prepared the statement did not outline a method for conducting the survey, its recommendations were independent of any issue as to whether Congress or the Federal Trade Commission should make the proposed investigations. It rather proposed a study and analysis of the type conducted by Hoover's presidential commissions. This analysis would be made by those most competent in all fields related to the textile industry, by men and women recruited from the ranks of the nation's foremost experts.

The commission of the type which the signers of the statement have in mind would unite the energies and abilities of a score and more men of Dr. Murchison's calibre, representing every field of work connected with textiles. Gathered in a single body would be authorities on marketing, manufacturers, experts from several federal departments, representatives from schools devoted to problems of business organization, authorities on labor legislation, the foremost textile industry historians, and textile engineering and production experts.

The personnel of the commission would include men such as these:

First Group: Experts on textile engineering and production from the Lowell Textile Institute, The Philadelphia Textile Institute, N. C. State College and Clemson College.

Second Group: Experts in Business Organization from the Harvard School of Business Administration, Wharton School of Business Administration, Univ. of N. C. School of Commerce, Univ. of Georgia School of Commerce. A few men of the type of Dr. M. T. Copeland of Harvard University, author of the classic Cotton Manufacturing Industry of the United States; and Charles W. Tillett, Jr., of Charlotte, a great lawyer and expert on business organization.

Third Group: Manufacturers. Men such as Stuart W. Cramer of Charlotte, president of the highly efficient Cramerton Mills, nationally minded industrial statesman; Henry P. Kendall of the Kendall Mills, Inc., with plants in the North and South, one of the greatest powers in the textile industry; Edwin Farnham Greens, president of the Pacific chain of mills with plants in the North and South; Kemp B. Lewis of Durham, executive of the Erwin Mills; F. B. Gossett of Charlotte, executive of the Chadwick-Hoskins Mills, and George S. Harris of Atlanta, one of the famous Cotton-Textile Institute.

Fourth Group: Legislation. Men and Women such as Dr. John B. Andrews, Ph. D., of Columbia University, one of America's leading experts in labor problems and legislation; Mrs. Dexter Otey, Ph. D. in Economics (from a German university), member of the brilliant Lewis and Langhorne families of Virginia, beloved citizen, social-minded wife of a manufacturer and author of a volume on labor laws in a former textile survey; Dr. Mercer Evans of Emory University, a thorough student of industrial problems; Ward Thoron, treasurer of the Merrimac Manufacturing Co., of Massachusetts, who led in initiating a comparative study of the textile industry in Northern and Southern states; labor leaders like T. A. Wilson, member of the North Carolina Industrial Commission; W. C. Birthright, executive of the Tennessee Federation of Labor; and Dowell Patterson, president of the South Carolina Federation of Labor, member of the state legislature and chairman of a committee investigating the South Carolina strikes; and mill executives of the type of R. Grady Rankin, secretary-treasurer of South Gastonia mills, an efficient manufacturer and a member of the committee of industry of the N. C. Conference on Social Service; and Kemp Davis Battle, brilliant lawyer, member of the board of directors of the oldest cotton mill now running in North Carolina and chairman of the committee on industry of the N. C. Conference on Social Service.

Fifth Group: History and Social Relationships. Men and women such as Dr. Holland Thompson (of Cabarrus county) now professor of American industrial history at College of the City of New York and author of From Cotton Field to Cotton Mill and The New South; Dr. Bradus Mitchell (born in Miss. and educated in S. C. and Va..), professor of economics at Johns Hopkins and author of Rise of Mills in the South and Life of William Gregg; Miss Harriet Herring, member of Institute for Research in Social Science at Univ. of No. Car. and author of Welfare Work in Mill Villages; Miss Lois MacDonald of Winnsboro, S. C., graduate of Due West, Ph. D. N. Y. U., and author of The Southern Mill Here.

Sixth Group: Commission and Selling. Experts from such houses as Hunter Manufacturing and Commission Co., Deering, Milliken and Co., Amory and Brown, the Cannon Mills, and the Cone Export and Commission Co.

Seventh Group: Experts from the Departments of Labor and Commerce and the Textile Institute.

A man of great synthesizing ability and experience, preferably Dr. Walter H. Hamilton of the Yale Law School, who correlated the results of the study by the President's Commission of the coal industry.

A survey conducted by a group of men and women like these would be equally beneficial to the manufacturer, the worker and the consumer. The commission would proceed carefully, devoting a year or more to its study, if necessary. In its investigations it would be impartial and unprejudiced. Certainly no one has real reason to object to a survey of this nature, and potential benefits are almost without limit.

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

Visitors to New York are often moved by the increasing size of the skyscrapers in the downtown districts to speculations about the city of the future. Double-deck streets, 100-mile-per-hour traffic regulations, setback buildings rising to tip the clouds—such ideas easily come to mind.

Chapel Hill may not have its skycrapers, but the flying school near town supplies food for thought. Airplanes droning over the campus in increasing numbers lately give us a foresight into the future. Most students are now so used to the sight that they rarely look up, unless the plane is unusually low. Yet, high or low, one airplane makes enough noise to take anyone's mind off the date of the Beluchistan Rebellion or the name of the era following the Carboniferous, or whatever the study of the moment may be.

If one plane is enough to distract the student now, what will it be like in a decade or two, when airplanes are common? Soundproof reading rooms are not inconceivable — and if Messrs. Atwood and Nash will take this suggestion seriously, will they also please see to it that the study rooms are visitor-proof?

As every one knows, the flags lining Franklin street yesterday were there in honor of Washington's birthday. And, as every one doesn't know, the South apparently still conserving some remembrances of a certain little fracas some years ago, the last time the flags were out was on the occasion of the birthday anniversary of Lincoln, who seems to have been a politician or something in the North.

In the recent Chapel Hill court case concerning a dog alleged to have bitten several people, there was mention of its gustatory tactics with Abbott, one of the men who carry the mails. We should like to know if Abbott was carrying any letters for the owners of the dog. If he wasn't, then our sympathies are wholly with the mutt, for we've often felt like running out and biting the mail man in the leg when he passed us by with a cheery nod, but no letters.

It is difficult to get through a column this week without some mention of the resignation of President Chase. Anything that may be said will probably be repetition, which is the reason for trying to refrain from commenting on the news with which the campus is at present agog. The President's record of achievement with a University suffering from growing pains at the time he took office, the fact that he was a Northerner and not a native North Carolinian, the regard with which he is held in this state, and the widespread regret caused by his leaving, are too well known to require further comment.

Outstanding, however, is the sincere admiration and respect of the student body for Dr. Chase. Young men and women are prone to criticize more freely than their elders, yet we have never heard a word of criticism against him, and he has always, so far as we know, received the whole-hearted support of the students of the University. In itself, this is no mean achievement.

And as we go to press, all seems quiet along the Carolina Theatre front. Praise be!

Tar Heel Manager Expresses Views On Theatre Controversy

charge after careful deliberation and consultation with experienced newspaper men.

The action, be it understood, was not taken because certain members of the staff held passes to the theatre, but because the heads of the staff, acting in consultation with some members of the Publications Union Board, in the absence of conclusive proof of unfair prices, thought the best policy for the interests of students to be that which the Daily Tar Heel has previously maintained.

A subsequent advertisement carrying the allegations of the students was not accepted because the advertisement scurrilously charged that the communication had been refused by the Open Forum column because members of the staff had been "bought off" with passes—an accusation unfair, untrue, and libellous on its face.

We trust this explanation will be taken for what it is worth. We hope those students responsible for this movement will make sure before going further that the prices they complain of are unfair and represent an unreasonable percent of profit. We hope that they will understand that when such is proved, the Daily Tar Heel will gladly take up arms in their cause, but that meanwhile it is for the best interests of all concerned that the Daily Tar Heel be absolutely non-partisan in the matter, as has always been the custom in the past.

PRE-LAWS TO ORGANIZE

Dean McCormick, of the law school, announces that it is planned to form an organization of pre-law students. A preliminary meeting is to be held Monday night at 7:30 in the third year room on the second floor of the law building. The Dean urges that all students who intend to enter the law school next year attend the meeting if possible.

Penn State's National Champs Hand Carolina Boxers A 6-1 Defeat In A Thrilling Match

Goodridge Wins Decision Over Casoni For Tar Heels' Only Score; Plenty Of Action.

Fighting before the largest crowd that has as yet assembled in the Tin Can for a boxing match this season, the Penn State national championship team defeated Carolina's Southern Conference champions last night 6-1. Although three of Penn State's men are new to the squad this year they all showed plenty of ring skill and knowledge of boxing tactics.

Carolina forfeited the bantamweight bout, since none of the men out for that position were considered in good enough shape to go up against Epstein, who was national champion in his weight last year. Stoops, Penn State, scored a technical knockout over Sheffield in the third round after the Tar Heel featherweight went through the ropes and appeared almost out on his feet. Sheffield took the count of eight in the second round when a hard right behind the ear toppled him on his face.

Goodridge, Carolina, in the lightweight division, made the best showing of any other Carolina man and won from Casoni by a decision. Goodridge fought his usual shifty, clever fight, and never let his man get thru his guard for any telling blows, meanwhile tantalizing his opponent with fast, light jabs to the face and driving in with his right when he found an opening.

Webb, fighting for Captain Archie Allen in the welterweight class lost to Lewis, Penn State, by a decision. Webb staged a game battle but was outclassed by the superior boxing skill and shiftiness of the Penn State man.

Obie Davis, Carolina middleweight, seemed to lack some of his usual aggressiveness and lost the decision to Chaikosky in a bout which fell far short of furnishing the action which the preceding fights had given.

Warren, Carolina light-heavyweight, held Struble on even terms for three rounds but lost the decision in the extra round. Both men had plenty of punch and didn't mind mixing it up with each other.

Bill Koenig pulled a surprise in the heavyweight bout by giving McAndrews, Penn State captain, a good beating in the first round and then losing by a technical knockout in the second. Koenig had the reach and height on his stumpy antagonist and succeeded in getting in some good blows in the opening round but weakened on his guard in the second. After taking the count of nine on a right to the jaw, Koenig appeared weakened and when a few more right and left slashes about the head and face put him almost out, the referee gave McAndrews a technical knockout.

WORLD CHAMPS EXPECTED HERE FOR INDOOR MEET

University of North Carolina athletic authorities are expecting at least two world champions to compete in the First Southern Conference indoor games here March 8. Georgia Tech and Virginia have definitely signified intention of sending teams, and that means the contestants will include Ed Hamm, who holds the world's broad jump record; and Harry Flippin, who is co-holder of a world's hurdle mark.

The new model Fords explain how the last raise was offset. One of the floorboards is second grade lumber with a knot hole in it.

AD WARREN HELPS TO GROOM BOXERS FOR PENN STATE

Promising Professional Heavyweight and Former Boxing Captain Of Great Assistance To Coach Rowe.

Ad Warren, of professional boxing fame, is helping Coach Crayton Rowe groom the Tar Heel heavies for the important meet here Saturday night with Penn State's national intercollegiate champions.

The meet, scheduled for 8:30 o'clock in the Tin Can, is the climax and spot of highest interest on the whole schedule of the Tar Heels' southern champions. Bringing together the national and southern champions, this meet is expected to draw a record crowd of fans from all over the state, and the Tar Heels hope to make the heavy bouts an especial feature.

One of the big boys Warren is helping to groom is "Brother John," who fights the 175-pound class, and who, in his junior year, is showing a weaving style and a knockout punch that bears a close resemblance to Ad Warren's old style when he was Tar Heel light heavy.

"Brother John" has won every bout this year except a very close decision to Gentry of Virginia in a meet at Virginia. He won his bout from Florida's star by a knockout, and took a similar margin of victory from Duke's football star, Hyatt.

The other heavy on whom Warren is concentrating is Bill Koenig, 190-pound tackle, who combines a hard punch and a great left jab with a clever boxing technique in the heavy class.

Koenig was the only non-veteran on the team as the season opened, and while he hasn't as impressive a record as Warren, has been improving by leaps and bounds, and should make things hot for Penn State's big boy.

ciety of Natural Sciences, in cooperation with the New York State Museum and in affiliation with the University of Buffalo, the fourth season will begin on July 5 and extend to August 23. College credit is given in the college of Arts and Sciences of the University of Buffalo in the amount of three semester hours for each full course completed.

Established to meet the demand for well-qualified teachers of natural history, a need which has developed with increase in demand for instruction in the natural sciences in public preserves—national, state, county, and municipal—and in private camps and summer schools, the Allegany School of Natural History is located in Allegany State Park, New York, a park comprising a tract of sixty-thousand acres in the bend of the Allegany river where the river enters New York from its source in Pennsylvania and returns again into Pennsylvania on its way to the Ohio.

The Allegany School of Natural History is provided with forty cabins, each with two sleeping rooms and a living room, with sides half walled and half screened, but closeable by shutters, and provided with stoves and running water and electric lighting. The main building, forty-eight by eighty-six feet, has an assembly room, library and laboratories, dining hall, and museum.

Last Week

Aycock has definitely clinched the title in the dormitory race, having won ten games and lost none. Until this week Old East had been tied with Aycock, but their perfect record was marred when Steele defeated them by a 22-12 score last Wednesday.

The winner of the fraternity race is as yet undecided. The Dekes and Phi Gams are both tied for first place with seven wins and no losses. Both of these teams added to their number of wins during the past week, D.K.E. defeating Theta Kappa Nu 31-12, and Phi Gamma Delta winning from Phi Kappa Sigma.

Best House went on a scoring spree during the week, defeating Law School No. 2 by 44-22. One of the closest contests during the intramural race was between Grimes and Lewis on Thursday. After the lead was exchanged several times Grimes emerged on the long end of a 19-18 score. Old East cleaned up Grimes by 61-8 on Friday.

This Week

Several games are to be played off this week before the final championship contest. D.K.E. must play off a postponed game with A.T.O. Should they win from them the championship of the fraternity race will be decided Wednesday in a game between the Dekes and the Phi Gams. Otherwise Phi Gamma Delta would have the undisputed frat title.

Other play-offs which should be hotly contested affairs are Delta Sigma Phi vs. Sigma Epsilon and Pi Kappa Alpha vs Sigma Nu. Grimes and Everett dorms could not decide who won a game recently and a protest was raised, so this dispute will be straightened out this week.

The climax to the intramural basketball season has been set for Thursday night at the Tin Can, when the Aycock team will play the yet undecided winner of the frat race. Interest has run high in campus basketball all season and many excellent teams have been developed, so a good crowd is expected to see this battle.

Scoring

Sigma Nu did not play a game during the past week but still holds first place in scoring honors by a good margin. They have rung the basket for a total of 301 points. Steele is retaining second place, having added 36 points to give them 291 markers in all. Old East is third with 280.

Other teams with high scoring records are: Aycock with 209, T.E.P. with 208, D.K.E. with 199, Zeta Psi with 198, and Kappa Alpha with 193.

Individuals

The intramural officials are going to have a hard time in choosing the all-campus team. It will be a feather in any one's cap to be chosen this year, in view of the fact that such a large number of students have participated in the sport—first class basketball players too.

Hendlin, of Old East, carried off individual scoring honors for the week, ringing the basket for 34 points in a game with Grimes. Gene Wells, Kappa Alpha, chalked up 24 markers to be second high scorer. "Pig" Barber, Zeta Psi, was a close third with 23 points in one contest.

This Purser boy, who plays, for Steele, has a left-handed motion with a basketball which would make any southpaw pitcher jealous.

Clyde McKinney, playing for Best House, has been unanimously accorded the title of "biggest all-round man in intramural sports.'

"Virginia" Trounces "Georgia Tech" 20-7 In Game Saturday

Winners Flash A Well-Mixed Passing And Running Attack To Score Three Times.

Flashing a well-mixed passing and running attack, "Virginia" took a stubbornly fought 20-7 game from "Georgia Tech" in Kenan stadium this afternoon, for second place in the Tar Heels' Winter grid league standings.

Magner and Slusser, last year's brilliant varsity halfbacks, were the big stars of an attack that netted 15 first downs. Hanes Lassiter, a rookie transfer from Yale who hails from Charlotte, and John McNeill, freshman fullback from Raeford, gave brilliant support.

A 42-yard pass and run, Magner to Slusser, followed by a short line buck by Slusser, put the ball over for the first marker early in the first quarter. A 13-yard pass, Magner to Slusser, after a pass intercepted by McNeill, scored the second just before halftime.

The third came on a sensational 80-yard march when Magner and Slusser came back in the game the fourth quarter, Magner driving tackle for 30 and 10 yards to start the ball rolling. Lassiter hit center for 15. Slusser drove tackle for 8 and again for 5 yards. McNeill crashed center on the ninth play for a touchdown.

"Georgia Tech" packed its own punch and rolled up 9 first downs, principally on passes from Jackson and Suggs, both new men, to receivers Wyrick, Nichols, Houston, Donnell and Dunn, and on line driving by Suggs. Jackson drove their one touchdown over center in the third quarter, following a 21-yard gain, Jackson to Wyrick.

June Underwood, "Virginia" tackle, and Bob Blackwood, "Tech" guard, played brilliantly in the line. Lipscomb and Allen, opposing centers, both played fine ball.

Lineups:

"Virginia"	Position	"Georgia Tech"
Neison	Left End	Nichols
Lipscomb	Center	Allen
Oliver	Right Guard	Fysal
Underwood	Right Tackle	Collins
Allen	Rigght End	Bridgers
Peacock	Quarterback	Wyrick
Slusser	Right Half	Houston
McNeill	Full Back	Suggs

Officials: Coaches Collins and Cerney (Notre Dame) and Spaulding (U. N. C.).

Vaulters At Work

There was a day when University of North Carolina track teams won their laurals despite a conspicuous lack of winning vaulters, but not so now. Vernon Cowper, conference champion last year, is training a quartet of Smith, Dry, Ruble and Arnold, all of whom are doing better than 11 feet indoors, and some of whom should reach 12 feet by the time for the first Southern Conference Indoor meet here March 8.

Tar Heel Gridders Are Star Hurdlers

The Tar Heel track coaches are grooming two football speedsters, Rip Slusser and Ty Reid, to help the veteran Bill Perry seek hurdle honors in the first Southern Conference Indoor games here March 8. Slusser was a halfback and Reid an end on the football squad last year. Slusser runs the low hurdles, Reid both. Both are sophomores.

OVER 80 PER CENT OF MATH 2 STUDENTS PASS COURSE LAST QUARTER

Statistics released by the department of mathematics yesterday show that of 367 students given grades on math 2 for the fall quarter of 1929, 294, or 80.1 per cent of the group, passed the course. This is an unusually high percentage of students to pass a course, and Dr. Henderson, head of the department, states that this indicates high student interest in mathematics.

The mortality rate for mathematics 2, as shown in the statistics, is about 10 per cent. Of 408 students registering for the course in the fall, 41 either dropped the course or were not given grades.

The median grade for all classes of math 2 was 82.6, and the modal grade was "C." The percentage of students receiving each grade was: A, 13.6 per cent; B, 16.9; C, 26.4; D, 23.3; E, 5.2; F, 14.7.

Nature isn't so grand. How much better men would fare if dead hair had to be pulled out and defective teeth would come out on the brush.

Early last week members of the class in business management and several members of the faculty made an inspection trip to the Liggett and Myers Tobacco factory in Durham.

This was the third of a series of such trips that are being made this quarter by members of the class. Next Thursday the class will go to Greensboro to visit the plant of the Vick Chemical Company and the printing division of the Cone Mills.

Each of the students in the class has been assigned a phase of management on which he is to write a paper, and on these trips he is especially studying conditions relating to this subject in the plants inspected.

DEPUTATION TEAM TO RETURN TODAY

Has Been Giving Series Of Programs Over Week-End In Fayetteville.

After a full week-end, the Y deputation team returns to the University this afternoon from Fayetteville, where it has delivered a series of programs. Leaving here Thursday afternoon, the group arrived in Fayetteville in time to appear before the Hi-Y club; immediately afterwards the team gave an entertainment in the county jail.

Beginning its program early Friday morning, the team took up most of the morning speaking and singing in the local schools, while the afternoon was taken up with a visit to the Confederate Women's Home. Taking lunch with the local Kiwanis club at 1:00, the Y group rendered the club a program of songs and talks. Saturday morning it visited the hospitals and the "shutins." The afternoon was given over to a hike with the smaller boys, while after supper the Y boys entertained a group of employed lads.

This morning the team will send one of its members to each of the Sunday schools in the city; then, at the hour of the morning service a special boys sermon will be preached in one of the churches. With a program at a boys' meeting Sunday afternoon the team will close its program.

COMER TO SPEAK AT CABINET MEET

Will Discuss The "Psychology Of Right Living" To Junior-Senior Groups.

"Psychology of Right Living" will be the general subject of the discussion to be led by H. F. Comer tomorrow night at the junior-senior cabinet meeting. This discussion is to be the third of a series on this subject, and it is hoped that all members will attend.

President J. Elwin Dungan, of the sophomore cabinet, urges that all members of this cabinet be on hand at tomorrow's meeting, an important one. At the meeting held last Monday U. T. Holmes spoke to the cabinet on the subject of "Comparative Religion." In his talk he gave a general outline of the rise and development of all the religions.

The freshman council will also hold its usual meeting, and its program, which is as yet not planned, will be featured with either a discussion or a talk by some speaker. In the past the attendance at this cabinet has fallen off and it is hoped by the executive committee of this council that all the members will make a special effort to attend.

CERCLE FRANCAIS HOLDS MEETING

Many Records Taken From Bizet's "Carmen" Played And Explained By R. W. Linker.

The regular monthly meeting of the Cercle Francais was held at the Smith building last Friday night with Cecil Grady Taylor of the French department presiding. The meeting was featured by the presentation of a series of records repproducing selections from Bizet's famous opera, "Carmen," which were played and discussed by Mr. R. W. Linker.

The records were produced by the Victor Company from a rendering of "Carmen" by the Opera-Comique of Paris. Out of a total of 34 records covering the four acts of "Carmen," 13 were played, completing the entire first act of the opera and a portion of the second act. Among this number presented were those reproducing "Habanera," "Seguidilla," "Gypsy Song," and the famous "Toreador Song." As the records were played in regular succession, the action of the drama and the parts filled by the songs were explained by Mr. Linker.

At the end of the presentation, refreshments were served consisting of cakes and punch. The meeting came to an end at 9 o'clock. Members of the faculty in the French department, advanced French students, and a number of undergraduate students and co-eds were present.

Dean Francis Bradshaw regards the step taken by the four literary societies in the two universities as a very significant step in the direction of the betterment of the Duke-Carolina relations. This movement of the literary societies is regarded by Dr. E. W. Knight as an intelligent effort to bring the two universities into more friendly relations. In endorsing this movement, Mr. Harry F. Comer promised to give it his full support and cooperation.

Other prominent faculty members who have endorsed this joint Duke-Carolina meeting are: Dean Cyrus H. McCormick, Dean M. C. S. Noble, Professor C. E. McIntosh, Professor George McKie, Executive Secretary R. B. House, Professor E. C. Metzenthin, Professor Lee M. Brooks, and Dr. John M. Booker.

At a recent meeting of the Student Council, President Ray Farris and the Student Councilors endorsed the literary societies' plan unanimously. Editor Glenn Holder looks upon this joint session as a great opportunity for developing cooperation between the two universities. President R. C. Green, of the Senior class, has announced that he is especially in favor of the move made by the literary societies owing to the success which attended the previous session between Carolina and Duke student leaders.

Editor H. T. Brown, of the Yackety Yack, has pledged his support to the move made by the literary societies and wishes to see it succeed. President J. W. Williams, of the Y. M. C. A., considers the plan of the societies as the initial step towards the future cooperation and usefulness of the two universities.

Other outstanding student leaders who have endorsed the plan for this joint meeting are: John Mebane, editor of the Carolina Magazine; Cy Edson, editor of the Bucconeer; and J. C. Williams, president of the Debate Council.

At this joint meeting seven resolutions which point toward the betterment of Duke-Carolina relations will be considered. Speaker John Lang has announced that every student and faculty member of this institution are cordially invited to attend this meeting and to take part in any discussion that may arise.

Daily Tar Heel To Start Fund For Relief Of Poor In Orange County Tomorrow

Dr. L. M. Brooks Is Treasurer Of Fund And Contributions Should Be Mailed To Him.

MUCH SUFFERING EXISTS

George Lawrence, Director Of Welfare Work, To Distribute Food And Clothing To Needy.

A "Campus Relief Fund For Orange County Poor" will be conducted through the Tar Heel beginning with tomorrow's issue. Names of contributors will be published every day in the Tar Heel, and the contributions will be turned in to a committee composed of Louis Graves, editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly, Dr. L. M. Brooks, of the sociology department, Harry Comer, executive secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Ellis Fysal, varsity football player, and Robert Hodges, assistant editor of the Tar Heel.

Dr. Brooks is treasurer of the fund, and all contributions should be mailed to him through P. O. Box 747 or the Alumni building, mailed directly to the "Campus Relief Fund for Orange County Poor," Tar Heel office, or turned over personally to one of the members of the committee.

All contributions go to George Lawrence, director of welfare work in this section. Mr. Lawrence emphasises the dire need prevailing, and relates a number of cases revealing misery and want. He tells of a widow and her four daughters living in a remote section of Orange county whom he found on the verge of starvation, having no food in the house and no money with which to obtain any. One of the daughters was able to work but could find nothing to do, and the few widely separated neighbors were in too desperate straits themselves to be of any assistance. Another case Mr. Lawrence has had to contend with is that of a negro family composed of the parents and eight children. The man was a tenant farmer whose crop had failed, and his search for other employment had been fruitless; no work was available. The entire family had for some time been existing on a green root known as "creases," quantities of which they picked in the fields. These frequent cases of desperate want encountered afford at times examples of actual starvation, as in those incidents related. Mr. Lawrence estimates there are 25 cases demanding relief.

Meeting Postponed

The scheduled joint session of the Philanthropic and Dialectic societies will not be held tonight, according to an announcement by John Lang, speaker of the Philanthropic society. The meeting of Duke and Carolina literary societies Wednesday night in Gerrard hall will replace the joint session. Speaker Lang states that all students and faculty members are invited to attend the meeting Wednesday.

STONE ADDRESSES SOPHS AT CHAPEL

Discusses Four-Sided Nature Of Man; Is President Chicago Theological Seminary.

Dr. John Timothy Stone, president of Chicago Theological Seminary, spoke in chapel yesterday morning, addressing the sophomores on the four-sided nature of man as related to university training. Dr. Stone was introduced by Rev. D. H. Scanlon, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Durham. His talk was preceded by speeches and addresses delivered at various schools over the country in the past month.

Taking the familiar divisions of man's nature, the physical, mental, moral and spiritual sides, Dr. Stone discussed briefly the steps taken by modern educational policies to develop each of these in the student. He spoke more extendedly, however, on the spiritual development of the student, showing how this phase has suffered by new trends in education.

Any school that holds its own today, the speaker said, is laying proper emphasis on physical training, both through intercollegiate and intramural activities. He pointed out also that, as the result of well-directed efforts, intellectual standards are everywhere being upheld. Moral standards, too, he observed, are being supported and their importance rightly recognized by students.

According to Dr. Stone, the modern university is failing to recognize the necessity for spiritual training. This he holds no less important than the other phases of man's development. In a complete system of training the spiritual and inspirational element must be recognized, Dr. Stone declared.

He told his hearers that as students their demands would largely control the situation. Believing strongly in undergraduate influence, Dr. Stone thinks there is more truth in the statement that "the man makes the university" than in that "the university makes the man."

Fraternity Notice

Discussion of rushing plans for next year will feature an open meeting of the Pan-Hellenic Council at seven-thirty tonight at the Coop. John Bullock, president of the council, states that all fraternity men interested in the system inaugurated this year and plans for next year should attend the meeting tonight.

GLEE CLUB HEARD AT SAINT MARY'S

Officials Completing Plans For Entering National Intercollegiate Glee Club Contest.

The University glee club appeared last night in concert at the St. Mary's College auditorium, Raleigh.

In addition to the selections given by the club from its fall tour repertoire, Professor Nelson O. Kennedy offered several piano numbers.

Plans are practically complete for the trip to the national intercollegiate glee club contest in New York, and the Carolina group is most enthusiastic about them. The club will leave by bus on Thursday, March 6, spending the night in Washington. The concert planned to have been given there on that evening, has been postponed until after Easter. The club hopes to arrive in New York on Friday in time for a late afternoon rehearsal. That night, through the effort of J. Maryon Saunders of the Carolina Alumni Association, the group will be entertained by the New York branch of the association. The contest is to be held on the night of March 8, at Carnegie Hall, and the club will start homeward the following day.

The drawing for places in the contest was held in New York, and the following results have been announced: the Carolina club drew place number eight in the choice song group; number three, in the prize song group; and number ten, in the school song group.

The twelve clubs participating in the contest are: Dartmouth, Pennsylvania, Yale, Brown, Fordham, Columbia, Ohio State, New York University, Oklahoma University, Princeton, Carolina, and the Middle Atlantic district winner.

Last year the winners were: Dartmouth, first; New York University, second; and Ohio

DEBATERS WILL GO TO ATLANTA FOR TWO MEETS

Fleming-Jones And Speight In Emory Contest; Williams And Wilkinson With Tech Team.

Two varsity debate teams—composed of J. C. Williams and J. A. Wilkinson, W. W. Speight and McB. Fleming-Jones—leave tonight for Atlanta, where they will meet Emory University and Georgia Tech on "Resolved, That modern science tends to destroy theistic faith." Speight and Fleming-Jones will engage the Emory debaters tomorrow night; Williams and Wilkinson will tackle the Tech team Thursday night. In both encounters the University's representatives will uphold the affirmative side of the question.

The question of modern science and its relation to religion is a very pertinent one at present. Church authorities throughout the nation have been alarmed by the phenomenal advances of science in recent years. Religious leaders of the present generation are attempting to explain the religious indifference of the civilized world in terms of this great scientific advancement, alleging that science has invaded the field of religion and sapped it of its power and appeal. An interesting sidelight of the Emory-Carolina debate is the fact that Emory is a staunch church school, while the University is considered a stronghold of liberal thought. For a number of years Emory has been a forensic opponent of the Tar Heel University, and all of the contests have been hotly fought (Carolina has a margin of one victory in the series at present). Georgia Tech, whose debaters rank high in intercollegiate circles, is another old foe of the Tar Heels. The rivalry existing between the three institutions is so keen that they could not agree to no-decision debates,

University Professor Draws Attention Of Famous Critics Through Humanist Movement

The recent announcement of Dr. Chase's resignation caused a temporary centering of attention upon the University by the press of the nation. Another member of the faculty, Professor Norman Foerster, is now being discussed in all parts of the country by the many who are observing the growth of what has been called the "new" Humanist movement.

Mr. Foerster, whom the New Republic termed the "leading disciple of Professor Babbitt," has recently edited a series of essays on the outlook of modern civilization. The title of the book is Humanism and America and is published by Farrar and Rhinehardt. The New York Times says the following of the book: "This summing up of a group credo, the credo of a band of critics in America who are determined upon pre-empting the title "humanist" for themselves, comes at a very opportune moment, for the winds of doctrine in criticism have been chasing themselves wildly over the cultural landscape for more than a year now, and it is time for a little clarity. . . ."

That sentence referred to the more or less violent controversy that has been going on in the magazines of the Bookman and Hound and Horn type in which those writers who defend the attitude of the Humanists in desiring to see impressionism removed from literary criticism attack their opponents. Besides the prime leaders of the Humanists, some of whom are Norman Foerster, Paul Elmer More and Irving Babbitt, there are many less-known men who nevertheless are carrying on the war of the Humanists against the Anti-Humanists. Some of the latter are Seward Collins, Robert Shafer, Frank Jewett Mather, Jr., Gorham Munson and others.

The New Republic and the Nation have assumed a laughing attitude upon the subject. In a recent issue of the former magazine, a writer characterized the new Humanists as agreeing that literary creation is dead and that the differences that are splitting the Humanists are ones concerning the question of when literary creation died. Quoting from the magazine: "Professor Babbitt himself rejects practically every writer since Rousseau, but he finds life in Milton. Professor Foerster, his leading

Engineer Dance Features Social Affairs Of Week

Original Lighting Effects And Unique Decorations To Be Carried Out; Stag Tickets To Engineers Only.

The fourth annual Engineers' Dance, which is sponsored by the three engineering societies, will be held next Friday evening at the Carolina Inn with the Carolina Buccaneers furnishing the music.

Advance reports say that the decorations at this dance are to be something quite unique and that there will be some very original lighting effects carried out during the evening.

Already many girls have indicated their desire to attend the affair, which in years past has proven very successful, and with the usual crowd will be up for the Grail dance the following night, it is expected that there will be no lack of the feminine touch at the dance.

Members of the Engineering faculty and their wives will serve as chaperones at the dance. Some of those who will serve in this capacity are Dean and Mrs. Braune, Professor and Mrs. J. E. Lear, Professor and Mrs. E. G. Hoefer, Professor and Mrs. H. G. Baity, and Professor and Mrs. Trimble.

As has been the custom at the engineers' dances in the past, stag tickets will be sold to engineers only, but others may get tickets which entitle them to admission if they bring girls. Tickets may be obtained from the dance committee which consists of J. J. Alexander, W. B. White, D. A. Nims, E. R. Davis, J. B. Pittana, Charles Waddell, 'Chuck' Erickson, Charles West, and J. P. Scurlock. They are also on sale in all three of the senior engineering rooms.

All in all, with the advance reports that are coming from the engineers over in Phillips hall, this affair should prove very enjoyable, for it is proverbial tradition that when the engineers do get dressed up, they put things over in fine style.

Patterson Chosen To Fill A Vacancy On Student Council

H. N. ("Pat") Patterson has been elected to serve for the rest of the year on the student council as representative of last year's council to take the place of S. S. McNeely who has recently withdrawn from the University. Patterson served on the council last year as representative of the sophomore class, and is at present business manager of the Buccaneer.

Y CABINETS HEAR ALL COMMITTEES

Joint Session Listens To Reports Of Delegates And Standing Committees.

A joint meeting of the three Y cabinets was held last night at the time of the usual weekly meetings. After the program had been opened with sentence prayers, E. B. Ferguson gave a short report of the deputation team's trip to Fayetteville over the week-end. Grady Leonard also made a report of the trip. H. F. Comer then gave an account of the state Y conference held in Charlotte during the past week. He told something of the work that was done by the Y among the negro schools and colleges in this state.

Ed Hamer, treasurer of the Y, delivered a report of the treasury stating that as yet some of the prospective pledges were still unpaid. Reporting as chairman of the discussion committee, he further stated that meetings had been held lately in one of the dormitories on the campus, and that it was hoped that this group discussion could be extended later into every dormitory on the campus. He urged that the cabinet members who were interested in this work take more interest than had been shown in the past.

Giving a report of the work of the sophomore cabinet for the past year, J. Elwin Dungan, president of that cabinet, stated that up to the present 13 speakers had been on the program of the sophomore cabinet. According to him, it is the plan of the cabinet to bring in state Y representatives from some of the colleges of the state with the purpose of bettering intercollegiate relations, which the Di and Phi literary societies are sponsoring.

A report of the freshman cabinet was given by Jimmie Kurfees. After a motion had been made, the three cabinets voted to send a letter to President Chase from the three Y cabinets stating the regret felt by the cabinets due to his resignation. After an announcement made concerning the Blue Ridge conference, the program was closed with a prayer by Grady Leonard.

NATHAN CONDUCTS PROBE CONCERNING DEATH OF INFANT

Who murdered Richard Harvey, the 15-month old son of 19-year-old, petite Nellie Harvey, colored Chapel Hill servant girl?

This question occupied the attention of Coroner S. A. Nathan and his jury, together with more than a score of witnesses, from early Sunday afternoon to eleven o'clock at night. The jury decided that little Richard "came to his death by foul means, through the administering of poinson at the hands of an unknown person."

Nellie lives with Eliza Neville, nee Eliza Lane, 35, estranged wife of Ped Neville, near the "Tintop Alley" section of Carrboro. She claims that Luther Hargraves, Jr. is the father of her child, that he "done promise he'd help keep up dat chile," and says she loved it. But on the night of the murder she was out with James Hargraves, distantly related to Luther, who, she says "is mah frien' now, an' we uz gonna get marrahd."

About seven o'clock Saturday evening young Luther Brewer, friend of the family, decided he would repair an ancient phonograph which rests in the parlor

A THOUGHT A DAY

We no longer have the conditions which created the great scientists of old.—Professor E. R. A. Seligman.

An Opportunity And a Duty For Every Person In Chapel Hill

On the front page of this issue appears an article announcing the establishment of a "Campus Relief Fund for Orange County Poor." Through the medium of this fund, the students and townspeople will have an opportunity to do their part toward alleviation of the wide-spread suffering among the poverty-stricken in this county.

Very few University students have experienced the cruel bitterness of real poverty. Practically isolated in a small community where everyone possesses all of the comforts and many of the luxuries of life, it is difficult for the average undergraduate to realize that within a few miles of the campus there are hundreds of individuals who are in actual need of the necessities of life. But it is a fact that throughout Orange county scores of families are on the verge of starvation, and that the pangs of hunger are experienced daily by hundreds of children and their parents.

In all probability destitution is more prevalent in the rural sections of Orange county than in other sections of the state at the present time, with the possible exception of a few of the eastern counties. Without important industrial establishments, sparsely settled, lacking the robust economic progressiveness and fertile soil of the Piedmont and the Tidewater sections, Orange county is always one of the first in the state to feel the bitter pinch of poverty in times of depression.

Most of the suffering is caused by the force of circumstances. Through no fault of their own, the untrained laborer and the inefficient farmer are forced out of employment as soon as the industrial and commercial machinery slows up. The unskilled and comparatively inefficient laborer is the first to be "laid off." His wages have not been sufficient for him to have saved any considerable sum, and he is soon utterly destitute. Usually this class of workers have large families. Unless outside assistance is available, hundreds of families are faced with the gaunt spectre of starvation.

At present the charitable organizations of the county are tremendously overtaxed. George Lawrence, county superintendent of welfare, receives dozens of requests for assistance from worthy families which he is unable to meet because of a lack of funds.

It is significant that a varsity football player is one of the moving spirits behind this appeal for funds for the alleviation of suffering in Orange county. According to the popular conception, the college football player is a brutal sort of person, utterly devoid of the finer shades of sympathy and compassion. Yet Ellis Fysal, guard on the varsity football team, is in a large measure responsible for the formation of the "Campus Relief Fund for Orange County Poor"

The committee will turn the contributions over to the county superintendent of welfare, who will personally see that they are directed to those who are in the greatest need Small contributions of fifty cents or a dollar will assist tremendously

Unless the University students come to the assistance of the poverty-stricken in this county, almost inconceivable suffering, even death, will be the fate of scores of families. The price of a picture show now and then, a week-end "jag," or a few milk shakes, contributed to the "Campus Relief Fund" by a considerable proportion of the student body, will enable a hundred families to survive the present "hard times" who would not otherwise be able to do so.. The Fund presents an opportunity and a duty to every student and every member of the Chapel Hill community.

A Genuine Liberal Necessary

The prognosticators and prophets among us are busy choosing a successor to Dr. Chase, resigned president of this institution. Dr. A, Professor B, or Judge X is mentioned prominently for the position by various factions here. Gloomy scholars have relegated their pessimism to the background and dressed in their best professorial ties look learned and liberal. The last quality is much desired by candidates for the presidential chair. Our last two presidents, Graham and Chase, were—before all else—liberal; we must, therefore, they say, be liberal. That is a virtue much in popular favor these days.

We do have student government here and have enjoyed under Dr. Chase a considerable degree of initiative, but our undergraduate faculty is seeking to restrict our freedom by abolition of the optional attendance ruling. Who knows but that further encroachments will be made upon our liberty? The men of the faculty, either through a break down in their own instructions or a snobbish attitude toward the ability of the student body, are on the verge of signifying their disapproval of toleration and liberality, the virtues which have made the Chase regime renowned throughout the United States, and without which no university should be.

We say then, let the searchers after a new president seek first a man of sterling character who will have enough faith in himself that he will be able to have faith in others, a man with liberal tendencies and genuine toleration. It is not sufficient that he should be intellectual or simulate "liberalness." He must be sincere.

This institution has been exceedingly fortunate that the past presidents have been men of human qualities. Universities of greater size and in some cases superior reputation have had creatures of great learning and efficiency to sit in their executive offices. No large institution is without this cold unhuman type of individual. It is to be hoped that the next president will be a man with a heart, a man who has enough time to speak to his students and to listen to their problems.

The faculty and the trustees are the two agencies invested with the power of choosing a new president. A president popular with the faculty, especially with a faculty giving tendencies of a retreat from liberalism, could very easily not be popular with the students. The best man will be the man who can be both revered and honored by both faculty and student body. Therefore the student body should have a voice in recommending a man or men for the presidential chair—W. Y.

Readers' Opinions

A PLEA FOR CONTRIBUTIONS FOR ORANGE COUNTY POOR

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Mr. Ellis Fysal, in his article "Poverty in Orange County" published in the Daily Tar Heel a few days ago, pleaded with the students for funds necessary to the welfare of certain needy persons—funds that were not available to the county. Why cannot the students respond to such a pressing crisis? Have we not contributed generously, in one way or another, to the relief of the Chinese and Armenians; why not for something close at hand?

Mr. Fysal was more than justified in his challenge and criticism to and of the Y. M. C. A. What has that body done in the direction of this condition? Undoubtedly, it should have been the promulgators for the relief of these poverty-stricken people. The Y. M. C. A. has ever been active in collecting its pledges; why cannot some of this energy and money be utilized in this very evident need? Further, why cannot the "Y" take the lead in a program for the collection of funds—the money being collected from the various fraternities, dormitories, societies about the campus through the medium of the Y. M. C. A.? Please don't misinterpret me, the "Y" has done a great work here and shall continue to do so, but there is no reason for its inactivity at this particular instant.

The students of the University must realize that aid to these unfortunates can come from no other source than contributions from private parties, otherwise—one can imagine the result.

A STUDENT'S ATTITUDE

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I am able to appreciate the position of the Daily Tar Heel in regard to the move which is now being discussed so widely over the campus. And probably the staff is justified in assuming such a position as it is, due to the fact that the manager of the theatre has been so liberal in contributing to its paper financially by purchasing from it such extensive advertising space from day to day. But the attitude of the student body is that the Tar Heel should at the least assume a neutral position and not forget that the students are also part contributors to its support.

In the article of the Sunday issue entitled, "The Tar Heel Manager Expresses Views on Theatre Controversy," one side of the question now before us was well presented. And I would appreciate the privilege at this time to present the other side. But before entering this subject, I would like to correct a phrase which appeared in the article above referred to. I was the writer of the advertisement therein mentioned, and I did not say at any time that the staff had been "bought off." The members of the staff are, however, along with other leaders of the campus, put in such a position by having accepted the various passes extended to them along with other favors, that they are hardly free to express their opinion. And some of the leading men of the campus have said that they would like to take certain steps to usher this move on because they thought it to be only just, but that they could not afford to do so under the circumstances.

In pushing this move the students do not desire to lose the friendship of Mr. Smith because he has been very considerate and has done a lot for them, but they do feel that he can reduce his price, make a few changes in his method of carrying on business, and still make a reasonable profit on the money invested. The students are willing to give up the privilege of receiving free birthday passes, free theatre parties and they think it advisable that some of the daily passes be cut out. For instance the presidents of the Di and Phi societies are not offices of enough dignity to carry with them daily passes to 40-cent shows. As there is only one theatre in town we feel that advertising so extensively aids the theatre very little, and yet we indirectly have all of this to pay.

The students are unable to see why the overhead expense of the Carolina Theatre should be so great; it affords no additional attractions such as vaudeville acts. There are no ushers, no orchestra, and very little janitor service necessary. In almost all the leading theatres of the state bargain hours are offered its attendants, but here we realize that circumstances will not afford such. But we do, however, feel that we should be given a medium between the bargain hour price and that charged ordinarily. As it now is, the theatre is the major source of amusement for the students, but if the price was established at 30 cents many more would attend. Forty cents a day will amount to a great deal in the course of a year, and there are not many boys here able to pay it. At present many students during a week go to Durham and catch the bargain hour shows rather than to pay 40 cents for the same show over here a few weeks later.

This seems to be the student attitude toward the situation, and it is a certain fact that they would appreciate it if Mr. Smith would consider their view, give the 30-cent price a trial, and then, if he could not make a reasonable profit, I am sure no one would object to his re-establishing his price at 40 cents.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

During My Freshman Year At College I Learned:

IN HISTORY:

That there are dates and dates, and that though most of them have to do with figures, the memory retains some for a greater time than others.

That if one says the Bastille was stormed July 4, 1795, one can't get away with it.

That the Seven Year's War wasn't the result of Queen Anne's breaking her Palace mirror.

That History is an awful bore.

IN MATH:

That there are triangles and triangles, and that whether they are eternal or not, they usually manage to get one in trouble.

That too many figures make one dizzy, whether they are blondes or not.

That two and two is four, even if E. E. Cummings does claim its five; and that if one takes E. E. Cummings' word instead of the math professor's, that one may fail the course.

That math is an awful bore.

IN FRENCH:

That the French speak a foreign language.

That "chevrolet coupe" doesn't mean: "What time is it, please?"

That "barn door" means "good morning."

That when one finishes a meal at a French cafe, one says, "Garcon, l'addition"; and leaves a franc or so on the plate.

That a million Frenchmen can't be wrong.

That French is an awful bore.

IN LATIN:

That there are ponies and horses; and that horses are too large to take in class.

That if you don't ride a pony, you'll have to walk the devil of a long way before the end of the quarter.

That Horace builded a monument more lasting than bronze which neither the eating rains, nor the flight of the years, nor the North wind could corrupt.

That the old Romans were some birds, and drank lots of wine and raised cain.

That Chloe, even though she pretended to be as timid as a faun, was really just a modern gold-digger who could get Horace in the dickens of a lot of trouble by shaking her blond locks at him or giving him a "mean" glance.

IN ENGLISH:

That nobody ain't ever wrote nothing worthwhile without first learning grammar and rules.

That when Shakespeare said, "Take, o take, those lips away," he probably meant it about as much as a University student would mean it.

That Isben wasn't a playwright, and that even if I had read five of his plays, he still wasn't a playwright; and that I probably meant Ibsen; and that if I had been taking the course under professor Koch, I would have failed it.

That Sheridan wrote plays and didn't lead an army through Georgia; and that if I ever make any more remarks like that, I might as well go back to high school.

IN GENERAL:

That if you talk back to Mr MacMillan, you'll wish you hadn't done so . . . That Mr. Jones can quote poetry for hours and say all sorts of funny rhymes . . . That Mr. Sanders knows Latin and can't understand why I don't; but that, nevertheless, he has a kind heart . . . That some History professors—(censored)— . . . That when I came to college, I didn't know very much . . . That when I leave college, I won't know very much.

At The Carolina

Adventure, love, laughter, and beautiful clothes and settings are the features of "Slightly Scarlet," the Evelyn Brent-Clive Brook co-starring picture which will show at the Carolina today. The story of "Slightly Scarlet" abounds in action. It is one of the new type talking motion pictures, a fast-moving plot depending on action for its climaxes, enhanced and vivified by smart dialog.

Evelyn Brent and Clive Brook made Paramount's' first all-talking success together. It was "Interference." Since that time they have both risen rapidly in the ranks of motion picture stars. Dialog brought them new opportunities and each, individually, has made the most of the chance. Brook is noted for his suave, polished performance. Miss Brent has earned for herself the title of "queen of melodrama." She is always dramatic, always fascinating.

"Slightly Scarlet" brings Miss Brent and Brook together in Paris. Each admires the other secretly but they cannot arrange a meeting. Miss Brent is a member of an international band of jewel thieves, held to crime against her will by the sophisticated menace character, Paul Lukas. Brook is apparently a suave English gentleman. Miss Brent is assigned the task of robbing Eugene Pallette, a new-rich American, of a valuable necklace. She takes a house in Nice, next door to the Pallette family. Then she discovers that Brook has taken the house on the other side of the Pallettes. At last they meet and fall in love.

Carolina Wins 19 - 10 From Davidson To Place Second In State

Varsity Avenges Former Loss To Cats By Trouncing Them Here Last Night.

MARPET SCORES 14 POINTS

Carolina Guard Is Big Star Of Closing Game Of Regular Schedule; Davidson Attack Fails.

Playing its last game of the competitive season, the Tar Heel quint defeated the Davidson Wildcats 19-10 in the Tin Can last night. The victory puts the White Phantoms in a tie with State for second place in Big Five circles.

The game was marked by the air-tight defenses of both teams and the spectacular shooting of Art Marpet. Art sank seven long shots in almost rapid succession and gave the Tar Heels a commanding lead from which they were never overtaken.

Johnston opened the scoring with a crip shot, and then came the deluge of Marpet's shots which soon put the home team in the lead 8-3. Moore of Davidson broke the regularity of Art's shots with a field goal, but Art came back with two more long ones, and at half time the score was 12-5.

Marpet opened the second half with a beauty from the center of the floor and follwed it up with another long one. Dameron sank a foul to make the score 17-5. Moore and Rusk between them scored 3 points and Dameron scored on a crip. Pritchett ended the scoring with a beauty from the sidelines and the game ended 19-10.

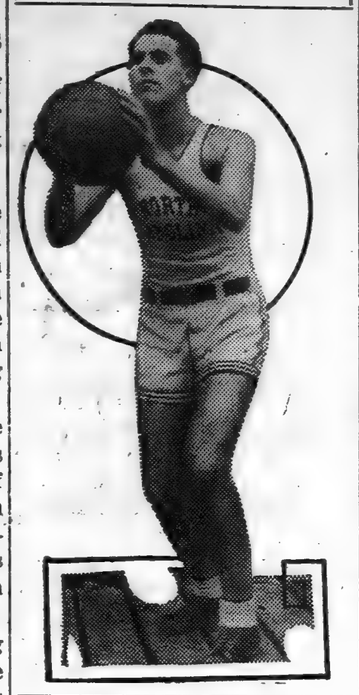
In addition to playing a brilliant offensive game, Marpet was just as brilliant on the defense. The stellar guard held his man to a lone basket. Neiman and Greene also played well for the Tar Heels, while Proctor and Mathis starred for the Wildcats.

The lineup:

Carolina (19)		Davidson (10)
Neiman	R. F.	Pritchett (2)
Greene (2)	L. F.	Mathis
Dameron (3)	C.	Johnston (2)
Marpet (14)	R. G.	Goodson
Alexander	L. G.	Proctor (1)

Substitutions: for Carolina—Edwards, Cleland, Brown; for Davidson—Martin, Moore (3), Rusk (2).

Classy Bantam Back



The return to the Carolina boxing lineup of Evan Vaughan, clever bantam, is expected to bolster considerably the Tar Heel chances of winning a third Southern Conference title this week.

Vaughan was one of the best bantams in the Conference last year, but slumped after his first match this season. He has not fought in the last several meets, but has been training intensively for the tournament, and Coach Crayton Rowe has faith that the fine little scrapper will come through.

An excellent way to get a line on the academic situation is to compare the number of rotogravure pictures of students who are carrying footballs with the ones who are carrying books.

More than a hundred and seventeen billion matches were used in the United States last year. And a lot of men who got cigar lighters for Christmas can well believe it.

Marpet Mops Up

Neiman And Dameron Lead Against Navy

Led by the sterling play of Sandy Dameron and Weasel Neiman, the Tar Heels outplayed the Naval Academy 43-33 on the Midshipmen's floor Saturday afternoon. In attaining the victory, the Tar Heels stuck quite a feather in their cap, for the Midshipmen had one of the strongest quints in the East last season. The Tar Heels showed the best form of the season, the men coordinating perfectly with each other and playing an air-tight game.

Lineup:

Carolina (43)		Navy (33)
Neiman (13)	R. F.	Freshour (6)
Greene (10)	L. F.	Keyes (6)
Dameron (7)	C.	Cloestock (6)
Marpet (7)	R. G.	Lowrence (2)
Alexander (6)	L. G.	Bowstrom

Substitutions: for Carolina—Brown, Edwards; for Navy—Allen (2), Reinhardt (6), Holtzworth, Lucas, Campbell (5).

Fencing Schedule

The intramural fencing schedule for this week is as follows:

Today at 4:30—Zeta Psi vs. Sigma Nu.

Wednesday at 4:00—Sigma Epsilon vs. Beta Theta Pi No. 1; at 5:00—Everett vs. Sigma Phi Sigma.

Thursday at 4:00—Beta Theta Pi No. 2 vs. Sea Hawks; at 5:00—Old East vs. Manly.

Friday at 4:00—Buccaneers vs. Phi Alpha; at 5:00—Ruffin vs. Musketeers.

Peacock Leads Phi Delts

Phi Delta Theta nosed out Chi Psi yesterday afternoon 30-26 in a play-off of a postponed game. John Peacock, high and prep school star, scored 13 points to take honors. Campbell, Chi Phi, followed with 12. The feature of the game was the teamwork of the Peacock brothers, John and Tom.

Phi D. Th. (30)		Chi Psi (26)
J. Peacock (13)		Campbell (12)
T. Peacock (4)		Hollett (6)
Taylor (2)		Atwood (2)
Eubank (8)		Baggs
Griffin (2)		Swope (6)

Substitution for Phi Delta Theta: Gill.

For the 1928-1929 school year there were more students from out of the state at the University than there have ever been before, comprising 17.8 per cent of the student body.

S. I. C. SPORTS

Publication of the pairings for the Southern Conference basketball tournament, which starts in Atlanta Friday, brings out Alabama, Duke, Kentucky and Washington and Lee as the leading contenders for the title. Because of their superior showings in scheduled games these four teams were rated by conference officials as the best in the circuit and the pairings were made so that none of them meet each other in the preliminary contests.

Tennessee and N. C. State were also given preference ratings by the tournament committee. The N. C. State Red Terrors meet Sewanee in the opening tilt at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, and although Sewanee has shown up well in several games the State five should not have very much trouble in disposing of them.

The schedule for the preliminary playoffs Friday is as follows:

1 o'clock—Sewanee vs. N. C. State.

2:00—Mississippi vs. W. & L.

3:00—Alabama vs. Clemson.

4:00—Tennessee vs. V. M. I.

5:00—L. S. U. vs. Duke.

7:00—Kentucky vs. Maryland.

9:00—Ga. Tech vs. Tulane.

Florida and Mississippi Aggies had planned to enter the tournament, but were eliminated because of their season's records. The choice was between these two teams and North Carolina and Georgia Tech, and the latter two had slightly better records. The field is limited to 16.

In the preliminary pairings we pick N. C. State to win over Sewanee, W. & L. over Mississippi, Alabama over Clemson, Tennessee over V. M. I., Duke over L. S. U., Kentucky over Maryland, Georgia over North Carolina, and Tulane over Georgia Tech.

With preference ratings given to six teams, nothing other than a distinctive upset would give a victory to the opponents of the "rated" squads. The only one there seems to be much doubt about is the Kentucky-Maryland scrap. Maryland has put up several good fights, and has lost to some strong teams by scant margins, but Kentucky's defeat of Washington and Lee and the showing made against such teams as Georgia, Tennessee and others gives the Wildcats a slight advantage over the Old Liners.

The outcome of the last two games Friday is, from the looks of things now, of lesser significance than that of the other games, since neither of the four teams involved is conceded a very great chance at the conference crown. Georgia appears to hold a slight edge over the Tar Heels, judging from season's records and from showings made against mutual opponents. There is little to choose from between Tulane and Georgia Tech, but the record of the Greenies is more impressive than that of Tech, and they should have little difficulty in breaking through the first round.

The tournament begins Friday and runs through Tuesday, with a rest period Sunday for those who have survived the quarter-finals on Saturday. The officials will be Stanley Sutton, George School, Pennsylvania, who has officiated in conference tournaments for 10 years; Bernard Eberts, Washington, D. C., and George Wood of Jacksonville, Fla.

Tar Heels Getting Ready For Tournament Contests

Basketball And Boxing Teams To Enter Conference Tourneys This Week; Boxers To Try Hard For Honors.

With the schedule's end having come already for the Heel boxers, and a lone Monday night battle with Davidson ended on the basketball schedule, University of North Carolina athletic teams began pointing yesterday to the annual Southern Conference basketball and boxing tournaments, in which Tar Heel teams have won a goodly share of honors in the past.

The ninth annual Southern Conference basketball tournament gets under way at Atlanta on Friday and will run thru Monday. The fourth annual boxing tournament gets under way at Charlottesville on Friday and will run through Saturday.

The first Conference wrestling tournament will not begin until March 7, next week, and the Tar Heel wrestlers will have one more meet with Duke, on March 3, before tournament time.

For the first time in eight years of Southern Conference basketball tournaments, the Tar Heels will be outsiders. Tar Heel quints have come out victors in four of eight previous tournaments and have always rated as outstanding contenders.

The 1930 Tar Heels will take a powerful quint, a big team that got off to a slow start, due to a lack of veteran forwards, but has shown power in every game and might prove the dark horse of the tournament.

The boxers will be favorites to repeat titular honors won two years in a row now, two of three years the tournament has been held. The team has defeated Washington and Lee, V. P. I., Duke, Virginia, and South Carolina, and bowed only to Florida in the conference.

Debaters Will Go To Atlanta For 2 Meets

which are rapidly supplanting the old decision debates. Accordingly, three judges will render the decision in the case of each debate.

Three of the University's representatives are veterans of several debates. Speight has represented Carolina against Marquette and the University of Virginia. Williams, in addition to having won both the Bingham and Wright medals, is a veteran of ten intercollegiate debates. Wilkinson represented the University two years ago against the National Union of Students (British), and is also a winner of the Wright medal. Fleming-Jones, although he is a newcomer in debating circles, is an able thinker and an able speaker—having won his berth on the team over experienced competition.

The outcome of both debates will be wired from Atlanta and will appear in the Daily Tar Heel.

Library Installs New Call Slip Dispenser

The library has recently installed a bank-deposit-slip dispenser. The call slips are delivered one by one by the pressure of the finger upon the lever at the base of the machine. By installing this machine the slips are handled more conveniently and economically.

This machine was bought by the library on approval. If the slips can be handled more satisfactorily by the machine it will become a part of the regular equipment of the library.

Notice Boxers And Wrestlers

Coaches Rowe and Quinlan request all members of the boxing and wrestling squads to appear in full equipment at the Tin Can this afternoon at 4:15 o'clock, for the annual taking of squad pictures.

Dekes Take Lead In Fraternity League

Willis led the strong Deke team in a 14-11 victory yesterday over the Phi Gamma Delta five in a hard-fought battle. The game was exciting from the moment of its start to the referee's final whistle.

The Dekes held the lead from the beginning, but in the fourth quarter when White shot a crip for the Phi Gams and Henry followed with a perfect long shot for the same team, making the score 12 to 11 in Deke's favor, the supporters of both teams displayed great excitement on the sidelines.

Yesterday's victory puts the Dekes in a good position to win the fraternity basketball championship, as only one team, that of Alpha Tau Omega, must be defeated to gain that objective.

GLEE CLUB HEARD AT SAINT MARY'S

State, third. So far in the history of the association, only charter members have carried off the prize, these groups having had the longest experience and best ability.

Several members of the club living in New Jersey and New York have volunteered to entertain the entire party, an example of great enthusiasm shown by the group.

The University is not in a position to finance the club's trip and, due to the fact that the fall tour was a loss financially, the club treaturer reports that there is insufficient money on hand. The glee club officers insist that the club should earn its own trip to as great a degree as possible, and it is quite probable that a concert will be given on the campus, the night before leaving, on a free admission basis but with the request for those who wish to contribute toward's the club's fund do so. Concerning this, more definite announcements will be made later.

FROSH CHASTISE DAVIDSON QUINT

Visiting Contingent Comes Out Of Little End Of Horn 19-29.

The Carolina Tar Babies won a hard-fought victory over the Davidson freshmen in the Tin Can last night. Hines led the Carolina frosh with 10 points, while Rogers and Pierce shared scoring honors for Davidson with 8 points each.

Connor registered the first point for the locals with a successful foul shot. Davidson took the lead when Pierce sank a crip and scored a foul. Rogers added another tally for the visitors, making the score 5-1. Hines shot one from the foul line and followed with a crip on the next play, tying the score. Both teams continued to score and the half ended with Carolina leading 11-10. As the second half opened, Davidson tied the score with a foul, but Hines again put the Tar Babies in front with a long looper from mid-court. Carolina kept a small lead throughout this period and stood at the long end of a 24-19 score when the final whistle blew.

Henry and Connor did excellent defensive work beneath the basket and also added to the score. Rogers and Pierce did all of the scoring for the visitors. Wagner was good on defense.

The Tar Babies missed Dunn who is confined to the infirmary.

University Radio Course Attracts Wide Interest

Much interest is being manifested in the radio course in elementary French that is now being offered by the Extension Division of the University of North Carolina over station WPTF in Raleigh. It is the first course in modern language instruction to be given over the radio in this section of the country.

The course, known as Radio French X, goes on the air every Friday evening from 6:30 to 7:00 o'clock. It consists of a series of twelve lessons. The first lesson last Friday night was well received throughout the state.

The course is given under the direction of Dr. W. M. Dey, head of the University department of Romance Languages, in co-operation with the Extension Division. Four University instructors will give three lessons each, until the series of twelve lessons is completed. These instructors are Professors U. T. Holmes, T. J. Wilson, III, J. C. Lyons, and Hugo Giduz.

Morgan Vining, director of the University radio hour, who is in charge of arrangements, stated that the course will give to radio listeners the essential features of a short course in beginner's French grammar with emphasis on pronunciation of words in popular use. Listeners-in are requested to write the Extension Division for a synopsis of the twelve lessons which will be furnished free of charge.

Those who complete the course satisfactorily will be given a certificate from the University.

Deputation Returns From Fayetteville

The Y deputation team returned to the University Sunday afternoon after giving a series of programs over the week-end in Fayetteville. A large number of students in the high school and grammar schools listened to programs given by the team. Approximately 1100 students heard the programs.

Beginning its program Thursday night, the Y group talked and sang at the weekly meeting of the Hi-Y club. Immediately following, an entertainment was given in the county jail. Friday morning the team appeared in the high school, grammar schools and the local negro high school. The programs at each of these places were made up of talks by one or two of the speakers and songs by the quartet. The Kiwanis club was the host of the team at a luncheon given at 1 o'clock at which time the Y boys rendered a full program. Most of the afternoon was taken up with a visit to the Confederate Women's Home, where the quartet sang a number of songs. After supper the University team was the guest of the Hi-Y club at a social given by that organization.

Saturday morning, the team made a visit to each of the hospitals and "shut-ins," while the afternoon was given over to recreation. Sunday one member of the group was sent to speak in each of the Sunday schools in the city, and then at the morning service hour a special boys' sermon was preached by Rev. Campbell Symonds in the First Presbyterian church. That afternoon at a boys' meeting each of the members of the team gave a short talk, beside the quartet's giving a few songs. This meeting ended the program, and the team returned to the campus late Sunday afternoon.

The members of the team were: Jack Connelley, John Miller, Woffard Humphries and Fred Laxton, on the quartet; Pat Patterson, F. M. James, and E. B. Ferguson, speakers, and Grady Leonard, head of the group.

Extension Division Offers Play Course

An interesting course in American one-act plays is now being offered by the Extension Division of the University, it was announced in a pamphlet issued yesterday.

The course of study, prepared by Miss Ethel Theodore Rockwell, is confined to a study of plays outstanding in the leading organized dramatic groups of America.

The course in one-act plays can either be taken in groups or individually. It is concerned with discussions of the most widely known productions of such dramatic groups as the Provincetown Players, the Washington Square Players, the Portmanteau Players, the Carolina Playmakers, the Players' Workshop of Chicago, and others.

Listed among the authors studied are such well-known playwrights as Paul Green, Stuart Walker, Booth Tarkington, Charles Ran Kennedy, and Alice Gertsenberg.

It is hoped by the Extension Division authorities that the course will arouse among the leading women of the various communities a vital interest in the Little Theatre movement and its significant result—the American one-act play.

The course is designed primarily for women. "There is no group in the community," the course of study, points out in its introduction, "that can do more to promote the interest of a better drama for all the people of its locality than the women's club. By first of all becoming acquainted with the modern trent, by itself producing some of the best plays in our local drama, and by encouraging the best entertainments in its local theatres, moving picture houses, schools and churches, the woman's club can render an incalculable service in its community."

Individuals or groups interested in registering for the course should write to the University Extension Division.

Hobgood Wins Second In Orators' Contest

The Daily Tar Heel has been notified that Hamilton Hobgood, Carolina sophomore, won second place in the state-wide oratorical contest on "The Flag" which was held at Meredith College Saturday afternoon. The contest was sponsored by the American Legion, and is an annual affair.

The State College representative, McKinnon, won first place and $50 in gold. Hobgood was awarded the second prize of $25 in gold. Frew of Davidson, who won the contest last year, was awarded third place by vote of the judges.

In addition to this achievement, Hobgood is an outstanding varsity debater, having represented the University in debates with Marquette University, Harvard and N. C. State.

Marketing Prof. Will Address Taylor Society

Malcolm D. Taylor, associate professor of marketing, will speak on "Scientific Marketing Management" at the meeting of the Taylor society tonight in Bingham hall.

In this talk Mr. Taylor will point out why interest in marketing methods has increased so greatly since 1920 and how manufacturers who use scientific methods in planning for economical distribution are better able to cope with the keen competition they are facing today.

In order to make clear just what the term scientific marketing includes, the speaker will make direct references to companies distributing well-known products which are bought by students.

The meeting this evening is being held at 7:00 in the auditorium of Bingham hall, number 103, because the speaker will use numerous displays to illustrate the points he will make. The officers of the society state that all meeting of the society are open to the public and that everyone interested in the subject of Mr. Taylor's talk is invited to attend the meeting this evening.

University Professor Draws Attention Of Famous Reviewers

disciple, has qualms about Shakespeare, but is willing to accept Dante."

John Chamberlain in the Times Book Review tries to shed light upon the Humanist movement, in which the University is more or less interested because of Professor Foerster's connection with it. He says:

"The tenets of the contributors to this book may be summed up briefly. To begin with, belief in the moral responsibility of the individual is assumed, not as something scientifically proved, but merely as something arrived at through the study of mankind as man. This responsibility rests on the assumption of the freedom of the will, which, in the words of Professor Babbit, takes the form of a will to 'refrain,' or to 'discriminate,' to set an 'inner check' working upon the natural desires of the expansive man to get all that is coming to him. Science is regarded as something hors concours; it teaches much about quantity, or 'how much,' but nothing about quality, or 'how good,' and hence is something to be used, not something to be worshiped in itself. In literature the humanists lean heavily on Aristotle and his ideas concerning fit heroes for tragedy, heroes who are neither wholly good nor wholly bad, but who are endowed with a power of choice between good and evil, the conflict of the choosing making the drama. (This, of course, rules out Dreiser's gallery of Cowperwoods, Sister Carries, Eugene Witlas and Clyde Griffithses.) In education, the humanists take their stand with Professor Babbit, who has criticized President Eliot's formulas of education for 'power and service,' and who has opposed to these formulas a belief in the efficacy of the classics in giving undergraduates a fit image of the cultured man."

Several people were in the room, observed the contents which Luther had removed, and ordered him to desist in his attempts at repair, and replace the "rubbish in the old phonograph.

A short time later the entire party left for outside festivities, and, upon returning a few hours later, the pickaninny was found writhing in convulsions, the bottle of Lysol by his side. Unable to locate a Chapel Hill physician, Nellie Harvey rushed him to a Durham hospital, too late to save his life.

coroner's inquest it was devel-Coroner's inquest it was developed that the dead negro child had been unable to walk, that it was a very unwelcome visitor in its home, that Eliza and Nellie had quareled on the evening of the baby's death, over the $2.25 which Nellie owed for the infant's keep during the previous week and which Nellie was afraid Eliza would spend for drink if given to her at that time.

Nellie accused Eliza of the murder. Eliza denied it, and pointed out other possible suspects. Eliza, according to Nellie, told her "I killed yo' chile an' ah'll kill you!" But other witnesses aver that Eliza upon facing the accusation of murder, said, in truth, "If ah killed yo' chile, ah'll kill you."

At present there is not enough evidence to hold anyone for the crime, but police are interrogating most of the colored population of Carrboro and the coroner expects new developments in a few days.

RESULTS OF PLAY CONTESTS ISSUED BY DRAMA BUREAU

Original Plays To Be Produced During Seventh Annual State Dramatic Festival In April.

The bureau of community drama announces the results of the original play contest, a preliminary feature of the state dramatic tournament to be given during the seventh annual state dramatic festival, April 10, 11 and 12. Each group entered in the contest submitted an original manuscript.

From among the plays written by little theatre groups the following were selected: "The Song of the Wind" by R. C. Robinson of the Wayne Community Players of Goldsboro and "The Elopement" by Mrs. Griffin of the Seaboard Community Players.

Lenoir-Rhyne College was the only college to enter an original manuscript, "Rising Waters" by Miss Helen Miller.

In the high school group "Death Comes to Sonia" by Esta Rouch of Winston-Salem and "Clippings" by Kneale Morgan of the senior high school in Asheville were winners.

The groups submitting the winning manuscripts have been invited to produce them at the dramatic tournament, at which time the state winners in each group will be determined. A trophy is awarded to the winning producers, while the authors of the plays already selected are to receive valuable prizes for their work.

The following organizations originally entered this contest: The Mountain Mimes of Swannanoa, Blue Ridge School, Lenoir-Rhyne College, the high schools of Sanford, New Bern, Conway, Winston-Salem, Wilson, Charlotte, Franklinton and Asheville, and the community players of Greenville, Goldsboro and Seaboard.

Grail To Give Third Dance Saturday Night

The Order of the Grail will stage its next dance at 9 o'clock Saturday night. The dance will be held in Bynum gumnasium, and the building will be fittingly decorated for the occasion.

Officials of the Grail report that they are expecting a large crowd at this dance as the engineers will also give a dance Friday night.

The custom established at the last dance will be carried out Saturday night. A box of candy will be given to each of the first five girls entering, provided they are on the floor by 9:30 o'clock. By giving away the candy the last Grail dance was started 30 minutes earlier than usual. It is expected that the dance will be under way by 9:30 as the race for the candy will be pretty hot. Red Greene, treasurer, says that the members of the Grail were well pleased with the promptness which prevailed at the last dance and that they expect even greater promptness at the coming affair.

Tickets will be placed on sale at the rear entrance to the gymnasium to those not accompanied by girls. The ticket booth will be open promptly at 8:30.

Music for the occasion will be furnished by the Carolina Buccaneers.

BRADSHAW TALKS AT FROSH CHAPEL

Dean Of Students Tells First Year Men Of Vocational Guidance Meeting At Atlantic City.

Dean F. F. Bradshaw, who has just returned from a meeting of vocational guidance organizations in Atlantic City, talked to the freshmen in chapel yesterday on the subject of this meeting, giving them some very definite advice on the matter of choosing a vocation.

Emphasizing throughout the importance of studying the vocations. Dean Bradshaw showed clearly that a definite choice of a vocation should be made only after becoming thoroughly acquainted with the situation. He accorded no great importance to the points of deciding early and definitely but urged an ever-active investigation and a continuous adjustment of oneself according to a wider knowledge.

The uncertainty of a large number of college students concerning their life-work was given to the dean to show the importance of giving immediate consideration to the matter. A remarkably large number of students change their minds after entering college. According to Dean Bradshaw it is often necessary to re-think the matter, but in all events he holds that a systematic study should be the basis of the attempt.

Dean Bradshaw suggested reading and talking with persons engaged in the various vocations as means of obtaining a general knowledge of different vocations. A good plan, also, he said, is to obtain work in the summer related to the business or profession in which one is interested.

SECOND TERM OF EXTENSION WORK HAS GOOD START

Record Enrollment Of 873 Features Opening Of The 28 Extension Centers In This State.

The second term sessions of the 28 extension classes located in the various sections of the state started during the last two weeks with a record total of enrollment, according to R. M. Grumman, director of the University extension division. In these classes are enrolled 873 students, most of whom registered for the two courses offered at each class center. The total number of course registrations is 1618, an increase of 69 over the previous term, and the largest in the history of the extension division for any one term.

Practically all of the courses taught in extension classes are professional courses in education. A staff of seven extension instructors devote full teaching time to this work, three of whom make their headquarters in different parts of the state, accessible to the classes. The instructors teach at three of four centers, meeting classes once each week, and, in addition, they visit the classrooms of the student-teachers, so that the laboratory method of teaching plays an important part in the extension classes. Under the direction of Professor W. J. McKee, special methods in technique are being worked out in this program of training teachers while in service.

A list of the class centers and instructors follows: Cecilia H. Bason, Clinton, Whiteville and Wilmington; Ernest H. Hicks, Beaufort, Plymouth, Stonewall and Washington; Mrs. C. E. McIntosh, Fayetteville, Lumberton and Rockingham; W. J. McKee, Dunn, Sanford, Henderson; R. W. Morrison, Asheville, Waynesville, Hendersonville and Marshall; E. R. Mosher, Carthage; B. A. Stevens, Caroleen, Maiden, Rutherfordton and Shelby; Mrs. Grace P. Woodman, Albemarle, Hillsboro Monroe and Wadesboro; Sallie B. Marks and Nora Beust, Asheboro; Robert Sherrill, Rocky Mount.

Joint Session Of Duke And Carolina Literary Societies To Be Tonight

Discussion Of Plans To Bring About More Amicable Relations Between Two Universities To Be In Gerrard Hall At 8 O'clock; Leaders Heartily Endorse Idea.

The joint session of the student bodies of Duke and Carolina will be held tonight at 8 o'clock in Gerrard hall. The meeting is sponsored jointly by the Philanthropic and Dialectic societies of the University and the Columbian and Hesperian societies of Duke. John A. Lang, speaker of the Philanthropic society, announces that all students and faculty members are invited to attend the meeting and to take part in the discussion. Joe Savage and Ray Farris, president of the student bodies of the universities, will make short addresses.

Seven resolutions will be discussed at the meeting. They were prepared by John Lang and approved by a joint committee of the two societies. The resolutions are: (1) That meetings of the faculty and student leaders of the two universities be continued as permanent semi-annual occasions; (2) That the student leaders and publications direct the competetive energy into wholesome rivalry; (3) That the honored and learned societies share in appropriate inter-university occasions; (4) That the student publications announce the coming of distinguished speakers of interest and value to both institutions; (5) That the literary societies have alternate joint meetings at least once a year; (6) That professors of each university be invited to take part in some occasion or meeting at the other university; and (7) That the library facilities of each university be available for joint use of the students of the two universities.

A number of endorsements of this joint session have been received from some of the University's most outstanding faculty members. In endorsing this meeting, Professor R. D. W. Connor says: "Fine business! The plan has my hearty endorsement. I trust that the plan proposed will meet with enthusiastic and sustained support from both institutions."

Dean Addison Hibbard in speaking of this session says: "With so much possible through cooperation and common effort, it is difficult to believe that any one could find reason for objection to the program outlined by the four cooperating literary societies." Professor Frank Graham considers this meeting as the natural step in bringing about wholesome cooperation between the two universities. This movement of the literary societies is regarded by Dr. E. W. Knight as an intelligent effort to bring the two universities into more friendly relations.

Other prominent faculty members who have endorsed this joint Duke-Carolina meeting are: Dean Cyrus H. McCormick, Dean M. C. S. Noble, Professor C. E. McIntosh, Professor George McKie, Executive Secretary R. B. House and Professor E. C. Metzenthin.

RECORDER THROWS OUT ASSAULT CASE

Parker Roland, University Law Student Ably Pleads Case For Defendant.

Grace Taylor, 18, colored, went to the home of Carrie Rouse, 30, colored, with Hattie Davis, Bill Horton and Fred Farrar, at 8 or 9 o'clock on the evening of Saturday, February 15.

Most of the wee hours of the same evening Grace spent, almost entirely unclothed, and unconscious as well, in a field near the Rouse home.

Just this much was definitely established Tuesday evening at recorder's court in the old Pickwick theatre when Carrie Rouse appeared to answer a charge of assault with a deadly weapon; namely, a plank, on the person of Grace.

Parker Roland, a law student who was in the audience, volunteered to represent Carrie and had the satisfaction of securing a dismussal, together with some praise from Judge C. P. Hinshaw for the able manner in which he'd won his first case.

Testimony from ten witnesses was varied and highly colored.

Grace averred that she had gone to Carrie's home "'cause ah heerd dey wus a dance. Carrie gived us some home brew. Yessah, ah drank some, but ah wasn't drunk, no sah! 'N'en Carrie an' her husban' an' John Merritt wen' out and got some whiskey and gived me some. Yessah, ah drinked some. No,

Henry Would Have Al Smith Succeed Chase

(By Frank J. Raskob)

Dr. G. K. G. Henry, assistant registrar, in an interview with a Tar Heel reporter late yesterday afternoon, added another hat to the many now in the ring for the honor of succeeding Harry W. Chase as president of the University. Alfred Emanuel Smith, four times governor of the Empire State and one time nominee of the Democratic party for the presidency of the United States, is Dr. Henry's unofficial candidate.

The assistant registrar stated that with Mr. Smith Housed in the executive offices in the South building, the University would become one of the most talked of educational institutions in the country. In addition, Mr. Smith is not without ability or experience and in a recent news dispatch published throughout the nation, it was reported that Chief Justice Hughes and Governor Roosevelt of New York have characterized the "Happy Warrior" as the leading authority on constitutional law in the country.

It was further suggested that with Mr. Smith would come many a Northern student, and it would not be long before this school would be one of the largest and pre-eminent in the U. S.

It could not be ascertained yesterday whether or not the offer has been profferred to the late governor or what action he would take on it if he received it.

PROFESSOR TELLS TAYLOR SOCIETY ABOUT MARKETING

M. D. Taylor Addresses Group On Scientific Management Of Distribution At Weekly Meeting.

At the meeting of the University student branch of the Taylor Society held last night in Bingham hall, Malcolm D. Taylor, associate professor of marketing, spoke on "Scientific Marketing Management."

In his talk Mr. Taylor showed how basic conditions of industry have changed from a period of buyer demand during the war to the present period in which the producers are forced into keen competition to market the goods that they are now making.

This keen competition has brought about a period in which scientific marketing has been forced upon the producers. By means of the introduction of scientific marketing the producers have been able to meet the competition and so continue in business.

By actual examples of companies that have employed scientific marketing to introduce a new model of a product to the buying public, Mr. Taylor illustrated the points in the scientific selling of goods.

In presenting the point that much energy formerly put into the development of production was now being placed on marketing, the speaker stated that since 1920 buyers have become much more discriminating and exacting in their demands, and accordingly much time had to be spent in satisfying these demands.

The four phases of scientific marketing management as outlined by Mr. Taylor were the planning of the product by a consultation between the selling and the producing parts of the industry, the determination of what the public wants, the advertising research, and the sales research.

Professor Taylor was the fifth of a series of faculty speakers who are delivering addresses before the Taylor Society on subjects related to scientific business management. The next speaker, the last for this quarter, will be D. D. Carroll, dean of the school of commerce and economics, who will talk on "Education for Business Leadership" at the meeting next Tuesday evening.

Mechanical Engineers Attend Joint Meeting At N. C. State College

Members of the University student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers attended a joint meeting of the Raleigh section, the State College student branch and the University branch of the society held last night in Page hall at State College, Raleigh.

The meeting which was sponsored by the Raleigh section was held for the purpose of allowing members of the student branches to become acquainted with the practicing engineers who are members of the section.

The speaker of the evening was S. H. Libby, consulting engineer of the Bloomfield, N. J., plant of the General Electric Company, who is chairman of the society's committee on relations with the colleges.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

I have seen laborers, mechanics, merchants, manufacturers, judges both State and Federal, clergymen both of Roman Catholic and Protestant persuasion blandly and unconcernedly ignore prohibition.—Representative Frederick R. Lehlbach, of New Jersey.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

Talk has started in the Balkans of erecting a monument over the grave of "the man who started the world war." A good heavy one would be the thing.—Detroit News.

The plans so far suggested for rescuing Chicago are far from satisfactory. None, it seems, promises to support the politicians in the style to which they have accustomed themselves.—Detroit News.

It may be, as announced recently, that a scientist has succeeded in isolating the influenza germ, but a painful experience last week leads us to suspect that the thing must have got loose again.—Punch.

Tar Heel Topics

Evidently the weather man is set on making out the groundhog a liar these days.

A sure harbinger of spring (exams): text books being dusted off and put into use.

One of the major disappointments of the present student generation was the discovery last Saturday that the cornerstone of Memorial hall did not contain "any papers or other valuable tokens." Meaning that the cornerstone did not yield anything to gladden the hearts of the thirsty.

Gilliam Grissom, who has announced that he will seek the Republican gubernatorial nomination in 1932, says that when he is governor he intends to ask every tourist who passes through the state to visit the governor's mansion. Might as well make it a little more interesting and promise to give every one of 'em a deed to the Capitol building, Mr. Grissom.

The Textile Survey Commission

Since the publication in Sunday's Tar Heel of a tentative personnel for a commission to conduct the proposed nation-wide, non-partisan survey and analysis of the textile industry, several other names have been suggested to us.

Among those nominated since Sunday for places on the commission by persons interested in its formation are H. G. Moulton, who has made a clear, scientific analysis of the economic situation in Germany, and Wesley Claire Mitchell, chairman of the National Research Council. Mr. Moulton presented the results of his survey of the German situation in his book Germany's Capacity to Pay, which was one of the principal basis of the Dawes Report. One of the most experienced directors of cooperative economic surveys and analyses in the country, he is the author of several standard textbooks on banking. At present he is the executive head of the Brookings Institution of Economics at Washington, founded by Robert S. Brookings, chairman of the board of trustees of Washington University, St. Louis, and a retired manufacturer.

Mr. Mitchell is recognized as the greatest American authority on business cycles. He is a masterful director of economic studies, surveys and analyses. Other men mentioned for places on the proposed commission are Fred Greer of South Carolina, Robert Lassiter of Charlotte, W. M. McLaurine, secretary of the American Cotton Manufacturers Association, and J. L. Clark of Spray. It has been suggested also that the resources of the Yale Institute of Human Relations, the National Research Council and the Institute for Research in Social Sciences be utilized by the committee.

Working in cooperation with men and women of the type suggested in Sunday's editorial, prominent and efficient manufacturers, textile engineering and production experts, authorities on labor legislation, representatives from the faculties of schools which devote their resources to problems of business organization, the foremost industrial historians and students of social relationships, and experts from several federal departments, the research and analyses conducted by these men would without doubt produce results beneficial to everyone affected by the industry—manufacturers, workers, producers of raw materials and consumers.

A commission suggested by men such as those suggested would focus the theoretical and practical knowledge and abilities of the nation's foremost experts in every field connected with the textile industry upon efforts to solve the difficult problems in which the entire industry is now involved. Every interest and viewpoint would be equally represented, and correlated into an harmonious whole by impartial men concerned only with securing potential benefits for all. The studies would be conducted largely within the industry itself by the most competent minds in every field connected with it.

Already the need for the commission is apparent, and it will eventually become a necessity. Years of strife and bloodshed, losses through inefficiency in manufacturing and marketing and labor difficulties, aggregating millions of dollars, may be avoided if a commission of the type suggested is appointed and begins its work within the near future.

Shifting The Blame

Too many times during the college year an undergraduate drops out of school carrying in his heart a bitterness for some professor whom he declares to be responsible for his departure. He swears that this professor, simply out of spite, or because of a grudge, deliberately flunked him cold on a course the passing or failing of which was a matter of collegiate life and death with him. Not only does the boy call down the wrath of God upon his supposed malefactor, and blame him for the pink slip of suspension, but he goes so far as to imply that should he go to the dogs it will be entirely the fault of the unjust professor.

Men experienced in the ways of college students say that lowerclassmen often have mistaken attitudes toward their instructors, and that one of the most unreasonable of these is this idea of vindicative flunking. Such an attitude is rarely justifiable, and it is certainly detrimental.

It is true that a professor will sometimes "ride" a man, but it must be admitted that some students need to be ridden, and that extremely few professors are so unfair and unwise as to ride to the extent of giving an F to a student who deserves a passing grade. Perhaps there are some professors who allow petty spites to figure in their grading of tests and examinations, but we have yet to encounter one who, regardless of personal feelings, will not at least give a D to every student who really deserves to be passed. Professors are only human, and they have their likes and dislikes, but none of them can afford to pay off personal scores with F's, even should they like to do so.

The truth of the matter is that many of us seek to clear ourselves by attempting to throw blame for our scholastic shortcomings upon the instructor. From generation to generation of college students there has been handed down the idea that paying attention in the class room and presenting well prepared assignments are merely matters of condescension and accommodation on the part of the student. Look twice at such an attitude and you find it to be as erroneous as that of blaming the professor rather than oneself for failure on a course. For the student to bear this fact in mind is for him to better that feeling of cooperation which should exist between a student and his instructor.—J. J.

A NEW "OPTIONAL ATTENDANCE PLAN" BY A FACULTY MEMBER

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Your editorial of Saturday morning, entitled "A Backward Step," is a thoughtful piece of work and sets forth admirably a situation which should prevail among serious students. Unfortunately, however, there are many students in the University who are either poorly prepared for college work or take their tasks lightly, and it is these, I think, who are making a change as to voluntary class attendance almost imperative. Would some such plan as is suggested below take care of both the ambitious and the unambitious students:

The Plan

1. Require regular class attendance of all students until they have succeeded in passing all of the freshman and sophomore courses.

2. Extend the privilege of optional attendance to all juniors and seniors who have met the requirements of paragraph 1 above and who have also been able to make a grade of C or better on three or more full college courses for the quarter immediately preceding.

3. Deny optional attendance privilege to any junior or senior who fails to maintain an average of C until such time as he may be able to qualify.

I can not see how a student who is really in earnest about his work need object to such a plan; for, under the new regulation recently adopted, he will need to maintain the average suggested anyway. Suppose the students give us their views on the above, assigning any definite objections that they may have in mind. I am sure that no member of the faculty with whom I have talked seeks to be unreasonable about the matter; but if the University is to be known in the future for the quality of its work on the part of the students something will have to be done to remedy some of the abuses which exist under the present system of optional attendance.

Very truly yours,
INTERESTED FACULTY MEMBER.

IN THE WAKE OF NEWS

It certainly looks like J. C. Williams will finally settle upon a heading for his column. He's succesively called his Tar Heel contribution "The Pointer," "The Campus Snapshot," "The Arrow," and "The Arrow Man." A tip for all amateur columnists (like ourself) is that they let the professional journalists do the column naming. Our friend, Harvey T. Woodruff of The Chicago Daily Tribune also runs a column under the heading of "The Wake of the News," although it's a good one too. The Los Angeles Times runs a snappy column of epigrams under the title of "Pen Points," although inferior in quality to that run in the Tar Heel. As for "Beau Gent," "The Campus," and "Merely Meandering," we have yet to run into anything like them.

Nell Battle Lewis, one of the state's best columnists, speaking before a collegiate newspaper conference last spring, defined columns as expressions of the personalities of their writers. I guess, if this be true, that some of us are pretty big fools.

It is remarkable how few errors exist in collegiate journalism, particular on the college dailies. However, some of those which occur are quite humorous. Witness the issue of Sunday in which one of my fellow city-editors announced to the world that the boxing team would be in good shape for the Penn State team Saturday night (the night before) on account of the extra coaching received at the hands of Ad Warren, while at the top of the page the city editor had placed the results of the same contest.

Incidentally, our hats are off to Noah Goodridge, fighter par-excellence, who this week stands as high man on the team after a vicious onslaught made by Penn State.

Philippine Student Here Thinks His Country Is Misunderstood

(By Joe Jones)

Alfredo Nazareno of the Philippine Islands leaned smiling across the little table of his room on the fourth floor of Grimes dormitory and said in correct, rapid English to the young American who faced him: "Between your country and mine there exists a gulf of misunderstanding, and that is the foundation of the strained relations between them. I shall gladly tell you anything I can about my country, for in so doing I feel that I am rendering it a service, slight though it may be.

"All of us Filipinos who come to the United States bring with us a desire to make friends with you, and so to help break down the misconceptions between the two peoples. I have been in America more than three years, one in the North and two here, and during that time I have made many good friends. When I make friends with the other boys here at the University I feel that I am doing something for our two countries in drawing them together."

That Alfredo has succeeded in creating respect and friendliness for himself and his fellow countrymen during his two years in the University will be affirmed by any of the large number of Carolina men with whom he has come in contact. Affable and courteous, quick in repartee as well as in class discussion, the islander shows every evidence of having quickly learned to fit into American life.

He is fond of sports, and fencing is his favorite. On the wall of his room hang a pair of slender foils and a fencer's glove and mask. He does not claim to be a master swordsman, but he is no mean opponent with the foils. Though small in stature he is quick and wiry, his eye is keen, and he has a thorough knowledge of the various thrusts and parries.

Another of Alfredo's hobbies is drawing, an art in which he is quite skilled. He can sketch rapidly and deftly with chalk, and in his desk are a number of excellent pencil portraits he has done. Some of them may be at once recognized as likenesses of students and faculty members who have posed for him. There is an especially good one of Dr. H. R. Totten of the botany department.

In speaking further of the relations between the Philippines and the United States, Alfredo says: "Before the problem of Philippine independence can be solved you Americans must learn something about them. Nine out of ten Americans I talk with can't even tell me where the Philippine Islands are, and I am told that many of your congressmen have as slight knowledge of them.

"I find that the greatest misconceptions of the Americans in regard to the Philippines lie in their confusing them with the Hawaiian and South Sea Islands, and in believing them to be inhabited by savage tribes, incapable of governing themselves. These fallacies have come about chiefly through bad publicity in American newspapers and moving pictures.

"Many Americans think only of the Philippines as the home of the Moros whose very name implies fierceness and tribal savagery, but there are no such things as tribes and tribal warfare in the Islands today. The country is civilized and modern in every way, just as your own country it. The truth is the name Moros is the Spanish name for Moors, or followers of Mahammed. The Moros of today are really far more civilized than many of the people of city slums whom you call civilized simply because they life in a civilized country.

"As for the question of independence I believe that we already deserve it, but first we must understand each other. I am sure that the Filipino people are always willing to work toward the improvement of present relations. If I had a for-

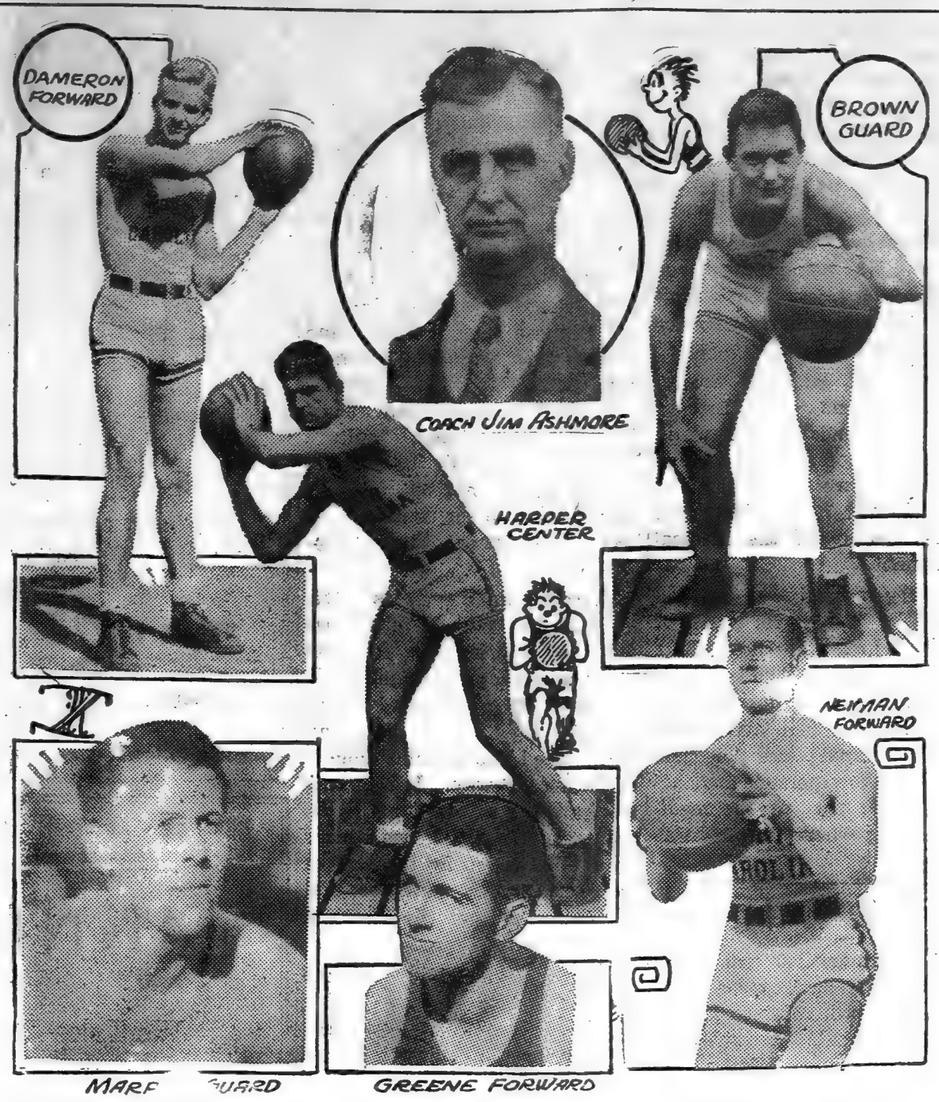
THE "LITTLE SIX" basketball title was won by the High Point Panthers. Their defeat of the Lenoir-Rhyne Mountain Bears in High Point last Thursday night clinched the title. Ralph Milligan, star Panther guard, closed his collegiate court career by leading the Panthers in their win. Mulligan is one of the most outstanding guards in the "Little Six" league, composed of High Point, Lenoir-Rhyne, Elon, Guilford, Atlantic Christian and Catawba Colleges.



BUNN HEARN, former major league pitching ace and successful manager of the Wilson Virginia League Club is now assisting Coach Ashmore in training the baseball nine. Official practice for the pitching staff started definitely yesterday with a large number reporting. Assistant Coach Hearn will be in charge of the pitching staff this year. He is a former Carolina southpaw and has returned to Carolina several times since his graduation to aid the Carolina mentors in developing batteries. Since leaving Carolina in 1910 Hearn has played baseball for 20 consecutive seasons. He played on the old Carolina League, the National League, International, Virginia, and Piedmont, and last year was with the York, Pa., club in the New York-Pennsylvania circuit. He helped turn out the strong Tar Heel nines of 1918-1919.

BOBBIE JONES lost to Horton Smith by one stroke in the recent Savannah open golf tournament. Smith, by brilliant play, turned in a card of 278 for 72 holes. Horton Smith, the Joplin, Mo., sensation, and Bobby Jones, the Atlanta marvel, were the two outstanding leaders of the tourney. Jones set a new course record of 65 in the morning round but turned in a 72 in the afternoon to be nosed out by one stroke for the $3,000 Savannah open golf tournament title.

OBSERVATION of the 1930 Gridiron prospects look bright for the Tar Heels, but very few of last year's squad can be given undisputed claims to a berth on next year's team. The backfield, for example, shows almost the same wealth of material that was seen last year. Captain Strud Nash, Jim Magner, Henry House, Rip Slusser, Johnnie Branch, Pete Wyrick, and several of last year's freshmen and some new "finds" complicate matters in regard to picking backfield members. Nash played about as regularly as any man in the backfield last year, but this year the competition will be stronger and more experienced for his old halfback berth. Jim Magner was laid up for a large part of the season, but he was picked by many for an all-southern berth. Pete Wyrick has recovered from the injuries he was suffering from in the latter part of the 1929 season, and he and Branch will probably be alternating in the quarterback berth. Worth McAllister may offer strong opposition to House's occupancy of the fullback berth. Rip Slusser will have gained experience, and will no doubt show up better than last year. Pick a regular backfield from the material available, and test your pick in the fall.

To See Action At Atlanta Tournament

For the first time in history a basketball team representing the University of North Carolina, southern champions four times in the last eight years—1922, 1924, 1925 and 1926—is going to the southern conference tournament at Atlanta as a dark horse.

A big and potentially powerful quint, but handicapped by lack of veteran forwards, the 1930 Tar Heels got off to a slow start. They gained strength steadily as the season progressed, and showed a great power toward the end, taking a 43-33 win from Navy's strong quint in their last intersectional test.

And now the Tar Heels are rated as dark horses. The officials of the southern conference tournament must think so, too. They picked the Tar Heels as one of six teams for preferential ratings, despite their season record.

Boxers Will Present Three Great Candidates For Honors At Charlottesville Tourney

Goodridge, Allen, And Davis To Make Strong Bids For Individual Titles.

ALLEN IS UNDEFEATED

Entire Team In Good Shape; No Injuries Sustained In Penn State Meet.

The University's southern championship boxers will present three great candidates through the middle weights for individual southern titles at the Charlottesville tournament this week-end.

Reference is to Noah Goodridge, lightweight; Captain Archie Allen, welterweight; and Obie Davis, middleweight.

The Tar Heels won but one individual title as they took their second consecutive southern title in last year's tournament. Captain Archie Allen won that, in the lightweight class. This year the team hopes to write a different story. Captain Allen is out of the lightweight class now, fighting welter, and has an undefeated season record. Noah Goodridge, the 135-pound contender, beat Penn State's splendid lightweight to end a great season in which he has lost but one close decision to Captain Phil O'Connell of Florida, who won the conference featherweight title last year and who is fighting lightweight this season. Obie Davis, 160-pounder, likewise has lost only to Florida's middleweight in the conference, but Davis may have to battle also with John Carper, Duke's 160-pound knockout king, who has fought light heavy and heavy much of the season.

The Tar Heels are in good shape and driving away, getting all work possible. The boys came through Saturday night's gruelling loss to Penn State's national champions unscathed, and are planning to make a great stab for a third consecutive southern title.

During yesterday's workouts Harry Sheffield looked good in several fast rounds. Study Clark, reserve featherweight, showed both speed and punch, and looks like a first-class prospect for next year.

LINKER IS GREAT HELP TO FENCING

Romance Language Intsructor Largely Responsible For Success Of Movement On Campus.

There is a man on this campus who has helped sponsor the original fencing movement here and is now enthusiastically cooperating with Director Hendlin in running off and completing intramural fencing now in existence. The man in question is one who was extremely active in his undergraduate days and is now extremely popular as an instructor in the department of romance language. He is Robert White Linker. As an undergraduate at Carolina "Bob" was intensely alive in extra curricular activities. It is well to mention that he was one of the original founders of Carolina boxing, one of Carolina's most popular winter sports, and participated in a few bouts himself.

"Bob" has been delving in fencing for several years, but it was not until last year, when he took regular professional lessons under the French master, Professor Perrot, that fencing could conscientiously number him among its ardent devotees. Now he is bending his efforts in support of fencing, as he once did in boxing. He has been placed on the fencing council and has been officially appointed as faculty advisor for fencing.

FENCING SCHEDULE

The intramural fencing schedule for the remainder of this week is as follows:

Today at 4:00—Sigma Epsilon vs. Beta Theta Pi No. 1; at 5:00—Everett vs. Sigma Phi Sigma.

Thursday at 4:00—Beta Theta Pi No. 2 vs. Sea Hawks; at 5:00—Old East vs. Manly.

Friday at 4:00—Buccaneers vs. Phi Alpha; at 5:00—Ruffin vs. Musketeers.

'GEORGIA' MEETS 'VIRGINIA' TODAY IN GRID CONTEST

Game Scheduled For Kenan Stadium At 4 O'clock; Fast Attacks Expected.

"Georgia" and "Virginia" clash in Kenan stadium this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the ninth and next to the last of the winter football games. The two strongest teams of the league are pitted against each other, and today's game will be a deciding factor in deciding who wins the winter grid race.

Johnny Branch, Strud Nash, and Harden are the star backs for Georgia and are sure to see service in the game today. These boys with the help of House have led the "Bulldogs" through an undefeated season.

However, it is being rumored that the star halfback combination of Magner and Slusser, who ran so brilliantly last fall and who have passed the "Cavaliers" to two victories in the last two weeks, will win another game today. Lipscomb, another star, is expected to be a great help for "Virginia."

In the line "Georgia" will present Brown at end and Gilbreath at center—both old men—and McDade and Smith, rookie tackles. Other men on the "Bulldog" team who should be watched are Croom, White, Frazier and Morrisey.

"Virginia's" best men will be Underwood, Crew, Nelson and Lipscomb in the line and Magner, Slusser, McNeil and Lassiter in the backfield.

DEKES WIN TITLE IN FRAT RACE

Alpha Tau Omega Team Downs Dekes, But Plays Ineligible Man.

D. K. E. - AYCOCK TONIGHT

The Dekes cinched the fraternity intramural league title yesterday by winning from A. T. O. by a forfeit. The participation of Brooker, A. T. O. player and member of the varsity basketball squad, was protested by the Dekes on the grounds of his having participated in a varsity contest. Upon investigation of this protest by intramural department officials, the claim of the Dekes was upheld and they were declared winner of the game as provided under the rules governing the intramural league.

By winning this game the Dekes clinched the fraternity league with eight wins and no losses. They will play the strong Aycock dormitory team tonight for the campus championship. The game will be played at 7:30.

Zeta Psi Fencers Win

A strong, well-coached Zeta Psi fencing team defeated the hard-fighting representatives of Sigma Nu yesterday afternoon by the score of 8-1. Valk and Cooper of Zeta Psi were the outstanding fencers of the day, each winning three and losing none. Pratt, also of Zeta Psi, showed up excellently, winning two matches out of three. Whedbee of Sigma Nu did well, and after a slow start finally succeeded in winning his last bout. Ferguson and Skinner of Sigma Nu lost their bouts in close skirmishes but displayed commendable ability.

While the articles and the mummy itself are of the highest archeological value, probably the most startling find was one that revealed a drama enacted probably centuries ago within the dark fastnesses of the tomb.

Some of the works of Moussorgsky and Scriabine will be presented by Mrs. C. T. Murchison and Mrs. F. B. McCall, while the works of Tchaikowsky and Stravinsky will be represented by Victor recordings of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

In addition a string quartet composed of T. S. McCorkle and Mrs. E. D. Strong, violins, Hugo Giduz, viola, and Charles Pier, cello, will render a Russian number and perhaps others. Mr. Pier, artist cellist, is spending the winter in Southern Pines.

The talk on etchings which was to have been heard by the Sketch Club, has been postponed until next month. Members of the club speak enthusiastically of the visit to Mary Graves' studio made by the group last week.

Oldest Living Grad Of Yale Nearing His Hundredth Birthday

Cincinnati, O., Feb. 25.—(IP)—E. P. Bradstreet, oldest living graduate of Yale University and "the grand old man" of the Ohio bar, has several reasons for wanting to live until June 5, the day he will celebrate his 100th birthday.

"I was 60 years old when my youngest daughter was born," Bradstreet explained.

"If the Lord is kind enough I shall be a grandfather for the first time in March. It is something for an old man to live for a century without grandchildren and nearly half a century without children.

But that isn't the only reason Bradstreet wishes to round out 100 years.

"Another reason I want to live to be 100 years old," he said, "is because John Heydler, president of the National League, and I have a little appointment to attend a ball game on my 100th birthday if the Cincinnati Reds are playing in town that day.

"Another reason I want to live to be 100," he said with a twinkle in his eye, "is because I do not wish to disappoint my friends."

Bradstreet was born at Vermillion, O., on June 5, 1830. He was graduated from Yale in 1853, and received his master's degree in 1857.

That same year he was admitted to the bar.

DR. AND MRS. WAY HOSTS TO GLEE CLUB AT SAINT MARY'S MONDAY NIGHT

Senior Notice

All seniors majoring in history and government who expect to graduate in June will take their comprehensive examinations next Saturday morning, March 1, at 9 a. m. in 314 Saunders hall.

This is a correction to a notice in yesterday's paper which stated that all seniors would take their exams.

Pre-Law Students Organized Monday

A meeting of about 20 pre-law students was held Monday night and it was decided to organize a club for all students expecting to enter the law school in the next two or three years. Support and endorsement of the plan were offered by Dean McCormick of the law school and Waddell Gholson, president of the Law School Association. Plans were laid for the securing of interesting and prominent speakers and for the enlisting of interest of all pre-law students. Bill Speight was elected chairman of the group, to attend to details of the future programs. Various topics of interest to embryonic lawyers will be taken up and the organization will, in the opinion of older students of law, be of great benefit to those now in the schools of liberal arts, commerce, and education, who expect to become members of the law school. The date and speaker for the next meeting will be announced later.

Sutton Fined For Allowing Dog To Run About Village

J. L. Sutton, Chapel Hill druggist, was fined $35 and costs in recorder's court Monday morning for allowing his German Police dog, known to be dangerous, to run at large.

The dog had bitten the small daughter of Professor J. V. Kyser of the pharmacy department and was being held in the medical department of the University under observation for traces of rabies.

Judge C. P. Hinshaw was to have decided as to the fate of the dog on Monday of this week, but Chief of Police Lloyd brought him word that the animal had died Sunday morning in the custody of the medical department.

The dog's head was severed and sent to Raleigh for traces of rabies, which were not found. Plans to examine the animal's stomach were not carried out, but it is not believed likely that the animal was poisoned, since very few persons had access to that part of the medical building where the dog was caged.

Infirmary List

Philippine Student Thinks His Country Is Misunderstood

tune to spend for my country I would give it and my life in bringing about closer relations between our two countries.

"Most of the resentment for the United States among my countrymen is not because we are under the sovereignty of the United States, but because America insists on telling us that we are unfit and unable to govern ourselves. Admiral Dewey once said of the Filipinos that they had a government of their own in 1898 which was better administered than that of Cuba. Cuba is independent, and yet after thirty-two years you say we do not know how to govern ourselves. They tell us that Malays have never become a nation, and therefore we can never become a nation because we are Malays. This is absurd, for even if we are of Malay origin there has been a constant blending of races. Moreover, we are proud to show you that we have a Filipino flag, and does not a flag imply nationality?"

Here Nazareno paused to sketch a rough map of the eastern hemisphere, and pointed out that the Philippines are geographically the center of the eastern commercial cobweb.

"And that is why," he said, "we are a blending of many races. Nobody can tell how the Philippines were first settled, but the oldest records show that Chinese mandarins visited them as early as the tenth century and found them to be a land of wealth. Later came the Japanese who, like the Chinese, did not settle, but traded and went home. So the Philippines became an entrepot of commerce.

"The Turks and the Arabians found their way to Borneo and other islands of the South, and from there came at last to the Philippines, bringing with them the Mohammedan religion. Many of them stayed, so that we became a blending of Turks, Arabs, and Malays, a mixture of virile bloods. The Japanese have never mixed with us at all, and the Chinese but little.

"Then came the first Spaniards, who were some of the best and bravest men in Spain, and because they brought no women with them the Filipino carries a strain of Spanish blood. They introduced European culture which blended with the Chinese culture of the natives. As we moved through the centuries we became known as the Philippines."

Alfredo's dark eyes lost their smile as he said, "When we come to America we face so many misunderstandings. Imagine you are going to a country in which the people have already sized you up and done it in the wrong way. It is naturally hard for us. It is not hypocrisy when I say that we always try to judge you by the best of you instead of by the sailors and marines who get drunk and swear at us."

When asked how he liked North Carolina the boy said: "Ah, your country of the South! I like North Carolina because the environment holds me in a way I cannot tell. There is something peaceful about the people. They are collected. If I settle in America I shall settle in North Carolina.

"It seems to me that I've learned more about the American people here than in the North. I liked the North when I was there because I thought I was seeing your best people there. I thought before I came that I wouldn't like North Carolina, because it's a place where foreigners are not frequent. But quite the contrary has happened to me here at Chapel Hill, and I think the same would have happened had I been out of school. My experience has been a happy one."

President Green Defends Right Of Laboring Class To Organize

Head of American Federation Of Labor Gives Talk in Bingham Hall; Predicts Unionizing Of South.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, gave a 30-minute talk in Bingham hall yesterday afternoon before a large audience upon the aims and purposes of the nation-wide labor organization's southern campaign.

Characterizing the Southland as evolving from an "agricultural land into an industrial empire," the successor to Samuel Gompers continued to say that the A. F. L. "responds to the call of the great masses of people in the South." Mr. Green expressed the Federation's desire to help the laborer.

"We hope to bring the right of organizing into trade unions to the southern worker." This aim is, according to Mr. Green, the prime purpose of organized labor in its campaign in the south. Mr. Green said that capital organizes—and has the right to organize. Certainly labor should be accorded the same privilege. "There is no justification of employers discharging men because of associating themselves with trade unions!" The need of labor to organize was cited by the speaker as most urgent.

Another aim of the Federation which it hopes to accomplish is to see that greater social justice is meted out to the many women and children toiling in the mills of the south. Mr. Green said that with 3,000,000 unemployed laborers in the United States, there was no necessity of employing 25 per cent of the total number of workers from women under 18 years of age.

Other points of the American Federation of Labor's platform are to see that workmen's compensation laws are made universal; to see that children are given the opportunity to enjoy their youth and to obtain the benefits of an education; to see that the working week and day are made shorter and that the laborer is granted more leisure in which to exercise his cultural and spiritual abilities.

Mr. Green laid the present conditions of the textile industry at the doors of the managers and owners who, for the past two decades, have exercised a "perfect dictatorship."

The talker stated that another great problem directly allied with the labor situation is the plight of the agricultural worker, who, in Mr. Green's opinion, is worse off than the industrial worker. He declared that the "agricultural laborer must be lifted along with the industrial laborer."

The fact that poor, small farmers form an almost inexhaustible labor supply for the mills presents a very serious problem to the organizers and for that reason alone it will be necessary for labor to carry agriculture's cross as well as its own.

Mr. Green urged hearers to investigate and seek more knowledge of the subject.

Many listeners availed themselves of the opportunity to question the leading exponent of the American Federation of Labor. Almost the last question asked was that of Dr. Schwenning of the school of commerce.

Chapel Notice

Dean Bradshaw announces that there will be no further chapel exercises this quarter either for the sophomore or freshman classes. The next regular chapel exercise will be Monday, March 24, which is the first day of class work for the spring quarter.

Management Class to Inspect Greensboro Industrial Plants

Members of the class in industrial management will make a trip to Greensboro this afternoon to inspect the plant of the Vick Chemical company and the print works of the Proximity plant of the Cone Mills.

This trip is the fourth that the class has made this quarter to various manufacturing plants to inspect the plants and the systems on which they are managed. The class has visited the plants of the Riverside and Dan River Cotton Mills, at Danville, the White Furniture Manufacturing Company at Mebane, and the Liggett and Myers Tobacco Company in Durham. Later in the quarter it is planned to visit the Southern Railway shops at Spencer.

The course in industrial management is given by Professor G. T. Schwenning, who is planning the trips, which are an optional part of the regular work. On each of the other trips that have been taken a large group has made the inspection of the plant, and a large group will go to Greensboro today to visit the Cone Mills, the president of which spoke in Chapel Hill a few weeks ago on the textile question.

Turns Car In Middle Of Block; Pays Costs

A. H. Fillers, 40, an insurance salesman residing in Durham, will be careful in the future who he accuses of being mayor of Chapel Hill.

Fillers turned in the middle of the block near the Carolina Theatre upon seeing a friend driving by in the opposite direction. By turning he caused some inconvenience to Mrs. G. A. Braune, wife of a local alderman, who called his attention to the violation of the traffic ordinance.

"Who d'you think y'are, the mayor?" Fillers is alleged to have ejaculated, whereupon Mrs. Braune caused his arrest.

Fillers, who contritely pleaded guilty, was assessed the costs of the case.

Miss Henrietta Smedes at the same time presented a program of Russian music before the music club assembled at Person hall.

MADRY LAUDED AS PUBLICITY AGENT FOR UNIVERSITY

"Bob", Class Of '18, Spent Several Years As Paris Correspondent Of New York Herald Before Coming Here In 1923.

In an article appearing in the February issue of the Alumni Review, Robert W. Madry, director of the University news bureau, received due praise for his excellent work since he became director of the bureau in 1923. The article is based mainly on the statements made at the recent convention of the North Carolina Newspaper Institute, wherein several prominent journalists of the state commended publicly the news service rendered by the University.

These newspapermen spoke highly in favor of the policy of the news bureau in supplying the papers with real news and not press-agent publicity. This policy they attribute to the adroit handling of Director Madry. Prominent among those praising the University news service were W. Carey Dowd, publisher of the Charlotte News and president of the North Carolina Press Association, and Frank Smethurst, managing editor of the News and Observer.

"There was never a time," said Mr. Smethurst, "when the University was closer to the people of the state than now, and the people of North Carolina had more interest in it, when its activities on and off the campus met with such fine encouragement. I would not in any way detract from the fine administrative and professional achievements that have merited this appreciation, but I do believe that in a large measure it is due to the fact that there is here a serviceable and efficient news bureau through the operation of which the University has been as an open book to the

ENGINEER DANCE FRIDAY NIGHT TO BE COLORFUL

Lighting and Decorations of Ball Room to Be Elaborate; Buccaneers To Play.

"Forget your technical worries" is the advice given the engineers by the committee in charge of the annual engineers' dance to be held Friday evening, and if advance reports of the affair are correct, every opportunity to do just that thing will be given.

The campus sometimes thinks of the engineers as a gang of roughnecks, smoking pipes and wearing boots, but Friday they are staging a comeback, in giving what they say will be the best dance of the quarter. Already plans have been made for some of the most unique lighting effects in the history of Carolina dances; the decorations will be different; the music will be good; the girls will be there in quantity and quality; and everything points to a grand and glorious time for the technicians Friday evening.

The Buccaneers, regarded as one of the best music-making groups, will outdo themselves in furnishing the necessary syncopation.

The engineers' dance, an annual affair of the school of engineering, is sponsored by the three engineering societies, and, as it is practically the only social activity of the engineers, they are planning to put it across in big style.

Engineers may secure tickets for the dance at the senior room of the department in which they are registered: civils at room 320; electricals, room 217; and mechanicals, room 216. Students other than engineers will be admitted only if they are bringing a girl. Those desiring to attend with girls should see Johnson Alexander in room 217 Phillips hall for tickets.

Additional Donations Increase Tar Heel Relief Fund For Poor

Chapel Hill, N. C.
February 25, 1930

Dr. L. M. Brooks,
Chapel Hill, N. C.
Dear Doctor Brooks—

I am sending you a check to be applied to the Orange County Relief Fund being raised on the campus by you and your assistants. It gives me great pleasure to send you this small check. I have been waiting on an opportunity to do my bit and thank you and your helpers for providing the channel.

Best Wishes to the Fund

This is the letter received from one of yesterday's contributors to the "Campus Relief Fund for Orange County Poor" now being conducted through the channels of the Daily Tar Heel. Contributions received now total $24.90, $14.60 of which was donated donated yesterday. The following sums compose the fund to date:

Dr. W. deB. MacNider	$5.00
Dr. Howard W. Odum	5.00
F. P. Cauble	3.00
Anonymous	1.60
Previously donated	10.30
	$24.90

Names of contributors will be published every day in the Tar Heel. Contributions should be mailed to Dr. L. M. Brooks, P. O. Box 747, or the Alumni building, mailed directly to the "Campus Relief Fund for Orange County Poor," Daily Tar Heel office, or turned over personally to one of the members of the committee in charge of the fund. The committee is composed of Dr. L. M. Brooks, of the sociology department, Louis Graves, editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly, Harry F. Comer, general secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Ellis Fysal, varsity football player, and Robert Hodges, assistant editor of the Tar Heel.

The value of contributions to the fund, no matter how small, cannot be overemphasized. George Lawrence, welfare director of this section, is seriously handicapped in his work by the lack of public funds provided for this purpose, and every amount added for relief helps in the alleviation of poverty in Orange county.

Mr. Lawrence has a number of cases in which financial assistance is absolutely necessary. He discovered one family of three, the husband, wife, and a daughter, all next door to starvation. The man was unable to work, being a victim of pellagra, a disease brought on by ill-balanced rations; his wife was an invalid and had been confined to bed for several years. The

Carolina - Duke Men Meet Here In Successful Confab

Students of Two Universities Unanimously Endorse Seven Constructive Resolutions Favoring Future Amity.

(By E. C. Daniel, Jr.)

A speech by Joe Savage, president of the student body of Duke University, was by popular acclaim the most potent factor of the meeting held in Gerrard hall last night in an effort to promote more amicable relationships between the students of Duke and Carolina. Under the sponsorship of the Di and Phi societies of the University and the Columbian and Hesperian societies of Duke University, a small but enthusiastic group of students and faculty members from both institutions were present for the discussions. Speaker John Lang of the Phi was presiding officer.

President Ray Farris of the University student body was the welcoming speaker of the evening. Following his introductory remarks he stated that the main objective of his talk was to introduce a movement for the organization of a state federation of college students, to be organized among the students of Duke, Carolina, Davidson, State and Wake Forest. President Farris stated that, due to their geographical situation and to the influence of other factors, these, the five largest schools in the state, should be interested in fostering this movement, to be extended later to include all the colleges in the state.

When asked for a vote on the proposition stated by President Farris the audience responded unanimously in favor of the motion.

Following Farris, Speaker Lang spoke eloquently on the necessity of cooperation in making efforts at intercollegiate amiability successful. He was followed by the President of the Duke students.

Mr. Savage, whose jovial remarks received the hearty approval of his audience, apologized in beginning for the small attendance of Duke students, but assured the representatives from the University that they were equally as interested in the move as were local students. First deploring the false pride that existed at both Duke and Carolina, Mr. Savage urged that the efforts of student leaders be directed to encouraging wholesome rivalry between the institutions in the proper way, as well as encouraging the exchange of facilities and mutually beneficial athletic privileges.

Speaking of the relative advantages of the two schools, Mr. Savage was responsible for stating the prize quip of the evening when he said, "You have a good library. So do we, but we have the best-looking co-eds." Later speakers took up this statement, making quite a joke of it before the meeting was concluded. Editor Holder of the Daily Tar Heel gallantly defended local pulchritude, however. He declared that some time he would take Joe Savage and Ray Farris down to the "co-ed shack" and show them our good-looking girls—"all three of them," in fact.

One of the primary objects in calling this joint meeting was was to present to the assembled students a group of seven resolutions relating to the subject under discussion. They were

Accounting Course May Be Given Soon

If a sufficient number of students can be interested, Robert H. Sherrill, assistant professor in the school of commerce, will offer an extension course in accounting, beginning here next week. There will be 15 lectures of two hours each once every week. The meeting time has been set at 7:30 o'clock, but the day of the week on which the classes will be given will be announced later.

Although this will be a non-credit course, it affords an excellent opportunity for townspeople and law students, among others, to learn accounting. Professor Sherrill has been successfully conducting a similar series of classes in the Rocky Mount Y. M. C. A. with an enrollment of 29 pupils.

Persons interested in taking this course should see R. M. Grumman, head of the extension division, in 312 South, or Professor Sherrill in 313 Bingham. The tuition fee for the course is $10.

A Highly Conservative Laborite

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor delivered a conservative, sane address in Bingham hall yesterday afternoon. There was no sentimental bunk, no verbal flag-waving or hysterics in his speech. If Mr. Green and his associates can maintain the calm, level-headed attitude exhibited here yesterday afternoon, repetitions of the Marion and Gastonia tragedies may be averted in the Federation's campaign for unionization of the workers in the South, after all.

The sort of mob hysteria and rabid emotionalism attendant upon many campaigns for organization of labor in the past prejudices the public against all unions. Unfortunately North Carolina has already seen far too much of it from both the manufacturers and the workers. Addresses of the type which Mr. Green has made this week in Greensboro, Durham and Chapel Hill will accomplish much in directing public opinion in favor of unionization. If his commonsense views and pacifistic attitude are adhered to in the actual business of organizing the workers, violence and strife will be minimized and the Federation will secure the confidence of the public.

Very few thoughtful and unbiased men will deny Mr. Green's chief contention in his speech here—that workers should be given equal rights of organization and collective action with employers. The psychological effect of organization upon the workers themselves can hardly fail to exert an influence beneficial to employers and employees alike. When a man has some assurance that his interests will be safeguarded, that he will receive his just share of the profits accruing from his labors, his morale will be high. He will produce the most efficient work of which he is capable.

Many of the mill owners of the South have treated their workers with the utmost consideration, according to their own lights. And in many cases they have voluntarily given their employees numerous benefits. But every man prefers to decide what is and what is not beneficial to himself.

Mr. Green has demonstrated that he is eager to conduct the organization campaign in a calm, rational manner. Much useless waste and strife will be avoided if his fellow organizers adopt the same attitude, and if the manufacturers approach the question in an equally commonsensical and unhysterical manner.

How the Average Student Spends His Time

President Wilkins of Oberlin college has appointed a committee of faculty and students to conduct an investigation into how the students spend their time. This action came as a result of the complaints of many students that they had been flunked unjustly and heartlessly in the recent mid-term examinations. It is charged that the faculty expects the students to spend all their time studying. Faculty members answer that they are the victims of the system of mass education and must flunk a certain per cent of their students.

The results of this survey should prove highly interesting. What is true of students at Oberlin is largely true of students here and elsewhere. Admittedly a man should not spend all of his time studying, but he should spend a certain portion of it pursuing his studies. Far too many college students now are spending practically all of their time on something else and only studying for a few weeks before exams.

While we have no definite proof, we rather suspect that the average collegian's day is divided something like this: classes, three or four hours; meals, two hours; studying from one to three hours (rarely three); sleeping from five to nine hours; and the rest of the day for recreation, cards, bull sessions, and other incidentals. The week-end which allows time for catching up with work, reading, and reflective thought is usually spent in having a "big time"; very few spend a quiet week-end on the Hill.

If the average student would spend as much of his time studying as he does "bulling," going to picture shows, and playing cards, he would easily make passing grades on all subjects and high grades on a few. As is often suggested by professors, chapel speakers, and other advice givers, if the student would consider his school work as a job and devote eight hours a day, including class attendance, to studies, then all would be well; he would have every evening free and plenty of time for recreation and amusement.

Actual figures on how the student spends his time should prove highly valuable. It is the common belief that the college student wastes most of his time. If this should be disproved, then we as well as many others would be greatly surprised.—J. D. McN.

The New "Bumming Legislation"

The Open Forum letter in the February 22 issue of the Tar Heel signed by "A Student" got to the heart of this new bumming "legislation" enacted by our village fathers with the idea of further looking after our morals, health and safety.

The ruling, which aims at attaching further difficulties to lawful bumming, now makes it theoretically impossible to solicit rides or enter an automobile without the motorist first pulling over to the curb at the right hand side of the street. The village fathers thought by this unfair means to eradicate bumming. These gentlemen can rest assured that this or any other unfair, or ridiculous "law" will do nothing more than hamper those of us addicted to the practice, and can and will do nothing toward erasing it.

It is utterly impossible to legislate what people will eat, or drink or the exact manner in which they will dress. Further, we believe, that it is equally impossible to enact by law that a man shall walk in a certain manner, or ride in a certain manner.

We don't think that any student has ever seriously considered running the village's business or town council, but it quite frequently becomes evident that due, in all probability, to the members of the village council being from two to three decades removed from their young manhood and thus no longer able to look at things in a sane youthful way, that they aim at exercising a disciplinary force over the student body which is not rightfully theirs. After all there should be a give and take situation; the townspeople on the one side doing all in their power to make the students' stay in Chapel Hill pleasant to remember, and the students on the other understanding and patronizing in a business way to the best of their ability the townspeople. It appears some times to an unbiased person that despite the villagers depending entirely upon the University plant and its student body for a livelihood that they have little affection or regard for the welfare or comfort of the student body.

Chapel Hill is not such a large metropolis that the practice of bumming would in any manner place in jeopardy the lives or limbs of any of its citizens. The first anti-bumming campaign of the council a year ago and this last gesture of theirs is entirely unjustified, unnecessary, and irritating to both those who bum and those who are merely interested in good feeling between the village and students.—W. Readers' Opinions

Now that the question of electing a new president of the University is before the board of trustees, I think it my privilege to write in behalf of R. D. W. Connor of the history department. I have had experience in this department while at the University, both as a student and as an instructor, and I feel that I know Dr. Connor well enough to know the many fine qualities which he possesses.

There is much to be said in his behalf. He knows the state better than any living man, as is shown by his splendid histories of the state. He is a member of one of our most cultured and prominent families known far and wide for its qualities of leadership and honor. He has brains and is level-headed without one trait of the freak possessed by many college professors. He has the dignity and physique becoming to the head of a great institution of learning with which his ancestors have been connected for several generations back. He knows the students and their problems and will foster their interests. He is a great scholar, yet interested in athletics and all the activities of the students. He commands the respect of all who are acquainted with him and the love and admiration of all who know him. For the sake of the University, I beg you to take some action toward the sponsoring of this great man for the presidency. We want a graduate of the University to receive this signal honor rather than to bestow it to an outsider. Let's recognize the great men that we have produced instead of turning to some other school. Quite often we turn to the president of some other college instead of to a member of our faculty thinking he is better qualified. This is a mistake. Many men are big because of the position they hold, and they command attention accordingly without our being aware of the fact. We don't want this kind of man—we want Dr. Connor who is the kind of man who makes the position big and who will keep Carolina at the head of southern universities. There are many other points in his favor that do not come to mind just now.

In closing let me suggest a straw vote of the campus which will, I believe, show the trustees that the students are for Dr. Connor. A better man could not be chosen.

AN ALUMNUS.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

Whether or not all of us enjoy old romances there is one in the library which every Carolina man should take pleasure in reading. The book is The Heirs of St. Kilda, by John W. Moore. It tells a story of the southern past, deals with the Civil War period without being a war story, and, as the author intimates in the preface, one of its chief purposes is to help bring "vindication against the cruel slanders and caricatures which have been published to the world as a true picture of our inner life as a people."

But what makes it of especial interest to us of Chapel Hill is the fact that it is largely the story of a boy who came here to the University some years before the war. This young fellow is the main character of the book, and several chapters are devoted to his days in Chapel Hill. As the author himself graduated here with the class of '53 that part of the book dealing with the University no doubt gives an accurate and authentic idea of ante bellum activities on the U. N. C. campus.

Both Davie Poplar and Old South are spoken of, and in reading the story one is impressed with the fact that hazing figured largely in the life of the college student of long ago. Open warfare between faculty and student body, such as once existed here, is also played up. We learn that in the old days the University commencement was one of the biggest social events in the state, and that seniors were exalted and revered as the high and mighty men of the campus far more than they are today.

But even more interesting is the fact that into the plot of the story is woven the tale of the pistol duel at Piney Prospect in which Peter Dromgoole was killed by a fellow-student. Moore has changed Dromgoole to Drumgoole, but his book brings down to us an intact version of the death scene of the boy who fought and died on moonlit Piney Prospect so many years ago.

Depiction of old fashioned North Carolina aristocracy is the main theme of the book, and the opening scenes are laid in an ancient eastern Carolina town. Moore calls the town St. Kilda, but certain descriptive passages in the book lead one to believe that the author is writing of New Bern, which is to this very day sometimes spoken of as the Athens of North Carolina.

Dick McGlohon, whose family is closely acquainted with that of Mr. Moore's, tells us some interesting things about the author. He says that as soon as Moore graduated from the University he returned to his home in Powellville to practice law, but upon finding himself to be a poor lawyer he moved out to his Hertford County farm, and there lived the idyllic life of a writer-farmer. It was during this period that he wrote The Heirs of St. Kilda, drawing freely upon the memories of his college days in creating this romance of the Old South.

Sartorial Sway

By Beau Gent

Apropo of the weather we relegate our red flannels to limbo and are persuaded to launch a campaign for sport and summer clothes. Only the imminence of the vernal fever could induce us to relinquish our corner on the spat market. Even if we have no other distinction we have the satisfaction of knowing that there is no other man on the campus who owns three pairs of spats. In that we stand uniquely alone.

Drag out the musty ole swimmin' trunks; unearth and brush off the brilliantly colored sweaters and hideously colored ties 'cause it looks as if summer has come to stay!

Having recently returned from a visit to the snooty hideout of the elite at Palm Beach, we are well qualified to advise on hot weather fashions and are just full of ideas about how to keep cool, comfortable, and collegiate.

We observed that the up-to-date man was brilliantly rather than moderately or conservatively dressed. But while the general trend was a distinct departure from the rigidly observed conventions there were no gross eccentricities to be seen. Summer dress is characterized by insouciant, fashionable things that tend to alleviate the effect of the heat—by color, fit, and style—and yet remain absolutely presentable and correct.

Plain colored flannels, which were much more popular than the striped, were seen in all sorts of pastel shades. The ancient and honorable dark blue jacket and white trousers have passed away, though they are entirely correct, and such combinations as a grayish-blue jacket with flannel trousers of a lighter shade of grayish-blue are being favored.

One of the smartest combinations we have ever seen was worn by a famous amateur boxer at the fashionable winter colony; Olive greenish-gray jacket, with trousers a shade or so lighter, grayish-blue shirt, yellow tie, and the conventional two-tone, black-and-white shoes.

A tweed jacket with flannels will also make a very effective combination for everyday campus wear. However, some of the more important establishments—such as Abercrombie and Fitch, etc—report that there is a great demand for summer clothes in gaberdine and shetlands.

One should remember that the necktie is the balancing factor of your outfit. It should either brighten up a dull scheme or tone down a colorful one. For instance, if you are wearing a dull drab brown suit and a shirt of a neutral shade of brown, you will find that a tie with life and color in it will be much more effective than a dull one. If, on the other hand, you are wearing a suit of rich reddish-brown or chocolate brown, with perhaps a stripe of blue, and your shirt is almost a vivid shade of blue, your tie should be inclined to be dull so that you are not mistaken for a sun-burst.

There are quite a few things that one must be cautious about:

One does not wear trousers that are darker in color than the included jacket.

One does not wear mono-toned shoes—unless they are white which is smartest—with sport or summer outfits.

One never endeavors to harmonize green and blue. It always leads to grief.

And one NEVER wears brown shoes with a gray suit.

"THE LOVE PARADE" HAS GENIUS-BORN QUALITIES

Maurice Chevalier, who has become the greatest European actor to achieve success in American films since Emil Jannings, will be seen and heard in his most gorgeous picture to date when "The Love Parade" opens at the Carolina Theatre today.

"The Love Parade" is something different in all-talking musical film productions, just as Chevalier is a personage entirely different from all other screen types.

In the first place "The Love Parade" was written for the audible screen. It is not a film version of any previous stage production; it was created expressly for the screen and with the idea of the screen's values for amusement uppermost in the minds of the geniuses who created it.

In the second place "The Love Parade" was directed by Ernst Lubitsch, who was named by vote of critics in a poll taken by Film Daily as the foremost director in the movie industry. He has never turned out a failure. One of his greatest pictures was "The Patriot."

Then there are other qualities that carry "The Love Parade" to the fore as probably the greatest musical romance of the New Show World. The libretto or dialog was written by Ernest Vajda and Guy Bolton. Both are veterans of their craft. Bolton has written the books for over 50 operettas and musical comedies.

Ten original songs are featured in "The Love Parade." They were written by Victor Schertzinger, musician and director, a man of many talents. He has written a number of successful songs, one of them being "Marcheta," one of the most successful best-selling popular songs of all times.

Clifford Grey who wrote the lyrics for "The Love Parade" was the lyricist for Ziegfeld's "Sally," "Three Musketeers" and for "Hit the Deck."

Heading the supporting cast of the picture is Jeanette MacDonald, lovely Philadelphia girl who made a rapid climb in musical comedy through two or three years of hard work abetted by a personal charm and beauty that just wouldn't allow her to stay in obscurity. This is her first all-talking production. She made such a great hit in it that Paramount immediately signed her on a contract for other films. She has been described as "the girl with the red-gold hair and sea-green eyes." She possesses a lovely soprano voice, has an exquisite figure and a personage so generously endowed with those other qualities.

In all "The Love Parade" is the farthest point upward in the rapid climb of Paramount's New Show World productions. People in New York paid $11 a seat to see it when it opened at the Criterion. And it must have been worth it, for critics the next day used 129 "rave" adjectives in making their newspaper reports on this great musical romance smash.

Varsity Boxers Prepare To Defend Conference Title In Charlottesville Tomorrow

Tar Heels Again Rated as Favorites as Veterans Prepare For Action; Vaughan Out.

The Tar Heel varsity boxers yesterday had their last hard workout before leaving for the Southern Conference tournament which starts tomorrow in Charlottesville. The Carolina fighters, last year's conference champions, will enter the tournament without the services of Evan Vaughan, veteran bantam. The rest of the lineup is in shape, and will, along with Florida, rule favorites to cop the title. The team leaves today for Charlottesville.

The Tar Heels are taking some first-class fighters to invade Virginia, with Captain Allen, conference champion and undefeated middleweight; John Warren, hard-hitting light heavy; Obie Davis, scrappy welter; and Noah Goodridge, brilliant lightweight.

Captain Allen is in top form, and is expected to repeat in winning the title in his weight. John Warren has shown real ability all this year, having won all of his conference fights except a close decision to Gentry of Virginia, having won knockouts from Florida and Duke.

Obie Davis went several fast and hard rounds in the ring yesterday, and is doped to meet Carper of Duke in the final round of the tournament. In the lightweight division Carolina is well represented by Noah Goodridge, one of the smartest boxers in the south. Goodridge has lost only one fight, a close decision to Captain O'Connell of Florida.

Another boy who was looking good yesterday is Bill Koenig, Coach Rowe's giant heavy. Koenig got off to a rather slow start this season, as he was a newcomer in the racket, but under the tutelage of Coach Crayton Rowe, he has improved rapidly, and he is expected to give his opponents trouble in the tournament.

Harry Sheffield, scrappy little featherweight, is in top-season form, and will carry the hopes of Tarheelia with him when he steps in the ring tomorrow in Charlottesville. Sheffield has an impressive record, having lost but two conference battles.

WARREN-TERRIS TO EXCHANGE "SOCKS"

According to report, plans are being made to have Ad Warren, former Carolina heavy and captain and now an outstanding North Carolina heavyweight aspirant, fight Big Sid Terris, another outstanding heavy, in Wilson on March 20.

Attempts have been made before to match Warren and Terris but these plans have heretofore failed to materialize. When Terris was ready Warren was not, and vice versa.

Should the present plans go through, there ought to be a real fight in Wilson next month, as both men are big and both are fast and can hit.

CAROLINA HAS SIX FOOT BASKET TEAM

Carolina's "dark horses" will probably present one of the tallest teams in the south at the annual southern sournament in Atlanta this week-end. Edwards, center, is 6 feet 6. Dameron, forward, is 6 feet 4½. Marpet, guard, is 6 feet 2. Neiman, forward, and Brown, guard, are both six-footers.

The size of fish taken from the Great Lakes has been limited by treaty. Another influence that has a like effect is called veracity.

BIG BLUE TEAM ALL SET TO GO

Basketeers Through Practice for Southern Conference Tournament; Leave Today.

The Tar Heel quintet finished practice yesterday in preparation for its first game in the Southern Conference tournament with Georgia Friday night in Atlanta.

Practice consisted mainly in solving the Georgia plays and in perfecting their own. The boys all worked well in practice, and if that is any sign, then it bodes ill for the Bull Dogs.

Ten men have been selected by Coach Ashmore to make the trip. They are: Neiman, Greene, Hutchinson and Cleland, forwards; Marpet, Alexander, Brown and Choate, guards; and Dameron and Edwards, centers.

If Carolina should get by the Georgia game, they will probably play Alabama, seeded number one on the strength of an undefeated conference record with ten wins.

For the first time in eight years, the Tar Heels will enter the tournament as dark horses, but the White Phantoms have been playing brilliant ball in their last few games, and they are sure to make a good showing in Atlanta.

The men that will probably start the Georgia game are: Neiman and Greene, forwards; Dameron, center; and Marpet and Alexander, guards. Brown and Edwards will probably see plenty of action.

Frosh Preparing For Conference Meet Here

Candidates for the four freshman events in the Southern Conference indoor meet to be held here on March 8 are working hard in preparation for the meet. The freshman events are 60-yard high hurdles, 60-yard dash, ¾-mile run and mile relay. Most promising to date of the high hurdle candidates are C. G. Stafford, Ellis Dudley and Archie Davis. In the dash the work of Geiger, Drane and Dudley has been most impressive. For the ¾-mile run the entries will probably be picked from the following: Jensen, Hubbard, Cordle, Zelly and Jones. Among the most likely candidates for the mile relay team are Drane, Watkins, Brock, Evans, Stafford and Mitcham.

If teamwork counts for anything in the relay, the records of the candidates for this event should be a source of encouragement, for two of the candidates, Mitcham and Evans, were running mates in the quarter-mile for Charlotte high school last year, while Watkins, Brock and Drane were members of the McCallie mile relay team which won the event in the southern prep school meet held here last year.

It is expected that one of the features of the freshman division will be the race in the ¾-mile run between Clarence Jensen, University freshman, and Lauck, Virginia freshman. Lauck won both the 880-yard and mile run in the recent Virginia invitation meet; Jensen placed second in the mile and third in the 880-yard run. Bray, Duke freshman, who placed fourth in the mile, will also be expected to furnish competition for these two. Trials will be held the latter part of this week to determine who will enter the several events.

University of Maryland's track team will participate in eight outdoor meets this spring.

SPORT RAMBLES

Roulhac Hamilton

Does a football player have a right to participate in some winter sport which prevents his taking part in winter football practice? Has a football coach the right to demand that a man playing on some other team quit so that he will be able to play football out of season. These questions are becoming an issue that threatens to assume alarming proportions.

In answering the two questions there are several others that must be taken into consideration. Admit that football is Carolina's most important and popular sport. The question then arises as to how much more important it is than any other sport. Is it so important that it so completely overshadows the whole group of winter sports that they must sacrifice their best interests in order that football may prosper? In our opinion the answer is a most emphatic no. But, purely for the sake of argument, let us admit that it is. Then we may ask ourselves if it is inevitable that a player of great ability will suffer a loss of that ability because he is unable to participate in winter practice? Or, if a player who has very little prospects of amounting to much on the gridiron, but who is very valuable—possibly very necessary—to some other team should be ordered to report to the football field rather than the Tin Can. Again, our answer to these questions is no. And, lastly, is it more important that the man play football, where he is of little use, than to participate in some sport where he may be invaluable. Our answer to this is also no.

Yet such a situation exists at Carolina. We know definitely that several basketball players and at least one wrestler have been informed that they could either report for winter football practice or give up all hope of ever playing football at Carolina.

This seems to us a most unfair situation—unfair to the player, to the University, to the other coaches and teams, and even to the football team itself. It denies to the player his right of playing on some particular team, no matter how valuable he may be to that team. Conceivably, it may cause the loss of some good players to the football team. It will, if carried far enough, deny to the University her chances to have winning teams in all sports. It denies to the coaches the availability of material he is entitled to and that may be necessary to the success of his team. The student body and the alumni expect winning teams and hold the coaches responsible for their development. That the coaches are here to develop that kind of team we admit. But to develop any kind of team he must have material and if the material he has is taken away from him we can't see how he is going to turn out good teams.

It is not the policy of this column to dispute the policies of any coach. We want to be behind them all and we want them to be successful, but we don't want one to get that way at the expense of one or two others. We seriously question the right of any coach to coerce another's man into playing football out of season. He is taking for his own gain something that belongs to another and is depriving the coach and the team of whatever part of their chance for success that that particular man represents.

AYCOCK CAMPUS CHAMPS AFTER DEFEATING D.K.E.

Intramural Basketball Crown Rests With Non-Frat Men.

With Hooks and Sherrill leading the attack, Aycock clinched the campus basketball championship by defeating D. K. E. 15 to 9 last night in the Tin Can.

The game was fast from the start with Aycock holding the lead the whole game. D. K. E. rallied in the third quarter and reduced Aycock's lead to five points.

McAlister starred for D. K. E., scoring six of his team's nine points.

Both teams were in good form and played excellent basketball, but the Aycock quintet was better organized and presented a smoother working combination than did the D. K. E. five.

This game ends the hardest season of intramural basketball ever played at the University, and one in which a great interest has been shown. An excellent spirit of sportsmanship has been displayed by all the teams entered.

The lineup:

D. K. E. (9)	Aycock (15)
Fenner	Hooks (6)
Lassiter	Sherrill (4)
Willis (2)	Kindell (3)
Dunn	Howe
Craig	Potter (2)

Substitutions: for D. K. E.—McAlister (6), Davis, Laster (1); for Aycock—King.

Baby Mitmen Meet V. P. I. Tonight

The boxing meet between the North Carolina and V. P. I. freshmen carded for Saturday night has been moved up two days and will be run off in the Tin Can here tonight at 8:30.

The change was announced yesterday by Graduate Manager C. T. Woollen and was made to avoid conflict with the Southern Conference boxing tournament at Charlottesville, which several of the freshman boxers wish to attend.

The meet will end the season for the Tar Baby mitmen, and such stars as Levinson and Landis are expected to draw a goodly crowd.

Faculty Reception Gala Co-Ed Affair

In a recent issue of the Tar Heel, a notice appeared inviting all the faculty members and their wives to a reception to be given by the co-eds tomorrow evening from 8:30 until 11 o'clock.

The notice seemed to give somewhat of an indifferent attitude on the part of the co-eds. This was not the attitude meant to have been taken, by any means. Every co-ed looks forward to this with honor and pleasure. They all class this as one of the biggest honors paid them throughout the year.

This article expresses the sincere wish of every co-ed and they are all looking forward with great pleasure to the reception and the presence of every faculty member and his wife.

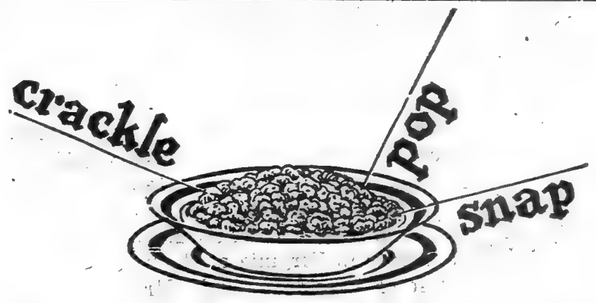
WRESTLERS CLOSE SEASON MONDAY

Varsity Preparing for Duke Meet; Tournament March 7 and 8.

With only one more meet before the southern tournament at V. M. I. March 7 and 8, the Tar Heel varsity wrestlers are working hard to get ready for the match with Duke here Monday night.

Old man education has robbed the Tar Heels of two more wrestlers, in Cowper and Moore, who are now off on co-op work. These men, mainstays of the team, are keeping in shape, and may be able to come back for the meet Monday night. George Thompson, veteran heavy, who has been all this year kept from wrestling because of being off on co-op work, is now back on the Hill, but will not be able to wrestle on account of winter football. This leaves the matmen minus a heavy as Coach Chuck Quinlan had been counting on Thompson all along. Thompson has had two years experience as a heavyweight wrestler.



The meet with Duke in the Tin Can Monday should be very tight, as both teams have had a rather up-and-down season. The Tar Heels, however, have a somewhat better conference record, having won both their conference meets, one from V. P. I. and one from State, while Duke has lost to Washington and Lee. Washington and Lee, however has a strong team. At any rate an entertaining evening is expected.

The freshmen will end their season when they meet State in the Tin Can this afternoon at 3:30. The Tar Babies won from the Raleigh team 25-15 earlier in the season. The regular lineup will wrestle. The lineup includes: Parker or Deitz, 115 pounds; Seligson, 125 pounds; Winstead, 135 pounds; Conklin, 145 pounds; Greer or Bradley, 155 pounds; Captain Idol, 165 pounds; Bradley or Greer, 175 pounds; and Auman, unlimited.

University Press Adds Six New Publications To List

Two Books Deal With Problems And Institutions in North Carolina; Others in Varied Nature.

(By E. C. Daniel, Jr.)

"Chapel Hill announces six new books for spring 1930" is the heading of a recent announcement issued by the University Press. As a matter of fact, two of these publications, Materials for the Life of Shakespeare and The Seventeenth Century Sheriff, were brought over from the fall list of Press books. The first of these is now ready for sale, while the latter volume is expected to be on hand by April 1.

Included in the new group are two books which are of particular local interest since they are concerned directly with numerous problems and institutions in North Carolina alone. These are The Democratic Party in North Carolina by Clarence Clifford Norton and North Carolina: Economic and Social by Samuel Huntington Hobbs, Jr., of the rural social economics department of the University.

Mr. Norton, who is a former student of several local faculty members, has written in his book "an account covering one of the most important periods in our history—1835-1861—during which were developed the issues culminating in the Civil War. It discloses also the origin and progression of much party machinery familiar to us today." Thus The Democratic Party in North Carolina is described by the officials of the Press.

Dwelling at some length upon almost every phase of economic and social activity and their related problems, Mr. Hobbs offers "a thorough survey of the state, based on the author's close study of it for 15 years and on official statistical data."

North Carolina: Economic and Social will be issued around May 30, while Mr. Norton's volume is scheduled to appear April 15.

Other books on the new list are Some Southern Cotton Mill Workers and Their Villages by Jennings J. Rhyne, a study made under the auspices of the institute for research in social science and under the direction of Dr. Howard W. Odum, and Released, a group of light lyrics by Anne Blackwell Payne.

The Press also recommends a number of its recent publications which are enjoying a great amount of popularity, judging both by the volume of sales and the publicity which they have received in the literary press of the nation. Heading this list is The Virginia Plutarch by Philip Alexander Bruce, a two-volume set of 36 biographical sketches by a Virginian who manages to account therein "not only for Virginia's greatness, but for the greatness of America."

The most recent release of the Press, The Life of Miranda by William Spence Robertson, is also recommended for its authentic historical value as well as for its remarkable store of romance and adventure.

It is expected by the Press that The American Scholar by Norman Foerster of the University faculty will also have an increase in popularity, especially since the book and its author have so recently been involved in numerous discussions of the "humanistic" point of view as applied to scholarship. This volume, therefore, is included in the list as worthy of consideration.

The last book in the list of former publications is the popular work of John B. Sale, The Tree Named John. This collection of Southern Negro folklore tales was proclaimed upon its appearance as the most realistic and fascinating book of its type ever published. It has set a record in sales and publicity surpassing that of any previous publication of the Press of similar character.

Mrs. Claire Martin Dead

Funeral services will be conducted by Dr. C. E. Rozzelle at the Methodist church this afternoon at 3:30 for Mrs. Claire Martin, mother of Mrs. Frank Page of Chapel Hill. Interment will be made in the local cemetery.

Hill Presents Paper

At the mathematics seminar yesterday afternoon M. A. Hill, instructor in mathematics presented a paper on the Regression Method of the Correlation Theory. This was the first of two papers he is presenting. The second paper, "The Normal Frequency Method of Study" will be presented at the meeting of the seminar next week.

Decides Kaiser Did Not Start War; Goes To Apologize To Him

New York, Feb. 26.—(IP)—Convinced after 12 years of study that the former Kaiser was not responsible for the World War, Poultney Bigelow, an author, and former close friend of the German emperor, will sail for Holland March 7, to apoligize to William II.

Bigelow, now 75 years old, will be accompanied by his wife on the pilgrimage to Doorn, he said. He added:

"The kaiser has been subjected to many unjust accusations since his troops crossed the Belgium border. Like many others during the war, I accepted as true these accusations framed for war purposes. I am convinced by recently released documents that Kaiser Wilhelm, II, did his best to keep peace and that European powers were eagerly awaiting any war.

"I will apologize to the Kaiser for having accepted these tales about him that then sounded so plausible."

Miss Vest To Teach School Founded By Hoover And His Wife

A Kentucky mountaineer, who comes from a county that can't boast an inch of railroad and few passable highways, in a few days will open a school in the primeval forests along the Rapidan river in Virginia at the request of President and Mrs. Hoover.

This mountaineer is Miss Christine Vest, a graduate of Berea College, Berea, Ky. She was chosen by the Hoovers from a host of applicants.

The Hoovers and friends built the one-room school and community center when they discovered while on their fishing trips to President Hoover's camp, that their neighbors, the mountaineers, could neither read nor write and that there never had been a school in the community. And these were pure blooded Americans living within 100 miles of the nation's capital.

prepared by John Lang and approved by a joint committee of the two societies. The resolutions were: (1) That meetings of the faculty and student leaders of the two universities be continued as permanent semi-annual occasions; (2) That the student leaders and publications direct the competetive energy into wholesome rivalry; (3) That the honored and learned societies share in appropriate inter-university occasions; (4) That the student publications announce the coming of distinguished speakers of interest and value to both institutions; (5) That the literary societies have alternate joint meetings at least once a year; (6) That professors of each university be invited to take part in some occasion or meeting at the other university; and (7) That the library facilities of each university be available for joint use of the students of the two universities.

All of these resolutions were unanimously passed upon by the assembly, following considerable discussion upon each one by representatives of both schools, no one of which spoke unfavorably. Noteworthy among the remarks of commendation and advice were these: Amos Johnson, a former Duke student, now studying medicine here, declared that, coming from the same state, the students of both schools should have common interests, and in view of that fact there should be no difficulty in promoting better relations; Mr. Stearns from Duke: "Let us change animosity to reciprocity"; Mayne Allbright of Carolina asserted that fraternal and honorary orders are best fitted to carry out the ideas stated at the meeting, by reason of their particular qualifications in membership and otherwise; Editors Holder and Lippard of the Carolina and Duke newspaper, respectively, pledged the support of their publications in this movement; Elwin Dungan, Tar Heel columnist, "hit the sawdust trail" and swore "to write no more cracks at Duke" in his "so-called" column; and Representative James of the Phi Assembly declared that February 26 would go down as a memorable date in the joint history of Duke University and the University of North Carolina.

Dean F. F. Bradshaw of Caroline was the only faculty member to speak on this occasion. He recalled the days when the debating fraternities of the two institutions had held joint initiations, and offered examples of interscholastic relations in other universities. He approved of the idea of a Duke-Carolina debate, as advocated previously.

A well-known news gathering service wrote to a member of the faculty that "the University is getting more space on our wires than all the other institutions in North Carolina put together and more than any institution similarly situated in the south."

Bob Madry is well known by all state newspapers, and, in fact, in most of the larger papers of the South. He was a graduate of the University in 1918, organizing the news bureau in the same year. Serving for a year as the first University correspondent for all papers, handling publicity for the S.A.T.C., and holding the multifold job of director, typist, reporter, and office boy for the University news bureau, he won no small distinction in the community. However, in the following year he resigned to enter the school of journalism at Columbia University.

Having completed his course in one year, he became managing editor of a trade journal in New York. While on a pleasure trip to Europe in the summer of 1920, he became impressed with the glamor of Paris as a center of notables from everywhere. Consequently he obtained for himself a job on the Paris edition of the New York Herald. His two years as a reporter on this paper afforded him the opportunity of meeting many prominent travelers and encountering many interesting experiences. Two years were enough, however, and after working on the New York Herald—this time in New York—for a year and a half, he again found his way back to the University of North Carolina.

Thus since 1923 he has been winning praise for himself as director of the University news bureau. The football season afforded him the opportunity of displaying his eastern North Carolina hospitality. Visiting sports editors and reporters found the press-box in the stadium complete with every requisite and convenience they could wish for. So thorough were his data sheets and so capable was the handling of the games through his staff, that the new office of publicity director on the mythical all-state team was created especially for him.

daughter was unable to find work; besides, she was needed at home to take care of her parents. These people were intelligent and, when in good health, of ordinary vigor and industry. Fortune was against them; unemployment and disease had driven them to straits of desperation about which the person in normal circumstances is in ignorance.

The welfare director reports other cases with similar features. Some of the people he encounters in his work are suffering even greater hardships, living in miserable shacks and wretched from inadequate clothing and no food. There is no need for soft sentiment, nor is it the time for sociological theorizing about birth control and heredity or about unemployment having its economic effect in dire poverty. Philanthropy of a sane and reasonable sort is needed. Is the student body going to respond?

NIGHT SESSIONS OF LOCAL COURT IN OLD PICKWICK

Manager Carolina Theatre Permits Village To Use Building For Court Room.

(By John Patric)

Visitors to the night sessions of Chapel Hill's recorder court, now being held in the old Pickwick theatre building, recall days of yore when order and dignity were not so well maintained as now.

It was the custom to attend the old Pickwick carrying a bag of peanuts (sold in a stand nearby) which were cracked and eaten during the performance with much gusto and noise. Smoking, though against the rules, was winked at, and often the air became so thick that the picture was dimmed almost beyond recognition. Upon opening the doors, passers-by on Franklin street sometimes thought the place to be afire.

Choice seats in the old Pickwick were at the rear, from where missiles in various shapes could be thrown upon those in front without any danger of reciprocity. The audience often sang raucously to the accompaniment of organ music furnished by the management. Women were infrequent visitors, particularly women who did not care to hear volleys of obscene language and suggestive comments during the exhibition of a picture.

Crowds now attending sessions of the recorder's court are often as large as those of bygone days, but the difference in the behavior of the audience is profound. The ticket-seller's booth is empty, dusty, and through many a stirring drama of real life new audiences sit in peace and quiet. Undue noise and mirth are met with prompt action by the court officials. Negroes are allowed—even welcomed—on one side of the house, for both the prosecutor and the judge believe that the colored folk should know exactly what happens when negroes go astray.

The city of Chapel Hill was given the use of the theatre for a courtroom without rental, when manager E. Carrington Smith of the Carolina theatre, whose company pays rent on the building, learned that the old court room on the second floor of the city hall was pitifully inadequate in size, was in danger of collapsing under the great weight it sometimes held, and, moreover, was not in keeping with the dignity of judicial procedure.

Smith, upon learning that the building of a new courtroom was contemplated, believed that taxes in the village were high enough, and pointed out that his company had always welcomed the use of the Pickwick without charge for public gatherings, speeches and the like. Both Smith and Judge Hinshaw are of the opinion that a knowledge of court procedure is a part of a modern college education, and this opinion is being borne out by the increasing numbers of students who are attending the sessions.

MAKE SURVEY FOR NEGRO HOSPITALS

Dr. H. L. Harris of Chicago, who is connected with the medical department of the Rosenwald Fund, and Lt. Lawrence A. Oxley, director of the division of negro work in the North Carolina state board of charities and public welfare, visited the University yesterday to confer with members of the department of sociology.

The Chicago physician is making an extended tour of North and South Carolina, accompanied by Lt. Oxley, in order to survey facilities in the two states for the establishment of negro hospitals, to be finished either wholly or in part by money from the Rosenwald Fund.

From here they are going to Durham and from there they intend to proceed to other towns in the eastern section of the state.

CHASE GOES TO HEAD BIG PLANT

University Of Illinois Has Property Valued At $23,641,383; Enrollment Above 14,000.

Urbana-Champaign, Ill., Feb. 27.—(Special)—What kind of an institution is the University of Illinois to which President Harry Woodburn Chase of the University of North Carolina will go as chief executive during the summer?

How old is it? and how large? What does the state of Illinois spend annually on its support?

To quote a recent writer, "the University of Illinois is a vast laboratory of science and citizenship built by and for the people of Illinois. It is primarily that, and last year it spent more than seven and a quarter millions of dollars on the children of the people of Illinois and on research and investigational work."

Sixty-two years ago this school was known as the Illinois Industrial University, opening with an enrollment of 50 students, and with a faculty of three.

Today the University of Illinois has a net enrollment of the year of more than 14,000 resident students, approximately 1200 teachers, a thousand clerks, stenographers, and laborers, "and more world contacts growing out of the solution of practical problems of existence than any other school in this country. It is known throughout the world for its discoveries."

The net worth of the institution, in lands and buildings, as based on the original costs of the buildings, is $23,641,383. All of the above has come from state funds with the exception of approximately two and a half millions which have been acquired from funds representing gifts.

Since its establishment, the University of Illinois has graduated more than 32,000 students and is continuing this educational work at the rate of 1,800 or more a year. In June, 1929, 1,973 wearers of the orange and blue—the college colors—received their sheepskins.

The physical plant of the University comprises 75 major buildings, a campus proper of 483 acres, as well as an adjoining farm of 1,127 acres and agricultural experimental farms of 657 acres.

PLAYMAKERS ARE BACK FROM TOUR

One-Act Plays Well Received By Audiences In Southern Cities.

The Carolina Playmakers returned Wednesday night from a successful two-weeks tour of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. During the trip they appeared in many of the principal cities and towns throughout these states.

The bill of plays presented included "The No 'Count Boy," a negro comedy by Paul Green; "Job's Kinfolks" and "Black Water," both by Loretto Carroll Bailey; and "Magnolia's Man," a mountain comedy by Gertrude Wilson Coffin.

The Playmakers appeared before several capacity houses. While in Albemarle, where they played under the auspices of Tom Johnson, newspaper man and former stage manager of the Playmakers, it was necessary to turn away many at the door.

At Greenville, S. C., Frederick Koch and Hubert Heffner, the directors of the organization, attended a party where they spent the evening in the company of Sherwood Anderson, the well-known author, who is in Greenville gathering information on the mill situation. In Wilmington, N. C., the whole company attended an oyster roast given by the Thalian Association, the little theatre group of that city, at the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Sprunt.

As a special feature of the South Carolina Teachers Association convention at Allendale the Playmakers presented their plays at the consolidated school. In the afternoon an impromptu entertainment was given for the teachers by various members of the company. Professor Koch made a brief address on the edu-

Hinshaw Dismisses Lacock Damage Suit

A week ago a new Chevrolet owned by G. S. Baldwin, and a new Ford owned by Barney W. Lacock, collided at the intersection of Hillsboro street and Rosemary lane, damaging both cars considerably.

Wednesday evening Judge C. P. Hinshaw of the Chapel Hill recorder's court heard a criminal action, instituted by Lacock, local shoe repairman, driver of the Ford, in which Lacock alleged that Baldwin, by driving in a dangerous and reckless manner contrary to law, had damaged his, Lacock's car to the amount of nearly $200. Several witnesses summoned by Baldwin's attorney tended to bear out the defendant's assertion that Lacock's car, rather than Baldwin's, had been driven at an excessive speed and in a negligent manner, and, although John R. P. Carawan, who was serving as prosecutor when B. D. Sawyer expressed a wish to be relieved because of friendliness for the defendant, pointed out the right of way to have been legally Lacock's.

Judge Hinshaw dismissed the case.

Orange County Poor Fund Up To Thirty-Five Dollars Today

The total of the donations received for the "Campus Relief Fund for Orange County Poor" is mounting steadily upward. There were a number of contributions yesterday amounting to $10.15 and bringing the amount given to the fund to a total of $33.05. The following were contributors Thursday: C. W. Constantine, Jack Dungan, Dr. S. A. Emery, Ray Farris, Martha W. Fenn, Lewis M. McKee, Peter B. Ruffin, F. L. Walston, and A. Parrish.

The names of all contributing over 40 cents (the price of a meal or a movie) will be published in the Tar Heel. Contributions are to be mailed to Dr. L. M. Brooks, P. O. Box 747, or the Alumni building, mailed directly to the "Campus Relief Fund for Orange County Poor," Daily Tar Heel office, or turned over personally to one of the members of the committee in charge of the fund. The committee is composed of Dr. L. M. Brooks, Louis Graves, Harry F. Comer, Ellis Fysal and Robert Hodges.

One example of the extreme cases of poverty encountered by George Lawrence, director of welfare work in Orange county, is offered by a family in a sparsely settled section of Orange county from which he has received several appeals for aid. This family is composed of a widow, her five children, her aged and totally decrepit father, and her feeble-minded sister, all of whom the widow has been attempting to support since last fall by "taking in washing." By working hard and getting all the "washing" to be done for two and three miles around she was able to keep them from starvation at least, but recently, through the general hard times and unemployment prevalent, the amount of clothes to be washed had fallen off, and she had had very little to do.

When Mr. Lawrence discovered this family he found them all living in a two-room shack of wretched clapboards, practically devoid of bedding and furniture. Also, there were the sister's three children to be cared for. The welfare director succeeded in placing these three children and was able to give the family a little money for provisions. Following is an appeal received from the widow recently:

"Dear Sir

"I am now writing to you agin asking you to help me some as I am in need of help and we all are sick and have had a bad time but are some better and have not been able to do much washing and my father is here and thire is nuthing the children can do now and I would

76 HIGH SCHOOLS IN LATIN CONTEST

Over Thousand Students To Take Part In Sixth Annual Examination Today.

Seventy-six high schools, represented by 1245 students, will take part in the sixth annual Latin contest for North Carolina high schools which will be held in participating high schools throughout the state, it was announced yesterday by E. R. Rankin, secretary of the contest.

The standard Latin test, which was prepared by members of the Latin department of the University, has been forwarded to the officials of all participating schools. Each school will give the test on Friday and will then send its best three papers to the University.

Since the Latin contest was inaugurated five years ago, the award of first place has been won by schools as follows: 1925, Charlotte high school; 1926, Lillington high school; 1927, Wilson high school; 1928, Roxboro high school; and 1929, Durham high school.

The list of high schools which will take part in the Latin contest on Friday follows:

ENGINEERS' BALL THIS EVENING AT THE CAROLINA INN

Novel Lighting Arrangement Planned For Fourth Annual Affair.

In spite of the ever increasing proximity of exams, the social activities of the Hill are in no way affected as is proved by the presence of the engineers' ball tonight and the Grail dance tomorrow night.

This is the fourth of the annual balls given by the combined personnel of the three engineering societies. This group is composed of the William Cain branch of the American Society of Civil Engineers, the local branch of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and the University branch of Mechanical Engineers.

The dance committee is composed of J. J. Alexander, W. B. White, Dave Nims, E. R. Davis, J. B. Pittant, Charles Waddell, Chuck Erickson, Charles West, and J. P. Scurlock. Tickets may be procured by members of the three societies from any member of this committee.

Some variety will be had in the location of the dance in that it will be held in the ballroom of the Carolina Inn instead of the customary place, the gymnasium. Novel decorations have been planned for the ballroom, and the engineers are expecting to give the best dance that has been given by them since their dances were made an annual affair.

Dean Braune of the engineering school, with Mrs. Braune, will head the list of chaperones. The remaining chaperones will be Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Lear, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Hoefer, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Baity and Mr. and Mrs. Trimble.

"Ty" Sawyer and his Carolina Buccaneers will furnish the music for the engineers. This local orchestra has had quite a bit of publicity lately, and is considered to be one of the best in the state.

Formal dress is required of those attending.

U. SYMPHONY TO SOUTHERN PINES

Will Appear In Concert In Church Of Wide Fellowship Sunday Night.

The University symphony orchestra will appear in concert next Sunday night at Southern Pines as one of the season attractions of the weekly platform hour given at the Church of Wide Fellowship.

The entire group will be 45 strong. Professor T. Smith McCorkle will direct the orchestra, and Mrs. E. D. Strong will serve as concertmeister.

The party is expecting to leave here Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in cars, and will be entertained at dinner before the concert.

Mr. McCorkle has arranged the following program: "Slavonic Dance," by Dvorak, "Surprise Symphony" (Opus No. 6, G Major) by Haydn, "Hear Ye Israel" from "The Elijah" by Mendelssohn (to be sung by Mrs. Trott), "Ballet Music" from the "Bartered Bride" by Smetana," "Funeral March of a Marionette" by Gounod, and "Triumphal March of the Boyards" by Halvorsen.

Tar Heel Topics

Only seven more class days until exams. Wotta life, wotta life!

The Playmakers were "accorded high praise" on the annual southern tour, from which they returned yesterday. When the Playmakers are not "accorded high praise," that will be news.

The Kentucky state senate "got a laugh out of a chain store tax bill" sent to that body after passage in the house. Wouldn't be surprised if the senatorial laugh fest didn't produce quite a few chuckles among the chain store magnates themselves.

There are 1888 resident students enrolled at N. C. C. W. this term. And, judging from the number of Tar Heels who hie themselves Greensboro-ward every week and the number of letters with N. C. post marks received at the local postoffice, every one of 'em has at least three Carolina men on the string.

Optional Attendance Before The Court

Within the next few days the undergraduate faculty will decide whether optional attendance for juniors and seniors shall be abolished. According to several members of the faculty, the upperclassmen have abused the privileges extended to them by optional attendance during the two years that it has been in existence here.

In Wednesday's issue of the Tar Heel, an interested faculty member suggested a substitute plan which, he declared, would "take care of both the ambitious and unambitious student." His plan is that: "1. Regular class attendance be required of all students until they have succeeded in passing all of the freshman and sophomore courses.

"2. The privilege of optional attendance be extended to all juniors and seniors who have met the requirements of paragraph 1 and who have made the grade of C or better on three or more full college courses for the quarter immediately preceding.

"3. Optional attendance privileges be denied to any junior or senior who fails to maintain an average of C until such time as he may be able to qualify."

Under the present system, regular attendance is required on all freshman and sophomore courses. The faculty must decide whether optional attendance for juniors and seniors has resulted in a lower standard of work, and whether its negative influences, if any, over-balance its propensities for creation of student initiative and its beneficial psychological effects upon serious-minded undergraduates. Academic freedom, an absence of dull routine and initiative-destroying scholastic regulations, stimulates the mind of the serious student and impels him to thoughtful study and diligent research will enable him to formulate opinions of his own.

Optional attendance should not be abolished unless it has been unquestionably demonstrated that it is a failure here. Careful consideration should be given to the effect that it has had upon grades and upon the attitude of the undergraduate toward his courses. A study of honor role statistics, conducted by one of the University administrative officials during the past several days, reveals that the percentage of juniors and seniors on the honor role during the last seven scholastic years is as follows:

Fall Quarter

1924-25	16.4%
1925-26	14.9%
1926-27	17.7%
1927-28	14.8%
1928-29	14.1%
1929-30	15.8%

Winter Quarter

1923-24	16.1%
1924-25	18.8%
1925-26	17.6%
1926-27	18.8%
1927-28	18.8%
1928-29	14.1%

The optional attendance plan went into effect during the spring quarter of the college year 1926-27. Therefore these statistics show that optional attendance has had no appreciable effect upon the percentage of students receiving grades which entitle them to a place on the honor roll. The percentage on the honor roll for the winter quarter of 1927-28, the first year of optional attendance, was exactly the same as that for the preceding winter quarter, when compulsory attendance was in force. It is true that the honor roll for the winter quarter of last year represented a decline, but that is more than offset by the increase represented by the honor roll for last quarter in comparison to the preceding fall quarters. Considering the entire period of seven years, optional attendance has not resulted in a decline in the percentage of juniors and seniors making the honor role.

The faculty must decide for themselves whether optional attendance is desirable, of course. But the undergraduates, particularly the more thoughtful element, are in favor of it, practically unanimously. And it is not unwillingness to attend classes regularly or a lack of industry that is responsible for their partiality to optional attendance. They simply realize that optional attendance is a contributory factor in the development of the ideal university, where the student will learn to think for himself rather than gather a sparse collection of speedily forgotten facts.

We hope that no change will be made in the present system of optional attendance, but if the faculty deem a change necessary, the plan suggested in Wednesday's Tar Heel should be substituted for it.

This Tuition Business

For a number of years the University of North Carolina has exacted tuition fees from students in all but one branch, the School of Education. Under the existing system, students enrolled in that school are exempted from tuition charges upon condition that they teach for two years in North Carolina within three years after graduation. Since the very first year of its inauguration several evils have accompanied the system.

Members of the School of Education are continually laboring with students who are taking a teacher's course, but who are not interested in the teaching profession. If this be the case, why is it that they are not enrolled in other branches of the University? Simply because they wish to avoid paying tuition charges. Some are not financially able to pay them, but many do have the money and take advantage of this free tuition offer, in order to have more funds available for other purposes. Due to the flexibleness of our curricula, a student can enroll in the School of Education and still take nearly all of his work in some other college of the University. A considerable number take advantage of this and transfer to some other course after having been in the School of Education for one, two, or three years. This evil we believe to be one which demands official attention.

We believe that the University should either give all students free tuition, or should exact such a fee from all of them. Several large state universities in the middle and far West give free tuition to native students. Were this the case here, there would be nothing to encourage students to enroll in a branch of the University, the curriculum of which dealt with things that they had little interest in. On the other hand, a system making all students pay the tuition fee would accomplish the same end.

At present there is quite a number of the School of Education enrollment who are not at all interested in the teaching profession, but who will teach for two years after graduation in order to avoid paying tuition charges. After one has signed teachers' notes this is by far the easiest way out. The evil in this connection is that we are forcing North Carolina schoolchildren to study under teachers who are merely "hanging on" for two years, and who throughout the two year period are constantly thinking of the business which they contemplate entering upon its expiration. From the standpoint of the state, it would be much cheaper to abolish the present system of free tuition for those who will promise to teach for two years, establishing substantial loan funds in its stead.

The original idea in exempting Education students from tuition charges is a sound one, but the original purpose has been thwarted. Several years ago officials of the University decided that it would be wise to exempt prospective teachers from the tuition fee because of the relatively low wage which teachers received. But unfortunately prospective teachers are not the only ones who are in bad financial circumstances. Prospective lawyers, journalists, general business men, etc., have taken advantage of the opportunity to get their undergraduate preparation while nominally an education student, but actually taking nearly all work in the College of Liberal Arts or the School of Commerce. Such actions will, of course, prevent graduation from the School of Education; but a large number of these either intend to transfer, or to enter some professional school after two years of work in the Education Department. The present system enables one to transfer to the Law School, for example, and either teach two years or pay his tuition within three years after graduation from that school. If the purpose of the School of Education be solely that of training teachers, then we must brand it a failure.

The "all or none" law works very effectively in this matter. The solution to the problem lies in FREE TUITION FOR ALL, OR FREE TUITION FOR NONE. —J. C. W.

THE "Y" RESPONDS TO PLEA FOR ORANGE COUNTY POOR RELIEF

The Y. M. C. A. officials accept the challenge issued recently, by two or more contributors to the Tar Heel, to lead the campus in some form of material response to the needs among the poor of Orange County. We appreciate the alertness with which such students urge response to these needs when they happen to discover them, and only regret that a larger number of students and faculty do not come into close quarters with the "other half" more often. A fresh check-up with the County Welfare Officer shows that there are just two major types of need which make the situation abnormal at the present time. These are, the need for clothing for the school-age boys and girls, ages 6 to 14; the need for milk funds for the smaller children particularly in the mill village near Hillsboro. In order to make the appeal to the campus very specific, practical and direct, we have asked Mr. Lawrence, the County Welfare Officer, to make out statements giving a list of the items needed in individual cases of children for school clothing and other equipment, and of families where there are babies needing milk which they are not getting, giving the amount of money required to cover the need in each case. These cases then will be proposed to fraternity groups dormitory groups and to individuals, to have them taken over by such groups who may contribute money to cover the cases.

These cases will be published in the Tar Heel as soon as Mr. Lawrence delivers them to us, and then the fraternities and other groups will be canvassed for response.

From the Tar Heel Files

By Howard M. Lee

Twenty-Five Years Ago Today:

The regular February German Club dance was staged in Commons hall.

"Hot and cold baths may be had any old time" according to a filler in the Tar Heel.

The bottom fell out of the plan to run a trolley line from Chapel Hill to Durham. One of the aspiring young men on the Tar Heel staff wrote: "From the present indications Chapel Hill will be as old as Rome before she has an electric line connecting her with Durham."

One of the local drug stores announced that they would give 12 drinks to each baseball player who knocked a home run in any of the scheduled games, 6 drinks for each three-bagger, and 2 drinks for each hit.

Ten Years Ago Today:

A Tar Heel reporter wrote that "Claude, a near sighted sophomore, registered for zoology 1 instead of Geology 1." He "made a great mistake, a very great mistake indeed."

Even back in 1920 the Democrats at Chapel Hill were laying aside party differences. The Hoover Club was organized to make Hoover the next president of the United States. Included among the Hooverites was Dr. J. G. Hamilton of the history department as chairman.

The following appeared in the Tar Heel: "Our distinguished alumnus, Josephus, issues warning to a certain admiral not to medal with him."

C. T. Boyd wrote in the Student Forum of the Tar Heel that "The purpose of this article is to call attention to the uncleanliness of the dishes used at Swain hall. Every one who boards there can testify . . . the dishes are not thoroughly washed. Very often there are streaks or films of dirt upon the silverware, plates, and glasses. It is a very common observance to see an early arrival examine all the plates at his table in an effort to get a clean one . . . Swain hall is not as clean as it should be . . . The fact that some dishes are clean is no excuse for the rest being dirty . . . In connection with the cleaning up of the campus, Swain hall should also be cleaned up."

The Raleigh correspondent of the Tar Heel said "The Saint Mary's basketball quint is showing great form."

Five Years Ago Today:

Simon Guggenheim, former U. S. Senator from Colorado, announced a gift of $3,000,000 for scholarships. The Tar Heel goes on to say that "the fellowships will be awarded on a program even larger than that of the Cecil Rhodes scholarships . . . The coming of these fellowships has been welcomed with much gratitude . . . " (We should never mind about the great enthusiasm which was shown at that time, boys, for very, very few at Carolina have ever been affected by these scholarships.)

A bill was introduced in the state legislature "directed at the cake-eaters." The purpose of this bill was to "Banish bell bottom breeches from the front of colleges for women." President Brewer of Meredith College stated that the bill would put an end to the spectacle that can be seen any fair Sunday afternoon in front of Meredith College and other female colleges . . . "

When You Ask for Your First Job—

WILL you be able to say that you have had the necessary business training? Or will you have to admit a lack of practical knowledge and enter the "school of hard knocks"?

Every college man has two roads open to him: the trial and error method of attaining business leadership involving years perhaps of delay; or the business education method which provides in much less time that training the business world demands.

Which road do you choose?

Babson Institute offers you the direct route. In a thorough and intensive nine months' course, you can learn the principles of Finance, Management, Production, and Distribution. More than that, you can learn how to use this knowledge; so that when you apply for your first position you can say:

"Yes, I have had the necessary business training!"

Send for Booklet

We invite you to send for our booklet "Training for Business Leadership". It tells how many other young men, like yourself, have been prepared for business at Babson Institute and how you, too, may be equipped to fill eventually an executive position. The booklet is free. When you have read the booklet, pass it on to your father and ask him what he thinks of this practical instruction in business fundamentals. New terms open March 29, June 28 and September 24.

CAGERS TO PLAY GEORGIA TONIGHT IN TOURNEY GAME

Ashmore's Tar Heels Entering Conference Basketball Meet As "Dark Horse."

Ten Tar Heel cagers left last night for the Southern Conference tourney in Atlanta which begins this afternoon. The Tar Heels meet the University of Georgia tonight at 8 o'clock.

Men making the trip with Coach Jim Ashmore and Manager Loy Thompson were: Dave Neiman, Johnny Greene, John Edwards, Tom Cleland and Jenks Hutchinson, forwards; Sandy Dameron, center; and Artie Marpet, Tom Alexander, Billy Brown and Page Choate, guards.

Carolina will be without the services of its regular center, "Puny" Harper, who is still out with a sprained ankle, sustained in the last Duke game.

For the first time since the beginning of the S. I. C. basketball tourney, the Tar Heels will be entered as a "dark horse," and are one of six teams to be given preferential ratings.

Coach Ashmore stated that the lineup for the opening game with Georgia will probably be Green and Neiman, forwards; Dameron, center; and Marpet and Alexander, guards.

AYCOCK COMES OUT ON TOP

Intramural Basketball Season Ends With Dekes Winning Fraternity Race And Aycock Defeating Dekes.

Aycock dormitory's defeat of D. K. E. in the titular match of the intramural basketball league Wednesday night brought the title to the dormitories for the second year in a row. Last year Carr dormitory won the campus honors.

Aycock finished the season by winning 11 games and losing none, to outdistance its nearest dorm rival, Old East, which had only one defeat to mar its season's play.

D. K. E. defeated the strong Phi Gamma Delta quint in a playoff between the two teams, and then won from A. T. O. by a forfeit to finish at the head of the fraternity group with 9 wins and no defeats.

An unusually large number of men participated in the intramural basketball league this year, but very few forfeits were turned in. The 43 teams entered in the two leagues were continually pulling upsets, and a large number of games were won by small margins, with some going into extra periods.

Zeta Psi, Phi Gamma Delta, Tau Epsilon Phi and Sigma Nu finished in a tie for second honors in the fraternity league. The D. K. E.-Zeta Psi game was probably won by the closest margin of any game during the series, when the Dekes nosed out Zeta Psi by a bare one-point after an extra period had been played.

The intramural officials stated last night that an "all-campus team" would be picked in the near future, and will probably appear in the Tar Heel in a few days. The final standing of the two leagues follow:

Defending Conference Title At Charlottesville

The above pictured mitmen will carry the Tar Heels' colors to the Southern Conference Boxing Tournament in Charlottesville this afternoon, tomorrow, and Monday. Captain Archie Allen is the most outstanding Tar Heel entry and will defend the title won last year. Noah Goodridge, Sheffield, Davis, Koenig, and Warren will be other Carolina representatives of note.

BOXERS DEFEND SOUTHERN TITLE THIS WEEK-END

Tar Heel Mitmen Will Encounter Stiff Competition At Conference Meet In Charlottesville.

Captain Archie Allen will lead the 1930 Tar Heels, present holders of the title, in the Southern conference boxing tourney which begins at Charlottesville today. The Tar Heels will compete with 11 other S. I. C. teams in an attempt to retain the title won in Florida last year.

Archie Allen, welterweight, is the only individual title holder of the 1930 Tar Heels, but several other Carolina veterans are expected to be outstanding contenders for individual honors this year. Noah Goodridge, lightweight, was runner-up for the 135-pound title at the University of Florida last year, and although having registered one defeat this season is counted as one of the favorites of the meet. His recent win over Casoni, star Penn State boxer, gives him another boost towards the title.

Obie Davis and Harry Sheffield are two other outstanding Tar Heel mitmen. Both Sheffield and Davis lost their last fights to Penn State's national champions, but are expected to be in shape for the bouts this afternoon. John Warren, light heavy, and Bill Koenig, heavyweight, will furnish strong competition for the title in their weights, but a large number of other S. I. C. teams have strong men in these places. Phil Alston, a recruit, will enter in Vaughan's place for Carolina.

In the light heavy class the three most outstanding contenders are Warren (U. N. C.), Marsailles (Florida) and Gentry (Virginia). Warren lost a close decision to Gentry and won a knockout from Marsailles, who is a harder hitter but not as crafty. Marsailles in turn won a decision over Gentry.

The meet opens today with two matches and with one tomorrow. The finals and semi-finals will probably be held on Monday.

Baseball Practice Being Held Daily On Emerson Field

Baseball practice is now in full swing at Carolina with a large number of candidates practicing daily on Emerson field. Coach Hearn, during the absence of Coach Ashmore at the S. I. C. basketball tourney, has been putting the 1930 Tar Heel baseball aspirants through light workouts.

Two diamonds have been prepared for the use of the team in practice games, while several others will soon be ready for workouts. Coach Hearn is at present grooming the candidates for the Tar Heel pitching and catching staff, but a large number of infielders and outfielders have reported for practice.

FIVE CONFERENCE TEAMS ENTERED FOR INDOOR MEET

More Entries Coming In Daily; Many Star Cindermen Expected Here March 8.

Entry blanks for the Southern Conference indoor track meet to be held Saturday, March 8, have been received from N. C. State, University of Virginia, University of South Carolina, Georgia Tech, University of Georgia, Presbyterian College, Elon College and Georgia Military Academy. The remainder of the entry blanks are expected within the next few days.

Included among the entrants are McGinn of State, winner of the 880-yard run in the state meet last year; Floyd, State, star 440-yard man from last year's State freshman team; Bob Young of Georgia, Southern Conference cross country champion for the past two years; Ed Hamm of Georgia Tech, world's champion broad jumper; Doug Graydon of Georgia Tech, all-round track star; Boineau, hurdler, and Kennedy, high jumper, both of South Carolina; Flippin, Virginia, record holder in the hurdles; Lauck of Virginia freshmen, winner of the 880 and mile in the recent Virginia indoor meet.

HIGH BASKETBALL TITLE GAME TO BE HERE MARCH 5

Practically Assured That Charlotte Will Represent West And Durham The East.

It is practically a certainty that Charlotte, from the western conference, will meet Durham, of the East, in the final game here Wednesday for the state high school basketball championship of class A schools.

Relative team standings, secured from the office of E. R. Rankin, secretary of the North Carolina high school athletic association, place Charlotte at the head of the western league with a record of ten victories, while Durham is the leader in the East, by virtue of a recent win over the Raleigh quint, its nearest competitor. Unless the Asheville team, with a single loss, defeats the Queen City team, Charlotte will represent the West against Durham.

Among the teams in class B competition, only Enfield, Lumberton, Rose Hill and Trenton are left in the eastern elimination series, originally entered by 23 schools. Of the 40 western teams, Welcome, Haw River, Henrietta - Caroleen, Candor, Spencer and Canton remain to decide the western championship.

At the conclusion of class A play in the East the standings of the teams were as follows:

TEAM	W.	L.	PCT.
Durham	6	0	1.000
Raleigh	5	1	.833
Wilmington	3	3	.500
Wilson	3	3	.500
Goldsboro	2	4	.333
Fayetteville	1	5	.167
Rocky Mount	1	5	.167

Western standings, which are relatively unimportant except for those of Charlotte and Asheville, are:

TEAM	W.	L.	PCT.
Charlotte	11	0	1.000
Asheville	9	1	.900
Winston-Salem	6	5	.555
Greensboro	5	7	.417
High Point	4	8	.333
Gastonia	2	9	.182
Salisbury	2	9	.182

SIDELIGHTS

by

Sports Editor

THE Southern Conference tournament opens at 1 o'clock this afternoon, Atlanta time, (2 o'clock Carolina time), with the Tar Heels rated as one of the "dark horses." Almost every S. I. C. basketball tourney in past years has opened with the Tar Heels one of the favorites. Half of the S. I. C. titles have been won by the Tar Heels, four in the past eight years. Last year the conference opened with Carolina as usual occupying a prominent position among the contestants, but N. C. State proved the "dark horse" of the occasion to come through with a win over the Duke quint in the titular match to win the conference laurels. Carolina previously lost to the strong Durham aggregation in the semi-finals.

RECENT WINS by the Tar Heels have raised the chances of Carolina in the game with the University of Georgia at 9 o'clock (Carolina time) tonight. Georgia is rated as having another "dark horse" team. The Bulldogs lost a game earlier in the season to the N. C. State quint by the narrow margin of two points. Carolina has lost and won to Tech by the same margin. So, according to scores, the two teams this afternoon are of practically even strength. The Tar Heels however, will be without the services of their 6 foot 6 inch center, Harper.

THE CONFERENCE closes the basketball season in North Carolina. This year Duke, with a state championship safely tucked away, will be the favorites from North Carolina, while State and Carolina enter on almost equal terms. Croson, of Duke, is reported as being in bad shape for the game with L. S. U. this afternoon at 6 o'clock (Carolina time). However it is highly probable that he will see action. N. C. State plays the first game of the tourney at 2 o'clock (C. T.) when they meet Sewanee. Both State and Duke are favored to win, while the outcome of the Carolina-Georgia game is hard to prophesy.

THE CINDERPATH MEN seem to be looking beyond the first S. I. C. Indoor meet here March 8, at the University of Florida dual engagement in Gainesville during the spring holidays. It is reported that about 25 or 30 of the promising Tar Heels will be given a week's training in Florida preceding the meet. Simultaneously rumors reach us that the University of Florida spring dances will be in progress at the same time. Perhaps this has been the reason for the recent rapid increase in interest in track?

THE GOLF COURSE problem is to be finally settled. The opening of the new miniature golf course behind the post office will serve as an outlet for those invested with the golf bug, maybe (?). Some say that this is only a beginning towards "bigger and better" golf courses. Let us hope so! Although we appreciate the hospitality of the Chapel Hillians in allowing us to use the local course, it seems unfortunate that Carolina cannot find a more effective means of encouraging one of the few sports that we are able to play after leaving school.

Service Station Changes Hands

T. S. Brown, of Hillsboro, has leased Tapp's Service Station in Carrboro and plans to operate it under a new name: West End Service Station. It is located just outside of Carrboro on the Greensboro road.

Miniature Golf Course Behind Post Office Nears Completion

Chapel Hill is finally to be blessed with an additional means of entertainment in lieu of the Carolina theatre and card-playing.

G. L. Crowell of Statesville and Messrs. Andrews and Henninger of Chapel Hill are partners in the "Tom Thumb" golf course which is rapidly nearing completion.

The course, which is to be called the "Carolina Midget Golf Course," will be located in a lot behind the postoffice. It will be three times larger than those which are at present in use throughout Florida and California and will include 3000 square feet of playing surface. It will be an 18-hole course and will require about 40 minutes for completion of a round.

H. J. Weeks, engineer for the Okoee Amusement Company of Chattanooga, is surveying and plotting the course. Mr. Weeks is also the patentee of the particular type of green to be used and he claims that it is semi-permanent in nature, will present at all times a uniform playing surface, and will be practically water-proof.

The course will be replete with roughs, bunkers and hazards—even to the extent of a pretty miniature lake that will attract many, many frolicking golf balls—and there will be hills and dales enough to send any golf bug into a rapture. The course will furnish an excellent practicing place for those interested in perfecting their stance and putting ability. From reliable sources comes the information that despite the minute size of the course, any man who makes a hole in one is "pretty durn good."

The "Tom Thumb" courses have taken the country by storm. Since their inception during July of last year they have become so numerous throughout the south that they have almost become a nuisance in some cities. They are exceedingly popular in the winter colonies of Florida and in California. Tulane, Alabama, Rollins, and Southern California are some of the few other colleges that can boast of a course.

The most important feature of the proposition will be the subsequent diversion derived from the course. For night play, which is the time when the courses are generally jammed to the utmost capacity—the course will be lighted by 24 lamps of 150 watts each. There will be ample accommodations for spectators and players alike. It is designed like a standard course, not a factory course, and was plotted by the engineer to fit the landscape. Therefore, there are many improvements to be made. The engineer announced that the course would be open for play for the Saturday after next.

The price per round has not yet been announced, but since the rate in Florida and other places is usually 25 cents, it is probable that this course will charge the same amount.

Infirmary List

The infirmary list yesterday decreased to five. They are as follows: George Sheram, confined to bed with pneumonia; C. C. Cornwall, still in with the measles; J. E. Dillard and Cheek Macum with colds; and J. E. Dunn with an infected gland.

Moonshiner Flees

G. A. Hearne, deputy sheriff of Carrboro, found a small still in operation at that place early this week. One negro, in attendance, fled upon the approach of the officer, and no arrests have yet been made.

Senior Exams

The senior comprehensive examination for the winter quarter will be held Saturday morning, March 1st, beginning at 8:30 a. m. in 103 Bingham hall. Those taking the examination will provide themselves with the large size (32-page) quiz book. The student's name is not to be written anywhere on the examination book.

Alabama Scientists Find New Element

Evidence of the presence of Element 87, one of the two absentees of the possible 92 elements, has been discovered recently by Fred Allison and Professor E. J. Murphey of the physics department of Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

The evidence in support of the discovery is based upon a new and highly sensitive method of analysis, magneto-optic method, which has been developed by Dr. Allison and Professor Murphey. By this means elements reveal themselves in chemical compounds by producing minima of polarized light at points on a scale which are characteristic of the atomic mass and valence of the element. The two elements ores, pollucite and lepidolite, showed under this analysis the chemical equivalent of "ekacaesium," this new element.

The discovery, if finally established as conclusive, is a goal attained by the Alabama investigators that has long been sought by the world's leading scientists. Only one element, No. 85, will still have escaped the eyes of science.

A preliminary announcement of the results concerning Element 87 is being published as a note in the forthcoming issue of the Physical Review.

The element has not been separated chemically. Thus far, only a preliminary statement has been made by Dr. Allison and Professor Murphey while their investigations are being continued.

Trustees To Elect President March 4

The Associated Press dispatched a story yesterday from their Raleigh bureau to the effect that the trustees of the University who meet at the state capitol on March 4 will proceed immediately to the task of electing a president to succeed Dr. Chase. The news item also quoted W. Lunsford Long, one of the trustees, as favoring the election of R. D. W. Connor.

Chief Lloyd Scents Booze; Offender Pays $50 And Costs

When a car driven by Curtis Winston, 25, white, a former employee of Gooch's cafe, drove from Franklin street into an alley, Chief Lloyd's educated nose caught a scent of whiskey. Lloyd accosted Winston just as the latter parked his car, and found two leaking gallon jugs in the tonneau.

Winston was assessed $50 and costs on each of two counts, driving while intoxicated, and possession of liquor, when he appeared Monday morning before Judge C. P. Hinshaw of the local recorder's court.

Traffic Ordinance Violator Fails To Appear In Court

L. Y. Bridgers, of Durham, failed to appear in Chapel Hill recorder's court last Monday morning to answer a charge of violating a local traffic ordinance. Judge C. P. Hinshaw directed that police officers go to Durham and serve a warrant on the offender.

Bishop Remington To Be Here Tonight

The Right Reverend William P. Remington, Bishop of Eastern Oregon and one of the most popular men in the Episcopal church, will come to Chapel Hill today and will be at the parish house tonight for an informal talk with students. He has visited many of the colleges in his work and is thoroughly familiar with the problems of college life; and his talk should prove highly interesting. All students who would like to meet him and talk with him are cordially invited to be at the parish house tonight at 8 o'clock.

LOCAL GOLFERS HOLD SPRING TOURNAMENTS

The first of the spring series of golf tournaments for members of the Chapel Hill Country Club will be held this weekend, with play beginning at 3 o'clock on both Friday and Saturday afternoons.

Handicaps will be posted at the first tee, and each member is requested to check his name before beginning play. The contestants are to play two complete rounds, including the new seventh hole, and are to turn in their scores for the two rounds before leaving.

This is the first of the regular spring tournaments which have been run for three years. As was done last year prizes will be given for the lowest score in each of the tournaments. These prizes are donated by the merchants of Chapel Hill.

The tournaments are open to all golf members of the Country Club, and every one is urged to compete by playing two rounds and turning in his net score.

PROFESSOR FAILS TO MAKE TRIP TO MOON

Budapest, Feb. 25, (IP)—Because the moving picture company which paid him a large sum for aiding in making a picture of a rocket trip to the moon, stopped its funds when the picture was completed, Professor Franz Oberth, has returned to his native village without completing his projected "moon-shooting rocket."

He expects to complete the venture when he can secure more money, he says.

WATTS OPENS UP RADIO REPAIR ESTABLISHMENT

M. M. Watts, who was for several years University electrician and who has been recently employed by the Greensboro Radio Service company, has opened a radio repair establishment near the post office at Carrboro.

Watts will be equipped eventually for any type of repair, installation and service of radio equipment of all kinds.

lost a decision to Sutphin. This was Ingold's first fight, and he accounted for himself creditably. The next fight was won by Levinson, Carolina, over Jackson in the third round, and Lumpkin of Carolina won the 135 pound fight from Scott by a knockout in the third. In the 145-pound division Jackson of Carolina knocked his man out in the second round, while Patterson of Carolina lost a decision to Shrewsbury. The light-heavy bout did not last long, as Landis of Carolina scored his man in 30 seconds. In the heavyweight division Wilson, Carolina, won from Grenius by a knockout in the last round, after a tough fight.

cational value of dramatics, and Muriel Wolff and Holmes Bryson entertained with improvised character sketches.

The company played at Wilmington in the historic Academy of Music before a capacity audience. At Columbus, Ga., where they appeared under the auspices of the Three Arts League, they played at the historic Springer Opera House. The performance was followed by a supper party given by members of the league. After the performance at the old Augusta Junior College at Augusta the company was entertained at the famous Blue Moon restaurant. There they met Henry Stillwell Edwards, author of "Aeneas Africanus" and other southern stories. The story-teller-poet entertained them by reciting from his poetry and telling tales of the south.

In Atlanta Professor Koch gave a talk before the Fine Arts Club on "Making an American Folk Drama." The feature of the performance at Spartanburg was the appearance of a hundred or more Converse College girls among the audience. At Rocky Mount, N. C., the company was entertained by the Little Theatre Guild at a bowling party.

In contrast to the northern tour last fall this trip was made without mishap. No busses broke down, and no delay of scenery necessitated performances without equipment. In an interview Professor Koch, director of the organization, stated that the roads were fine everywhere. He added, "We arrived in every town half an hour ahead of schedule."

FINAL GRAIL OF QUARTER AT GYM 9 P. M. TONIGHT

Engineers And Grail Dances Closing Events Of Brilliant Winter Social Season.

Following the engineers' ball of last night, the Order of the Grail will have its third and last dance of the quarter tonight beginning at 9 o'clock. The engineers had quite a successful affair last night according to those attending. The ballroom of the Inn was attractively decorated in a color scheme of blue and gold, an unusually good crowd of girls were present, and the music was declared to be excellent. "Ty" Sawyer and his Carolina Buccaneers will again be heard at the Grail dance tonight.

Because of the success of the plan of giving boxes of candy to the first five girls attending the last Grail dance, this feature will again be carried out tonight. However, this offer is open only to those arriving before 9:30 o'clock.

The gymnasium will be decorated by Frazier Glenn and Baron Holmes who have long ago demonstrated their ability at this important feature.

As usual, tickets will be placed on sale for stags at 8:30 at the rear entrance of the gym. Boys bringing girls are allowed to purchase their tickets at the door.

This will be the last dance on the Hill this quarter due to the nearness of exams, and quite a large crowd is expected. Many visitors are now in Chapel Hill due to the presence of the two dances this week-end. Members of the Grail predict that this will be their best dance of the quarter.

Staff Meeting

There will be a meeting of the Tar Heel staff tomorrow night at 7 o'clock at the offices, basement Alumni building. All reporters unless excused by the editor or the managing editor are expected to attend this meeting.

Faculty Members Attend Education Meeting In East

The annual convention of the department of superintendence of the National Education Association, which met with allied organizations last Sunday in Atlantic City, N. J., adjourned Thursday evening after a session of five days. More than a hundred educators from North Carolina were present, including several members of the University faculty.

A series of distinguished speakers and educators addressed the convention on various topics concerned with education. Among the speakers were Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, congresswoman from Florida; Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, secretary of the interior; and John Winley, editor of the New York Times.

Members of the University faculty present were as follows: Miss Mabel Macon, graduate student in the school of education; Miss Beust, librarian of the school of education; I. C. Griffin, business manager of the High School Journal; Miss Sallie B. Marks of the school of education; B. H. Stevens of the University extension division; M. R. Trabue of the school of education; H. D. Meyer of the sociology department; and Dr. Edgar W. Knight of the school of education, who spoke before a group meeting.

DEBATERS BREAK EVEN IN GEORGIA

J. C. Williams And John Wilkinson Win From Georgia Tech Thursday.

EMORY DEBATE IS LOST

Carolina's varsity debating teams broke even in a double engagement at Atlanta, losing to Emory University Wednesday night and winning from Georgia Tech Thursday.

Both teams upheld the affirmative side of the question "Resolved, That modern science tends to destroy theistic faith." W. W. Speight and McB. Fleming-Jones represented the University case against Emory, while J. C. Williams and J. W. Wilkinson competed with Georgia Tech.

Emory and Georgia Tech are both old debating rivals of Carolina and the competition among these three institutions is so keen that non-decision debates, which are rapidly supplanting the old decision debates, could not be agreed upon, and three judges were selected to render the decision. The University debaters won and lost by the same vote, two to one in each case.

The subject of the debates was of interest owing to the fact that Emory is a strong church school while Carolina is distinctly liberal in thought. This loss to Emory evens things up in the long forensic history of the two institutions. Previous to this contest Carolina held a margin of one in the series.

Williams, Wilkinson and Speight are veterans of intercollegiate debating and Fleming-Jones, while a newcomer, has shown enough ability to win a berth on the team over several experienced debaters. Williams and Wilkinson are both winners of the Wright medal. Williams in addition has received the Bingham medal and has competed in 10 intercollegiate debates. Speight has debated for Carolina against Marquette and Virginia, and Wilkinson has numbered among his opponents the British National Union of Students.

GREENE GETS SIX POINTS

Sanford Leads Scoring Of Bull dogs With Ten Points; Carolina led at half 10-8, But Failed To Hold Pace.

After setting the pace for Georgia in the opening minutes of play and leading 10-8 at the half, Carolina's White Phantoms weakened and fell before the onslaught of Sanford and his teammates 26-17 in the first round of Southern Conference tournament play at Atlanta last night. With State also losing to Sewanee, Duke remains as the sole standard bearer of the Old North State in the 1930 race for the title.

The Tar Heels played their usual steady game, but failed to hold Sanford down, and the speedy Georgia forward rolled in 10 points to give his team the necessary margin of victory and the right to go on in tournament competition. Carolina as a dark horse found the track too fast and Tar Heel hopes for a fifth conference title were relegated to a future season.

SURVEY REVEALS MANY STUDENTS ARE SELF-HELP

North American Student Federation Investigates Number of Students Working in 723 Colleges and Universities.

The North American Student Federation recently made a survey of 723 colleges and universities in the United States. The results reveal that these institutions enroll 84 per cent of all college students in America and that 46 per cent of the men and 23 per cent of the women are earning part or all of their way through college. Figures on self-help show that the earnings of these students are approximately $32,500,000.

Students are working at jobs and trades of all kinds characteristic of the community—automobile jobs, office jobs, specialty selling, semi-professional work, tutoring, printing and publishing jobs, public service work, transportation employment, hotel and eating house-jobs, and a variety of odd-jobs too numerous to mention. Over 200 different types of employment for college students are listed. Some of the more original are making their own opportunities. Those gifted in color and design create artistic novelties and decorations which find ready sale among students and citizens. Talented students give lessons in music, bridge, golf, or are employed as entertainers, readers, soloists, and orchestra members to provide entertainment at dinners,

Tar Heel Captain And Star Lightweight Get Off To Good Start At The University Of Virginia.

ARE DEFENDING TITLE

Warren, Davis And Sheffield Lose In Preliminary Scraps Of Boxing Tournament; Finals To Be Held Monday Night.

Captain Archie Allen and Noah Goodridge came through the preliminary boxing bouts at the Southern Conference tournament at Charlottesville last night and the Tar Heel hopes for a third successive conference title are tied up in the performances of these two men in the second round of the tournament tonight and the finals Monday.

Allen scored a technical knockout over Fean of V. M. I. in the third round after submitting him to heavy punishment for the first two periods. His showing last night classes Allen as a formidable contender for the welterweight crown. Last year Allen annexed the lightweight crown, but this year he stepped into the welterweight class and went through an entire season without a defeat.

Goodridge, in winning a decision over Pheriot of Tulane, who was considered one of the most formidable contenders for the lightweight crown, established himself as one of the foremost candidates for the conference title in that weight. The shifty, skilful style in which Goodridge handles himself in the ring gives him a good chance of copping a title. His only defeat of the season came at the hands of Captain O'Connell of Florida, who fought his way to a featherweight championship last year, but switched over to the lightweight class this season.

Warren lost a decision to Harland, another of Tulane's hopes, in a close, hard-fought scrap. Davis and Sheffield also dropped decisions to their opponents. The outcome of Koenig in the heavyweight division had not been ascertained at the time of going to press. The result of the bantamweight bout was not available either.

Ambitious Reporter Learns Cause Jones' Bandaged Eye

(By Lucious Nelly)

Many have been the speculations that have arisen lately over the condition of Howard Jone's eyes. Indeed, so many letters and individuals have applied for information that it was found necessary to institute a thoroughgoing investigation.

The results—like the investigations in Congress—are scarcely to be termed productive. The bearer of the colored glasses and bandaged eye could not and would not be interviewed. The only other person who would throw light on the matter was Mrs. Howard Mumford Jones. After much pleading on part of your correspondent, the only information that could be elicited was that the inflamation, if it can be called that, of the left orb of the English professor was caused by a pine needle late last Sunday afternoon while riding in an automobile. The story is obviously not quite clear but Mrs. Jones would speak in only the very vaguest of terms.

Mrs. Jones made it very clear—without being asked—that her husband was not under the influence of intoxicating beverages. She expanded a bit and told in more detail that while Mr. Jones was entering the car, an overhanging limb of a pine tree got in the way of Mr. Jones. Thus did the pine tree's needle chance to spear the optic of the learned Southern

Famous Book Dealer Visits New Library

Mr. Paul Gotterschalk, German dealer in rare books and periodicals, made a business visit to the University library this week. Mr. Gotterschalk is of international fame, and is well known throughout Europe and America.

Nearly every year Mr. Gotterschalk visits the large college and university libraries in the United States. He also calls on the owners of the large private libraries.

Mr. Gotterschalk was very favorably impressed with the size and beauty of the library building. He was well pleased with the interior of the building, and especially with the decoration scheme which is carried out throughout the building.

Mr. Coney, the assistant librarian, conducted Mr. Gotterschalk through the building, who examined the Hanes Collection, which is located in the Seminar rooms. He declared this collection to be very valuable and interesting.

He came to Chapel Hill the early part of the week. He also visited the Duke University library.

Music Department Announces New Plans For Coming Summer

Professor H. S. Dyer, music director here, has made some interesting announcements having to do with the music department's plans for the approaching sessions.

The department will move into its new quarters on June 1. The old library building which has been renovated to house the music school will continue to be occupied temporaily by the education department until that time. Work will soon begin on the new music auditorium which will be directly behind and adjoining the old library building, but this will not interfere with the department's activities this summer in the section of the building now ready for it.

Steps have been taken to greatly enlarge the music faculty for the summer school. Professor Dyer will continue his work as head of the department, specializing in the field of teaching high school music methods. Mrs. Grace C. Woodman, now connected with the extension division, will give two courses in methods and one in music appreciation. T. S. McCorkle will teach the appreciation and history of music, conduct violin classes, and will give private instruction on string instruments; while Nelson O. Kennedy will continue his private instruction on organ and piano.

In addition, Miss Grace Helen Nash of Los Angeles, originator of the Nash system for class piano instruction has been secured to teach for the first time outside of Califorina.

Besides being interested in normal training among piano teachers, Miss Nash does special work with the adult beginner. Her theory is that the person of college age or older with a fine feeling for music can begin piano work and easily become proficient. Her system eliminates the very elimentary work to which young beginners are subject, and makes the work interesting for the adult. The system which has been in operation for ten years in California has resulted in a tremendous growth in piano study for college students and adults, who disliked the necessity of going through the period of children's exercises and pieces.

Other teachers who will become members of the department this summer are Miss Ella M. Hayes of Newport News, Virginia, who will conduct some work in methods and sight singing, and Edwin M. Steckel of Gastonia, a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, who will also do work in methods and related subjects. Miss Johanna Gjerulff of New York will conduct classes in Dalcroze Eurythmics, that which deals with interpretation, rhythmic posture and improvisation, for children as well as adults.

Oblivion For Homer And Cicero?

In the past two years the number of pupils studying Latin in North Carolina high schools has decreased almost fifty percent, according to a report published by the office of the state superintendent of public instruction yesterday. A recent survey, upon which the report was based shows that in 1925-26 there were 26,947 high school students taking Latin, or 36.7 percent of the enrollment, while in 1928-28 the number was 18, 212 or 18.8 percent of the total.

The decline of Virgil and Cicero, Catiline and Caesar was inevitable in twentieth century North Carolina. People are too keenly interested in their blank accounts, too busy devising ways and means of increasing their material wealth, to bother about the classics these days. And they transmit their materialistic attitude to their children in an intensified form.

A decade or so ago every high school and college student received a thorough drilling in the classics. Homer, Euripides, Aeschylus, Ovid and Tacitus were familiar figures to the student of other days. But now business management and short hand, chemistry and book-keeping, have driven the Illiad and the Metamorphoses from the scholastic stage.

The decline of the immortals will not be unlamented. There are still a few thorough classicists extant, but their ranks are thin indeed. Modern trends are all in the direction of the materialistic, away from individual thought and contemplative study; very few people have time to think these days.

Latin is a study which provides a rich intellectual background for the serious mind. It performs the prime essential of all studies to an unexcelled degree—teaches the student to think for himself. According to popular modern concepts, however, a notebook full of technical knowledge is more to be desired than an intimate acquaintance with twenty volumes of the classics. But it will be an irreparable loss if the study of the classics is allowed to pass from high school and college curriculums. Despite indications to the contrary, oblivion has not become the fate of Homer and Cicero yet—and probably never will.

No Necessity For Delay

With the meeting of the University's board of trustees set for next Tuesday, interest both here and throughout the state centers on the decision of that group as to a successor to Dr. Chase. Student-body opinion indicates a preference for the selection to be made from the University's faculty. However, sentiment favoring the choice of some one from another state has arisen.

Such action on the part of the trustees would necessitate delay. Investigation of the qualifications of possible presidents and the coming primary elections would serve to delay action for considerable time. Delay would in no wise be beneficial to the University.

But if there is not available one from the faculty for the presidency, delay is advisable. During recent years the University has become the largest business concern under the management of the state. Today it is a self-contained institution superior to any one man. Within its faculty are numerous men capable of managing the concern. Contact with the University has familiarized them with its needs, its limitations and its traditions. In the administration of every state supported institution traditions must neither be broken nor ignored.

Precedent has established the fact that our faculty is capable of producing men qualified for the presidential chair. The past two University presidents, Edward Kidder Graham and Harry Woodburn Chase, were both selected from the faculty. Others seek here for leaders. We need not lightly pass over what is considered a veritable forest of presidential material.—W. Y.

A Valuable Part Of Education

For some years the pace of extra-curricular activities in our colleges has been growing hotter until it would seem that a breaking point must be near at hand. Egged on by an ambitious fraternity, or goaded by a lust for personal glory, men stagger to and from the class room under a load of extra-curricular interests and responsibilities, a list of which would have made the young Bonaparte himself shudder. And there appears to be no respite in sight.

All of which isn't so bad as it sounds. In the first place the big activities men usually sustain a fairly good academic standing, and rarely do we hear of one having a nervous breakdown. Moreover, it has been truly said that a man in college gets a great part of his education from his fellow-students, and certainly the most direct way to this phase of one's education leads through the field of the various student activities.

No one should begrudge the big campus man his little day of public acclaim, for of all fames his is the most pathetically brief. Athlete or student executive, his heyday may be marked by the most brilliant and meteoric career blazing across the collegiate heavens, but when his college generation has passed on he becomes no more than a dim half-remembered name, and in a few years even that is quite forgotten.

This collegiate glory, then, which turns to ashes in the activities man's hand as he steps from the college world into the business world, is in itself of no great worth. The real value of extra-curricular work lies in the training and experience it offers, the benefits of which abide with a man and help him to cope with the problems of life long after the glory of his college achievements has been forgotten. —J. J.

Readers' Opinions

THE "Y" IS DEFENDED

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

It has occurred to some of us who believe in the Y.M.C.A., and also in the spirit of brotherliness that is being manifested through the present program for county poor relief, that the Y has been treated a bit roughly in two recent letters from students. That organization is not designed for county public welfare but for student welfare. It was not the Y's duty to start up a county relief fund, but the privilege of anybody or any group. Some of us not intimately connected with the Y.M.C.A. commend it for its general good work, for example the human relations institute and the self-help bureau. Let's try to balance a knock with a boost, where we can.

TWO FACULTY MEMBERS.

"STREET OF CHANCE" IS FEATURE OF TODAY AT THE CAROLINA THEATRE

"Street of Chance," William Powell's first starring picture for Paramount, and one of the most exciting and highly dramatic pictures of the year, will be presented at the Carolina theatre today.

In "Street of Chance," Powell, who undoutedly creates the most fascinating role of his career, is cast as a notorious gambler, a cold cynical man, feared and respected by all who know him. (A character, incidentally, reminiscent of the late ill-famed Arnold Rothstein.) With keen insight and understanding Powell makes "Natural" Davis, the picture's dominant figure, a character of moods; a man torn between his uncontrollable desire to gamble and the better judgment that tells him that it is impossible for him to continue his gambling life forever. Powell's performance as "Natural" Davis is a vividly revealing bit of character delineation, one of the most notable performances yet projected on the audible screen.

"Street of Chance" is literally packed with suspense-filled situations that build up in logical and convincing fashion to a breath-taking, powerful climax. For this latest Paramount production is always an absorbing picture in which imaginative direction and the splendid acting of Powell and his supporting cast are effectively blended with a story of unusual interest.

Kay Francis, who gave a fine performance with Clara Bow in "Dangerous Curves," creates her first sympathetic role as the faithful wife of "Natural" Davis. Regis Toomy of "Alibi" fame is cast as "Natural's" brother, and Jean Arthur plays Toomy's wife. All three players are well cast and give restrained, sympathetic performances.

John Cromwell, who directed George Bancroft in "The Mighty," directed "Street of Chance" from an original story by Oliver H. P. Garrett.

The many new inventions, such as talking pictures and transatlantic telephone, have opened wide opportunities for students in engineering colleges authorities report.

The Arrow - Man

By J. C. (Red) Williams

With childish glee we look ahead and pine for spring. And oh, how welcome is spring! 'Tis the season when the tender leaves burst from their hiding-places, and the merry note of the Robin is wafted on the breeze. The farmer shines his rusty plows and the lover seeks the shady lanes. 'Tis the season when our dame becomes romantic and Tar Heel reporters burst into verse.

A friend of ours who is enrolled in the Law School recently confided in us that he had quit studying his textbooks, and had begun smoking Blackstone cigars in an effort to absorb the fundamental principles of legal literature.

It seems that the fad of changing locations is spreading very rapidly among North Carolina college presidents. One day we read of Dr. Chase's decision to accept the offer made him by the University of Illinois, and the next day we learned from a headline in the same paper that Dr. Gaines, of Wake Forest, had decided to accept the presidency of Washington and Lee University. 'Pears like we need a non-emigration law.

(With apologies to Coleridge)
'Twas a slender maiden,
And she stopped one of three;
"By the windblown bob and gleaming eye,
Now wherefore stopp'st thou me?"

The library doors are open wide,
And we would be within,
But this hindrance here, our heart to snare,
"May'st hear the merry din."

She holds us with glittering eye,
An eye that makes us quail;
And we burst forth in a tragic wail,
"Our courses we will surely fail."

We understand from this paper that the local debaters are spending a few days in Atlanta, in order to give Emory and Georgia Tech a few points on religion and theistic faith. Perhaps, the hot air artists will succeed in installing the religious principles of meekness and humility into the "Golden Tornado," and thereby tame it a bit before the grid days of next fall. Our hopes look in this direction.

Guardians of the Plastic Age are finding their task a difficult one. Youth, pliable and full of fire, is ever in conflict with tradition. Our elders, forgetting their younger thoughts and desires, fear for our souls while we are under the tutelege of the finest intellects of the land.

Actuated by this fear, a group of citizens of the Commonwealth of Tennessee have founded a university for the purpose of combating the spread of the doctrine of evolution. It is indeed surprising to note that people who are considered intelligent send their sons and daughters to colleges and universities which teach the findings of modern science from an unbiased standpoint, and blame them for acquiring knowledge relevant to such matters.

Now we don't intend to express any opinions regarding evolution. We were considering the practice from a purely mechanical and technical standpoint.

According to an old and cherished legend, all cornerstones have a Bible and a quart of liquor in them. The other day while treading the road in front of the site of Memorial hall, we saw a large group of men anxiously awaiting the opening of the conerstone of that old structure. One old man actually stated that he saw the liquor deposited in the stone when the building was erected. When no such commodity was discovered after the stone had been broken open, the disappointment of the group assumed such ample proportions that we cannot find words to express it here.

After having seen several students scurrying around trying to sell their collegiate Fords, we feel like offering a suggestion as to how to sell such vehicles. Since chewing gum seems to be a very popular indoor sport, why not get a large stock of it and with each stick sell a chance to win the Ford. The possibility of winning ten dollars worth of automobile for one cent would be very attractive, we calculate.

The above suggestion we sincerely offer for the benefit of all student automobile salesmen.

Qualifications of Frank Graham

(By Louis Graves in the Chapel Hill Weekly)

The trustees of the University have been summoned to meet in Raleigh next Tuesday to elect a President to succeed Harry W. Chase.

There are ninety-six members of the board, and necessarily many of them are not in intimate contact with the affairs of the institution. It is natural that these should be puzzled over the question of whom to select. But those trustees who have kept a close observation upon the University are able to tell the board of a man here in the faculty who is pre-eminently qualified for the Presidency.

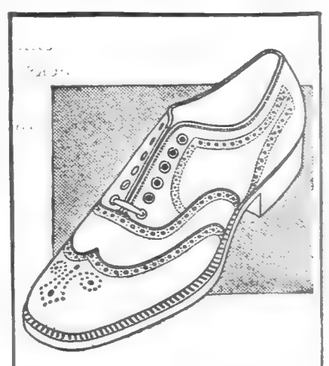
Frank Graham is possessed of all the qualities of mind and heart required for the execution of this high trust.

Of first importance is this: that he enjoys not only the affection but the complete respect and confidence of the faculty. Their co-operation with him as their leader would be far more than perfunctory—they would stand by him with whole-souled devotion and enthusiasm.

He is admired and beloved by the students, and nobody who might be chosen as President could stir and keep alive a finer loyalty than they would yield to him or a finer sense of honor and responsibility. Every student who has known him in or out of the classroom has gone away from Chapel Hill a better man for the acquaintance.

As the representative of the University among the people of North Carolina, as interpreter of its aims and ideals, he would be without a peer. Proof of his ability in this direction was given in his leadership of the campaign on behalf of this and other state institutions in 1921. He revealed himself then not merely as a capable organizer but as a man who, by his sincerity and eloquence, could win the support of the public. The regard in which he is held in every community in the state is of incalculable value to the University.

Years of steady and unheralded committee work, in addition to his classroom duties, have given him a thorough understanding of all the functions of a University—teaching, research, extension, and campus activities. He knows what things the University ought to do, and he knows the best way of getting them done.



President Chase well deserves the praises that have come to him for the conduct of his office in these last eleven years. But it is no derogation of his ability to say—and he would be the last to deny this—that his success has been due in no small measure to the men about him. This is, of course, always true of every successful leader. And of all the men who have aided him in the development of the University, and in lifting it to an ever higher place in the esteem of the people of North Carolina, none other has labored more constantly and more effectively than Frank Graham.

It is known to all his frends that Mr. Graham has no ambition to ascend to the Presidency. In my newspaper career of a quarter of a century I have been acquainted with many men prominent in the public eye, and I have never known another so indifferent to his personal interests or advancement. He would be quite content to go on working for the University the rest of his life and without credit or preferment; but if he were called to command he could hardly fail to respond.

Frank Graham embodies a rare combination of high intellectual ability, firm convictions never tainted with intolerance, and a sure faculty for winning the confidence and affection and co-operation of all who come in association with him. He is a rock of faithfulness and a flame of inspiration. The trustees should consider themselves fortunate in having the opportunity to choose such a man as President of the University.

ALL-CAMPUS TEAM

Tomorrow's issue of the Tar Heel will carry the intramural officials' all-campus basketball team, and much speculation is going on as to who will be chosen.

We do not propose to pick a team, but we will select a group of cagers who have done well this season.

Hooks of Aycock has played a very consistent game and, no doubt, will receive much due consideration before a team is finally chosen. His teammate, Kindell, has also showed excellent form during the basketball series.

Meade Willis has performed very consistently at center for the Dekes, and his scoring has been a feature of his play. Worth McAllister of the Dekes has also done well.

H. H. Hendlin of Old East is one of the highest scorers in the league and is a likely candidate for a forward position. He scored 34 points in a game against Grimes recently. His teammate, Stafford, has worked well at guard also.

Jim Hubbard was a good pivot man for the Phi Gams, being consistent with both his guarding and scoring. Buck Snow has scored many points for the Zeta Psis.

Larry Johnson of Sigma Nu has one of the highest averages for scoring of any forward in either league. He scored 32 points in one game, and abov 20 in several others.

J. C. Purser of Steele has been playing well at center, being tall and rather fast on the floor.

FENCING

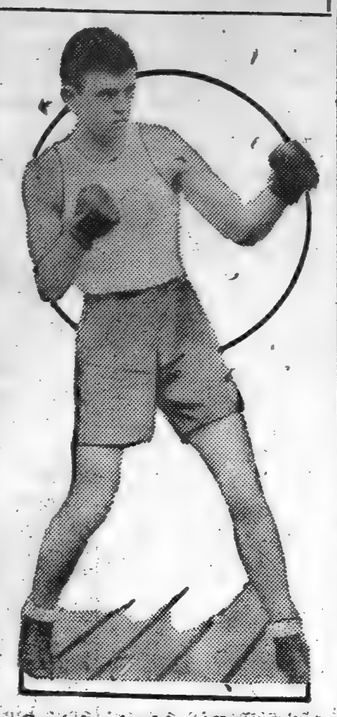
Despite the fact that intramural fencing was officially inaugurated here only a few weeks ago, many dormitories and fraternities have entered teams into the race.

Zeta Psi has a very strong team, having defeated the Sigma Nus by a good margin during the week. Several of the dormitory teams showed up well, as did some of the independent groups.

BASEBALL

Intramural baseball will not start for several weeks yet, but much talk is being heard as to which teams will be strongest contenders for the title.

Intramural athletics have had a most successful year during the fall and winter quarters. The football race was one of the most hotly contested since the athletic program was adopted several years ago. Judging from the absence of forfeits in the basketball race, interest in it has been campus-wide.



BETAS WIN IN FENCING

The No. 1 fencing team of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity won at intramural fencing Wednesday afternoon over the Manly team in a hotly waged skirmish which was not decided until the final bout. The score was 5-4. H. Brown of the Betas led his team in the scoring, accounting for 3 wins. Egan showed up best for Manly with 2 wins and 1 loss.

FINAL WINTER GRID BATTLE AT STADIUM TODAY

"Georgia Tech" To Meet "Tennessee" At 2 O'clock; Monograms Versus Rookies Next Week.

"Georgia Tech" and "Tennessee" are to clash in Kenan stadium at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon in the tenth Tar Heel winter grid game.

This battle will tell whether "Yellow Jacket" or "Vol" will finish second in the standings for the five-week winter season, and will decide which will prevail of "Tech's" strong line or "Vol's" shifty backs.

Folks are thinking in other terms too. This game will be the final clash before the Monogram-Rookie battle, annual closing feature of Tar Heel winter grid seasons, scheduled for Kenan stadium, March 8.

"Georgia Tech" has one of the strongest lines of the four practice teams. Both "Tech" and "Tennessee" boast their shifty backs.

All the boys will be on their p's and q's Saturday, for this final regular game will give the last line on "Who's Who" for the Monogram-Rookie game.

Coaches Fetzer and Collins will drill the two squads intensively beginning Monday for a week before that game, but the boys who have shown best in the regular weekly games will have best chances of making berths for the Monogram-Rookie game.

"Tech's" great line of Nichols and Parsley, ends; Sharkey and Collins, tackles; Blackwood and Fysal, guards; and Allen, center, should place men on both teams and be a big factor in settling Saturday's game.

Wyrick, Jackson, Erickson and Suggs will probably make up the "Tech" backfield Saturday; and Moore, Chandler, Daniels and McAlister will probably do the ball-carrying for "Tennessee."

STUDENTS PROHIBITED FROM DUELS IN AUSTRIA

Vienna, Feb. 28,—(IP)—The Penal Reform bill which is being worked out by the Austrian Parliament in an effort to pave the way for union with Germany, is to include a provision strictly prohibiting the duel between university students, long an honored institution in this part of Europe. Much opposition to the measure was evidenced.

Says Us

by

Browning Roach

Phil Scott pulled his usual trick Thursday night at Miami when he claimed a foul after being floored by Sharkey a couple of times. The big Englishman's claims went unheeded by Lou Magnolia, however, and the referee gave Sharkey a technical K. O. when Scott refused to continue the fight in the last round. Give us the good old days when fights were fights and not spineless exhibitions and set-ups. The ring needs a few Mannassa Maulers to pep up the old slugging game. A real heavyweight scrap hasn't been staged since Jack Dempsey relinquished the crown to Gene Tunney and these two retired from the ring, the one a member of the old slugging school, the other an example of applied pugilistic science.

We haven't heard much about the Duke tank team this season, but it seems that the aquatic Blue Devils have engaged in some intercollegiate swimming meets. The Devils dropped a tank meet to Georgia Tech a few weeks ago 58-12 and it was announced that they would make a second trip to Atlanta to take on Emory University either today or Monday. Yesterday's papers carried no further word of this meet and we were unable to verify the report given out a couple of weeks ago concerning the Emory engagement. Possibly sometime in the future Carolina will have a gymnasium adequate for something other than freshman gym classes and co-ed basketball. A tank team would make a welcome addition to the minor sports activities of the University.

With Carolina participating in three tournaments this weekend and next the interest of sports enthusiasts centers around basketball, boxing and wrestling. The basketball and boxing tourneys began yesterday with the Tar Heels rated as a "dark horse" in the former and a favorite in the latter. Carolina has annexed more titles in both sports than any other conference team. The wrestling tournament gets under way next week at V. M. I., with the Duke meet Monday to give the Tar Heels something to think about before entering the mat tourney.

High school basketball winds up next week with the class A play-off between Durham and Charlotte here Wednesday night and the state tournament sponsored by State college beginning at Raleigh next week. Neither Charlotte nor Durham has been defeated this season and the prospects for a close game Wednesday night are good. Chapel Hill high has been entered in the tournament at Raleigh and Coach Jones states that his boys are in good condition for the competition. Chapel Hill has come through with a successful season, having won a large majority of its games. The local boys have won 12 games in class B competition and the only ones lost have been outside that class. Durham, champion of the the eastern division in A class, threw the Chapel Hill boys for a loss early in the season but were pushed to do it. In total games played this season Chapel Hill has averaged nearly 30 points a game, against about 20 for the opponents.

Since fencing has broken into the circle of intramural athletics we are beginning to develop some apprehension as to our personal safety. It would cause some embarrassment to be challenged to a duel with one of these ambitious young fencers.

"OUR PIONEERING WORK HAS JUST BEGUN"

Barbee Pays Half Hospital Bill As Fine For Offense

More than three months ago Arthur "Doc" Barbee, 40, and colored, was seen walking down Mitchell Lane with a half gallon jar at 2:30 a. m., by officers C. H. Wright and John D. Blake, on patrol duty.

"Doc" is alleged to have seen the officers and to have departed hastily to the rear, cacheing his liquor in some shrubbery where it was later found. Wright, more fleet of foot than his brother officer, took after the negro and, when the latter did not stop, tripped him with his foot.

A fight ensued, during which the officer and the negro received several blows, first with fists and then with a blackjack which the negro wrenched from his antagonist. Wright then drew his revolver and shot the negro in the leg, whereupon Blake arrived at the scene and the negro was carried to a Durham hospital.

"Doc" remained in the hospital 11 weeks, and Monday, when he was judged to be sufficiently recovered, came to trial before Judge C. P. Hinshaw of the Chapel Hill recorder's court.

Twelve letters testifying to to the negro's good character and ordinarily good behavior, including one from Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase and others from high university authorities were read, and, upon motion, of W. T. Horton of Hillsboro, the negro's attorney, Judge C. P. Hinshaw took into consideration the long suffering of the accused, and assessed him the costs of prosecuting two cases, one of possession of liquor and the other, resisting an officer. The negro was also directed to pay half his hospital bill of $151, the balance to be paid by the city. He is allowed six months in which to repay the town.

Mrs. J. B. Martin Buried Thursday

Funeral rites of Mrs. J. B. Martin, widow of the late Rev. J. B. Martin who held the pastorate in the Chapel Hill Methodist church here for many years, were observed here Thursday afternoon in the Methodist church, of which she was the oldest member.

The services were conducted by Rev. Euclid McWhorter, pastor of the Enfield Methodist church, assisted, by Rev. Excell Rozzelle, pastor of the Chapel Hill Methodist church.

Mrs. Martin died at the age of 92 at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. A. Morris, in Franklinton, Wednesday. She was for long one of Chapel Hill's most highly esteemed citizens, her late husband having served here and at many other pastorates throughout the state. Since the death of her husband several years ago, Mrs. Martin lived with her children over the state. She was the mother of Mrs. Frank Page of Raleigh.

Among those present at the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. Chris Page and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Page of Aberdeen, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Page of Raleigh, Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Morris of Franklinton, Dr. and Mrs. Walter Patten of New Bern and Dr. and Mrs. R. B. John of Fayetteville.

Serving as pallbearers were some of the University's oldest faculty members—Dr. W. D. Toy, Dr. F. P. Venable, Dr. C. S. Mangum and Dr. I. H. Manning—and J. A. Morris, Clyde Eubanks and Chris Page.

Philip Marshall Brown, professor of international law at Princeton University, recently assailed the policy of newspapers which allow their foreign correspondents to "interpret" the news from abroad.

HENRY FORD PLANNING TO GIVE LIFE TO EDUCATION

Fort Myers, Fla., Feb. 28,—(IP)—Henry Ford, who is vacationing here, told the International News Service recently that he plans to devote the rest of his life and probably the sum of $100,000,000 for education.

His plan, the billionaire automobile manufacturer said, is to build a number of schools to educate boys in trades, either before or after they have had regular high school or college educations.

History And Government Faculties Hold Meeting

The faculty of the department of history and government held its regular monthly meeting Wednesday night at 8:30 o'clock in Saunders hall. The meeting was featured by an address by Professor F. M. Green on the subject of "Military Schools in the South Before 1860."

literary critic.

Nothing further could be gained by polite questioning, other than that the pierced eye was attended to by a Durham physician and that several trips were necessary to alleviate the pain.

However, the Tar Heel's intrepid reporter determined that during the few short days that the professor was convalescing, an obliging secretary in another office had to assume full care of his weighty mail. In addition, he missed several of his classes.

To sum up the results of the investigation: The Tar Heel readers are expected to believe that on a bright, Sunday afternoon, Mr. Jones, who is known for his clear vision and level-headedness, attempted to enter his motor car and while doing so was so engrossed in something or other that he did not notice a tree, with a heavy limb laden with pine needles, directly in front of him. One of the famed North State pines entered his left eye and temporarily inconvenienced it.

The Tar Heel's committee merely shakes its head and murmers, "Almost unbelievable—well-nigh incredible."

Music Department Announces Plans For The Summer

the advancement of music will doubtless send two guest teachers here, Mr. Dyer announced, to present lectures and recitals, one of whom may be Dr. Sigmund Spaeth. Also, programs of community music will be given one or two evenings each week in conjunction with the work of the Y.M.C.A., which always conducts outdoor vesper meetings.

Person hall, the present quarters of the music department will be retained as a practice hall.

Although it is still early, Mr. Dyer states that there has already been an unusually large amount of requests concerning the department this summer, and he feels that there will be a very large enrollment. A large number of music teachers in the schools of the state are accumulating sufficient credits to become supervisors by attending the summer school.

SURVEY REVEALS MANY STUDENTS ARE SELF-HELP

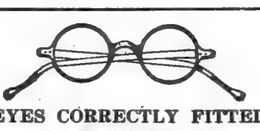
dances, and parties. Probably waiting on tables is the most popular employment of the self-help student. In some colleges window-cleaning has developed into a business. Other enterprises include suitpressing, haberdashery, concessions, sandwich and pastry selling, hair cutting, coaching, tea-room management, sewing, and an endless list of miscellaneous occupations. In the average college town, demands are made for students to do house work, care for children, fire furnaces, shovel snow, make repairs, wash automobiles, tend switchboards, clerk in stores, assist in post offices, act as night watchmen, drive taxis and busses, work as motormen and conductors, care for buildings and grounds, and in fact for any type of work that does not require full time during daylight hours.



Officials of the Federation state that "self-help among college students is looked upon as a matter of course, and no question is made of the social standing of the self-supporting student. If a student needs to work his way and accomplishes the fact, he is given due credit and suffers no social stigma. The establishment of student employment bureaux on the campuses of the leading institutions and the assignment of faculty members in the smaller colleges for the purpose of finding suitable employment for students indicate that self-help is an accepted college activity for both men and women. Although brief space is given to this phase of college life in college catalogues, term-time employment is increasing annually. Doubtless in the future more students than ever will be compelled to contribute materially to their own support on account of the increased cost of living and instruction. Many employers prefer college graduates who have earned a large portion of their college expenses, and many prominent men point with pride to the fact that they 'earned their way.'"

FUND FOR POOR RELIEF IS OVER NINETY DOLLARS

Saturday Contributions Add $51.50 To Fund For Unfortunates Of County.

Saturday's contributions to the "Campus Relief Fund for Orange County Poor" amounted to $51.50, bringing the total amount received to date to $94.00 The following were the contributors for Friday: W. G. Boger, Dr. and Mrs. J. M. Booker, J. A. Parks, L. B. Skeen, Mrs. Pickard, Anonymous.

Saturday's contributors were: Mrs. William D. Booker, Major William Cain, Mrs. Alice Old Dey, V. E. Lewis, K. C. Ramsay, Irl W. Summerlin, Dr. F. P. Venable, Dr. A. S. Wheeler, Anonymous through Louis Graves.

To date the gifts have been received according to the following general classification: 17 students, $16.05; 12 faculty (or faculty family) members, $65.50; 4 others, $12.45; total, $94.00. In comparing the contributions of students with those of faculty members so far, it is noticed that the faculty has given considerably more per capita, and that a greater percentage of the faculty than of the students has contributed. Students are not expected to give so liberally, it is said, but a few cents from a large number of students would greatly swell the chest for the unfortunates of the county.

Names of all contributing over 40 cents (the price of a meal or a movie) will be published in the Tar Heel. Contributions are to be mailed to Dr. L. M. Brooks, P. O. Box 747 or the Alumni building, or turned over personally to one of the members of the committee in charge of the fund. The committee is composed of Dr. L. M. Brooks, Louis Graves, Harry F. Comer, Ellis Fysal and Robert Hodges.

GRUMMAN LEAVES FOR WASHINGTON

Will Represent National Extension Association At Nation-Wide Meeting At The Capitol.

At a national meeting of adult and home extension educators, to be held in the office of the United States Commissioner of Education in Washington, on Monday and Tuesday, R. M. Grumman, head of the University extension division, will represent the National University Extension Association. This group is officially known as the National Committee on Home Education.

Mr. Grumman was appointed by the Extension Association as a special collaborator on the subject of "United States Home Reading Courses." This work is one of the phases of the local extension division activity, as well as of the numerous similar organizations throughout the nation. Mr. Grumman will attend the sessions of the committee as the representative of all extension groups affiliated with the national association.

In a letter received from the education office in Washington, relating to the meeting this week, it was stated that the committee would also consider plans for extension educational work among children of all ages, as well as among adults.

MOVIE TODAY FOR LOCAL POOR FUND

A special show will be given at the Carolina theatre today at three o'clock for the benefit of the poor of Orange county, according to an announcement by Manager Smith.

No tickets will be sold at the box-office, but a silver collection will be taken at the door. The money will be turned over to the special fund, which is in charge of Louis Graves and L. M. Brooks.

The performance to be given is one of several benefit performances given through the courtesy of Manager Smith at various times through the year. The last one was for the benefit of the American Legion Sanitarium at Oteen.

ALUMNI COUNCIL BEGINS STUDENT FUND OF $2,000

Loyalty Fund Committee Plans To Have Loans Ready For Students At Beginning Of Spring Quarter.

The Alumni Loyalty Fund council, at its meeting held yesterday afternoon in the office of President Harry W. Chase, voted to use $2,000 of its resources as a loan fund for students, according to an announcement issued last night from the office of Felix A. Grisette, director of the fund. The resources of the fund are now virtually all in the form of permanent securities, but some of these securities will be liquidated in order that the money may be made available for the committee on student loans.

It was announced that some delay will be experienced in disposing of present securities held by the fund but that there is every possibility that the money will be available in ample time to take care of the needs of worthy students who may need additional funds in order to register for the spring quarter's work.

The council adopted student loan funds as its preferred objective in its work of soliciting funds from alumni and friends of the University during the coming year. It was pointed out that a minimum of $150,000 additional money is badly needed for student loans. The fund will attempt to raise this money during the coming year, as well as small gifts of an unrestricted nature, to be used for emergency

Accounting Course May Be Given Soon

R. M. Grumman, director of the University extension division, has announced that a meeting of students and townspeople interested in a non-credit extension course in accounting will be held next Tuesday night at 7:30 in 303 Bingham hall. This meeting is being held to determine if there is a number of interested students sufficient to warrant giving the course.

The course, if given, is to be taught by Professor Robert H. Sherrill of the commerce school, who is conducting a similar series of classes in the Rocky Mount Y. M. C. A. According to the instruction plan outlined by members of the extension division, sponsor of the course, there are to be 15 courses of two hours each, given once a week.

Ends Successful Administration

University Undergoes Great Period Of Expansion Under Dr. Chase's Administration

(By R. W. Madry)

Several months ago a certain book reviewer, apparently none too well informed about present-day trends and events below the Mason and Dixon line, unwittingly subjected himself to a good deal of wrath and ridicule at the hands of the more prideful men and women of Tar Heelia.

The poor fellow had made the ghastly mistake of referring to the University of North Carolina as a "small Southern college." He was reviewing a novel that had just come from the pen of a young graduate of the University, and the reference, as painful as it was to the pride of Tar Heelia, was merely a part of a biographical sketch of the author.. As if to add insult to injury the critic had not even seen fit to mention the name of this "small Southern college."

A number of Tar Heel editors rose up in arms, the students dubbed the reviewer as "ignorant ignoramus" and were on the verge of calling a mass meeting to protest publicly the insult to the great reputation of their fair Alma Mater. Even the faculty and townspeople rose to heights of audible resentment.

Twenty-five years ago, or even ten or fifteen years ago perhaps, such a remark from the pen of a book reviewer doubtless would have passed unnoticed by 99 per cent of the good people of Chapel Hill. And rightly so. For the University of North Carolina of ten years ago, although a university in name, was in realty just a "small Southern college." Its student body at that time numbered less than 1200 and its faculty only 75. The Summer School enrollment was less than a thousand and the non-resident students taking work from extension numbered under a hundred.

Giving Instruction to 8,000

Contrast that picture of 1919 with the University of North Carolina of today, and the results you get will be amazing. It is doubtful if the great Aycock, in his most hopeful moments, ever visualized the great things that have taken place in education in Chapel Hill and throughout the State in the last ten years.

The University of today is giving instruction annually to approximately 8,000 students (exactly 7,977 according to last Registrar's report). Twenty-seven hundred of these are in residence here in Chapel Hill, some 3500 are taking University extension courses through correspondence or class instruction, and approximately 2,000 were enrolled in Summer School. And to make the picture complete, it might be added that the quality of work being done by these 8,000 students and by those who instruct them has been such as to merit the recognition and admiration of the leading educators of the country.

Development Since 1920

Before the War Between the States, the University stood at the forefront of educational institutions in the South. It had attained great eminence and was making itself felt throughout the country. Of its 456 students in 1859, there were 159 from other states. Its contributions to the public service of the state, the South, and the nation were extraordinary. It numbered among its alumni a president and a vice-president of the United States, seven cabinet officers, five foreign ministers, nine senators, 41 members of the national House of Representatives, 13 out of 20 Governors of North Carolina from 1814 on, seven Governors of other states, and so on throughout a long list of eminent and distinguished men.

But the greater development has come since the University reopened its doors following the dark days of reconstruction. And the greatest single period of material growth has been during the administration of its retiring president, Dr. Harry

Boxing Flash

Full results were unobtainable on the results of the quarter-finals and semi-finals of the southern conference boxing tournament being conducted at Charlottesville, Va., this week as the Tar Heel went to press last night, but it was learned that Goodridge and Allen had both won and would be finalists.

In the first of yesterday afternoon's quarter-final bouts Captain Archie Allen and Noah Goodridge won decisions over their opponents.

The finals will be held Monday night in Memorial Gymnasium at the University of Virginia.

DEAN CARROLL TO ADDRESS SOCIETY

Will Discuss "Education For Business Leadership" Before Taylor Group Tuesday Night.

D. D. Carroll, dean of the school of commerce, will speak before the University student branch of the Taylor Society Tuesday evening, in Bingham hall on "Education for Business Leadership."

Dean Carroll, who is the last of a series of faculty speakers will discuss the two great phases of education: study for the purpose of learning how to earn a living, and study to learn how to live and enjoy life. The speaker will present his views on the subject of these two phases of education and will then open himself to questions from the audience.

It has become recognized in recent years that these two parts of education are essential, and that technical education for the purpose of being able to efficiently earn a living is not the only function of educational training. The value of education of a liberal nature has come to be recognized among the foremost educators, as being as important as that of a technical nature, and the commerce school, of which Mr. Carroll is dean, now requires a large amount of liberal work for graduation.

The program for next quarter has been tentatively planned to include several faculty and outside speakers as well as several papers by student members of the society. Officers of the Society extend an invitation to the student body to attend the meeting Tuesday.

Playmakers To Give Local Productions

The Carolina Playmakers will present four new plays in the Playmakers' Theatre March 6, 7, and 8. The plays are: "Hollyhocks," a New England folk play by Joe Fox; "Suspended Animation," a comedy by Kent Creuser; "Death Valley Scotty," a California folk play, by Milton Wood; and "For Auntie's Sake," a college comedy, by John Patric.

These are plays recently written by members of the playwriting class. All of the authors come from different states; Fox from Massachusetts, Creuser from New York, Wood from California, and Patric from Washington. Elmer Hall, technical director of the Playmakers is building an elaborate set for "Death Valley Scotty," the scene of which is laid in the desert of California.

WOMEN STUDENTS ARE AT HOME TO FACULTY MEMBERS

Speculation Over Next President Is Main Topic Of Conversation At Friday's Reception.

(By R. W. Madry)

The women students—and it may be surprising to know that there are 170 of them this year—were at home to University professors and their wives Friday night, when the Woman's Association gave its annual reception for the faculty.

More than 200 guests called. It was the largest number yet to attend one of these receptions.

There was not a dull moment during the whole evening, for there was one topic that everyone was willing to discuss. It was the matter of selecting a new University president.

The co-eds gave no evidence that they were doing any politicing for anybody, but they didn't hesitate to ask each professor who his choice might be.

Some of the professors were quick to name their favorite; others assumed a very non-committal air; while still others were silent in seven languages.

There was Miss Elizabeth Murphy, for instance, who confessed that she had been questioned more than a dozen times as to her father's choice. Her father is Walter (Pete) Murphy, a very prominent University trustee, and here they call the daughter Pete, too. She was informed by several that it was understood that her father was supporting Archibald Henderson, one of Salisbury's native sons. Miss Pete's answer was that she could not speak for her father.

During the evening two other faculty members prominently mentioned for the presidency mingled with the crowd. They were R. D. W. Connor and Frank Graham. Professor Graham seemed to be perturbed over the fact that some of his friends had brought forward his name so prominently. He said his position likely would be made clear in a statement to be issued the next day. Professor Connor didn't seem to be worried about anything.

Spencer hall, where the reception was held, was beautifully decorated with snap dragons, japonicas and spirea, which harmonized with the hangings. The color scheme was rose and white. Deep rose tapers set in pretty silver candlesticks cast a soft glow over the reception hall.

The main receiving line was composed of Mrs. M. H. Stacy, adviser to women; Mrs. Irene Lee, social director; Miss Kitty Wells, president of the Woman's Association, and the following other officers of the association: Misses Olivia McKinney, Sue Dent, Ludie Lee, Phoebe Harding, and Helen McCoy.

Receiving at the doors were Misses Olivia Chamberlain, Reeme Moore, Elizabeth Murphy, Penelope Alexander, Rebecca Ward, Evelyn Way, and Jean McAlister.

Receiving in the hall were Misses Kate Graham, Mary Louise Carpenter, Maurine Foerster, Ruth Hamill, Cromwell Oliver, and Emmy Frances Polhill.

Presiding over the punch bowl was Mrs. M. R. Trabue,

North Carolina's Economic Situation

A certain candidate for a state office announced in a circular letter recently that his campaign will be based upon a 25 percent reduction in taxes as a measure of relief for the farmers. "What he's trying to do," Dr. Horace Williams said the other day, "is to help the farmers by getting the state in the same condition." The politician was very effectually disposed of.

North Carolina is experiencing much difficulty in shaking itself free from the business depression of the past few months, however. According to the "calamity howlers," the entire state is bankrupt. Although it is true that business and agricultural conditions are frequently depicted as much worse than they really are, the most optimistic will admit that they are bad enough; and there seems to be no immediate remedy for the depression.

A great change is taking place in the state's economic structure. From a dwindling cotton and tobacco economy North Carolina must turn to industrialization, if it is to escape virtual pauperism. The need for a rapid change from agriculture to industry is readily apparent. For several years the state has enjoyed an artificial prosperity, attributable in some degree to large bond issues. But now that the influx of borrowed money has ceased, the state must proceed under its own financial power.

Recent experiments show that cotton may be produced at a cost ranging from three to six cents per pound in Texas, and experts state that there is enough cotton acreage west of the Mississippi to supply the full total of domestic and foreign demand. Cotton and tobacco are North Carolina's only important money crops, and competition will probably make one of them highly unprofitable within the next few years. Only the better grades of tobacco can be produced at a profit, and very few North Carolina farmers can grow these grades. Although statistics on the state's imports and exports cannot be obtained, authorities declare that it is probable that the imports are far in excess of the exports. Rapid industrialization seems to be the only answer to the state's critical economic problems.

But the situation will not be materially bettered unless the industrialization is diversified. If textiles and cigarette manufacturing are the only major industries developed, economic disaster is almost certain. Varied industries must be developed.

Improved types of machinery and new processes are essential if the state is to compete with the sections of the country that are already highly industrialized. Less patents per capita are issued to North Carolina residents than to those of any other state. An alert interest in invention and science by North Carolinians is necessary if the state is to succeed in its industrialization program. It is with the hope of developing a keener interest in science and possible development of latent inventive genius, that we are running the first of a fascinating series of Popular Research Narratives, including tales of invention and science, on this page. Others will appear at frequent intervals.

A Chance For Every Student

Publication in today's issue of the Tar Heel of the all-intramural basketball teams marks the close of one of the most successful seasons of dormitory and fraternity competition. Following an interesting tag football season, intramural basketball began with the largest number of teams participating in the history of the department. Few forfeits were registered during the quarter indicating genuine interest on the part of the students and commendable effort on the part of intramural officials. The winner, Aycock Dormitory, is to be congratulated, for in winning it has demonstrated superiority over a field composed of representatives from almost every group on the campus.

Indications are that further effort will be made by the athletic authorities to promote greater interest in intramural sports. Fencing was recently recognized and the director is well pleased with the results of the first week's work.

But before every student is given a chance to participate in some form of athletics much is to be done. Stimulation of interest in wrestling, boxing, tennis, track, golf and other sports is necessary. There are many failing to benefit from the efforts of the intramural department. Organizations in the dormitories and fraternities of teams to participate in these sports guarantee action on the part of the authorities. With cooperation from those interested, the intramural department will be able to promote contests involving a larger number of students.

The foundations should be laid now for more intramural sports next year with the results that many lacking varsity ability will enjoy athletic competition heretofore denied. Money spent in this direction is productive of as great benefits both to the student body and to the University as that expended for varsity sports.—W. Y.

Leon Gaylor, 23, senior at Michigan State Teachers College, may spend the rest of his college career in jail because he attempted to stage a holdup to aid in paying his expenses at college.

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

In view of the recommendations for President of the University now being made to the trustees through the medium of this paper, we present our own candidate for that high office with the hope that he will be seriously considered.

The president of a university in these days of high pressure and higher scholarship must be a man of vision, sympathetic, kindly, of a scholastic turn of mind, interested in the welfare of the many students in his charge, a man of taste, easy to get along with, yet keen and ready for any emergency. If possible, the president should be a man well acquainted with the University, as near to the campus as possible. With this preamble, and believing that he will be found to fit these requirements, we present Officer Blake of the Chapel Hill Correction Squad as candidate for President of the University.

A mere statement of the facts should prove conclusively that Officer Blake is the man for the job. He is a man of vision. He can see a bootlegger, pretty girl, necking couple, or traffic violator as far and as fast as any man who has been in these parts in twenty years. He is sympathetic and kindly. He will listen to reason, if the reason is very good. If elected president, he would not put a man out of college merely because he happened to flunk a course or so—he would lock him in a calaboose, and the incident (and door) would be closed.

Officer Blake is of a scholastic turn of mind—you may find him most any night perusing the day's papers and the most worthwhile magazines in the lobby of the Y. Besides, he is a writer, and once he was seen writing on a bicycle. He is interested in the students here—some of them will even tell you that he sometimes overdoes being interested in what they are doing.

That he is easy to get along with, any man who has been in his charge will tell you. In fact, you cannot get along without him, if he thinks he has something on you, or you have something on you. Mr. Gooch of the local cafe has filed a document with this department certifying that Officer Blake is a man of taste. His tastes are large and varied, especially when it is a question of pie.

Not only is Mr. Blake as near the campus as possible, but he is generally to be found on a large portion of it at one and the same time. He is a genial man, always ready to take a joke or a drink—away from the owner. He would be an ornament to any office.

As assistants, Officer Blake would undoubtedly bring with him a fine staff of athletic men. There would be no strife within the administration, no hitting back. In case of trouble, Mr. Blake would merely have to hold up a clock, and his assistants would punch it. They too are scholarly men. One of them can speak five languages, including the Scandinavian. In short, Officer Blake would make a unique, kindly, and restful president, and would undoubtedly turn more Kappa Beta Phis out of the University than any man we can think of at the moment.

A SERBIAN HERDSMAN'S CONTRIBUTION TO TELEPHONY

AN EXAMPLE OF THE SPIRIT OF RESEARCH

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is one of a series of popular Research Narratives, which includes tales of discovery, invention and research. They are published in the Daily Tar Heel through the courtesy of the Engineering Foundation and the Williams and Wilkins company.

Conspicuous among hundreds of inventions which have brought America's telephone systems to their high development are those of Dr. Michael Idvorsky Pupin. They are highly scientific in character and based upon the wave transmission of sound and electricity. When the Edison Medal was presented to him in February, 1921, by the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, he told how he first became interested in sound transmission.

Although for many years an American citizen by adoption, Michael Pupin was born in a village near Belgrade, Serbia. At the age of twelve he began summer vacation service with other boys as assistant to the guardians of the villagers' herd of oxen, and at the same time his studying in Nature's own laboratory of the wave transmission of sound. Daytime duties were light; the hot sun and the hungry flies kept the wise ox in the shade. At night the cattle grazed. Moonless Serbian nights are so dark that the sky seems black even when the stars are blazing. Objects fifteen or twenty feet away cannot be seen. Only a few miles distant was the Rumanian border, and between lay extensive corn fields. When the wind blew from the corn fields to the grazing grounds, the pleasant fragrance tempted the cattle; but in the corn lurked many cattle thieves. The oxen must be kept out of the corn; on the dark nights; however, they could be followed only by sound.

Now, among the arts of the herdsmen in which the boys were trained, was the art of listening through the ground. A knife with a long wooden handle was stuck in the ground. One boy who was being trained would put his ear to the handle and listen, while another boy, thirty or forty yards away, would strike his knife similarly stuck in the ground. The first boy would have to tell the direction and guess the distance. This first lesson in wave transmission set young Pupin thinking. He soon observed, as herdsmen before him had, that sounds from the knife carry much farther through hard solid ground than through plowed ground.

The long nights of watching afforded much time for observing sounds and thinking about them. In the darkness the world seemed to have disappeared and the only signs of its existence were the messages of the low sounds from the grazing herd, the distant village clock, the rustling corn. Thoughts started in the lad's mind on those Serbian plains continued to evolve as he went from the village school to the academy at Prague; when he ran away from the unbearable confinement of the academy, after the freedom of the plains, and came to America, and as he made his way through many difficulties to a higher education in the sciences in the universities and laboratories of America and Europe.

Finally those germs of thought bore fruit in many scientific discoveries and inventions having to do with wave transmission, especially of sound and electricity. Among these inventions was the Pupin "loading coil," which greatly advanced the possibilities of successful long-distance telephony. A few years ago, when Chief Engineer Carty, of the Bell Telephone System, stretched his wires from the Atlantic Seaboard to the Pacific coast of the United States, and President Theodore N. Vail, of "A. T. and T.," first made a human voice heard across a continent, there were Pupin coils at intervals of eight miles in the transcontinental line. In the whole world today there are more than three-quarter of a million Pupin coils in use in telephone lines, of which 600,000 are in the United States.

HELEN MORGAN HERE IN "ROADHOUSE NIGHTS"

Those who think that the life of a screen player is one long round of pleasure occasionally interrupted by appearances before the camera have something to learn from the recent daily schedule of Helen Morgan, featured actress in "Roadhouse Nights," which comes to the Carolina theatre tomorrow.

Miss Morgan appeared at the Paramount Long Island studio in Astoria every morning at 9. With the exception of a brief luncheon recess she was engaged before the microphone and camera until 5:45 in the afternoon.

Leaving the studio at that time she hurried to her home for a brief rest and dinner before reporting to the Hammerstein theatre at 8 p. m. to make up for her featured part in "Sweet Adeline," current musical comedy success. With the final curtain around 11 p. m. she made almost nightly trips to the phonograph-recording company studios where she was making a number of singing records.

With good luck she frequently managed to get six hours' sleep each night before reporting at the studio again for the next day's work.

In "Roadhouse Nights" in which she shares featured honors with Charles Ruggles, Miss Morgan plays the part of a rum king's sweetheart who meets her old love, Ruggles, a newspaper man, and attempts to flee with him from the toils of the bootlegger.

Also featured are Fred Kohler as the villainous rum king, and Clayton, Jackson and Durante, who provide the wealth of hilarious drolleries with which this feature picture is richly garnished.

Durante is seen and heard as a singing waiter. It is his first appearance in the movies, but it is a debut so tremendously successful that motion picture audiences everywhere will be clamouring for more after "Roadhouse Nights" is shown throughout the country.

All-Campus Intramural Basketball Team Chosen

Dormitory And Fraternity Selections Also Announced By Referees Last Night.

AYCOCK PLACES ONE MAN

Steele, Sigma Nu, Zeta Psi, And D. K. E. Also Represented On First Team.

Intramural department officials last night announced the all-campus, all-dormitory, and all-fraternity basketbal teams as chosen by the referees. They selected first and second teams for the dormitories and fraternities, but only a first team for all-campus choice.

Larry Johnson, Sigma Nu, and "Pig" Barber, Zeta Psi, are forwards on the all-star team. Both forwards have distinguished themselves at ringing the basket at opportune times and with their floor work.

J. C. Purser of Steele is pivot man for the first team. He is tall and fast, and has scored many points for the Steele team during the season.

Potter is the only man from the championship Aycock team to receive a position on the all-campus selection. He has proven himself to be one of the most outstanding guards in campus basketball. The Dekes, winners of the fraternity race, are represented on the team by Tom Craig, guard.

Griffith, Sigma Nu; Hinton, Old West, and Hirsch, T. E. P., received honorable mention on the first team. Aycock placed two on the first and two on the second dormitory teams. Steele has one on the first outfit as does Old West and Old East.

On the all-fraternity team Sigma Nu leads in the number of places won with two on the first team and one on the second. D. K. E. has one on the first and one on the second. Zeta Psi and Tau Epsilon each captured first places. Phi Delta Theta, Phi Gamma Delta, and Chi Psi won places on the second group.

The all-dormitory and all-fraternity teams follow:

ALL-CAMPUS TEAM

Johnson (Sigma Nu)	Forward
Barber (Zeta Psi)	Forward
Purser (Steele)	Center
Craig (D. K. E.)	Guard
Potter (Aycock)	Guard

Honorable mention: Griffith (Sigma Nu), center; Hinton (Old West, forward; Hirsch (Tau Epsilon Phi), guard.

ALL-DORMITORY TEAM

First team: Hinton (O. W.) and Hooks (Aycock), forwards; Purser (Steele), center; Sutton (O. E.) and Potter (Aycock), guards.

Second team: Vinson (New Dorms) and Flowers (Aycock), forwards; Kindell (Aycock), center; Crane (Steele) and Sharpe (Law School No. 1), guards.

Honorable mention: House (Law School No. 1), Hendlin (O. W.), Stuart (Manly), Lowery (O. E.), Smith (Steele), and Sherrill (Aycock).

ALL-FRATERNITY TEAM

First team: Barber (Zeta Psi) and Johnson (Sigma Nu), forwards; Griffith (Sigma Nu), center; Hirsh (T. E. P.) and Craig (D. K. E.), guards.

Second team: J. Peacock (Phi Delta Theta) and Campbell (Chi Psi), forwards; Willis (D. K. E.), center; Person (Sigma Nu) and Henry (Phi Gamma Delta), guards.

Honorable mention: Weis (D. T. D.), Blackwood (Sigma Epsilon), Snow (Zeta Psi), Wells (K. A.), Eagles (Kappa Sigma) and Satterfield (Kappa Sigma).

Week Of Fencing Is Highly Successful

The first week of actual fencing among intramurals has been completed and has proven to be a huge, unbounded success: Director Hendlin urges that any team which was defeated should not be discouraged, but should keep practicing, for there will be chances for many return matches. According to Hendlin, the greatest potentialities were shown, by Sigma Phi Sigma Zeta Psi, Beta Theta Pi No. 1, the Sea-Hawks and Ruffin. Manly, with one victory and one defeat, has also shown fine possibilities.

The fencing schedule for this week follows:

MONDAY

4:30—Sigma Phi Sigma vs. Zeta Psi.

5:00—Beta Theta Pi No. 2 vs. Theta Chi.

TUESDAY

5:00—Beta Theta Pi No. 1 vs. Ruffin.

WEDNESDAY

4:30—Sea-Hawks vs. Musketeers.

5:00—Manly vs. Everett.

THURSDAY

5:00—Old East vs. Sigma Epsilon.

FRIDAY

5:30—Buccaneers vs. Sigma Nu.

5:00—Manly vs. Sigma Phi Sigma.

When the Bucharest board of education lacked funds for prizes for good school work, they gave instead copies of books which were discovered at school headquarters. Parents opening the books, found them to be copies of censored publications.

Branch Of National Athletic Federation May Be Formed Here

Leslie Mann, National League umpire and field organizer of the National Amateur Athletic Federation, conferred here Friday night with members of the University coaching staff and civic leaders with the view to organizing a local branch of the national federation.

Mr. Mann stated that it was the aim of the National Amateur Athletic Federation to "extend activities in behalf of amateur athletics." This aim could best be accomplished by bringing together as many of the independent organizations as possible into a federation with the aim of securing some degree of coordination in athletic activities through sponsoring tournaments and meets, he said.

The federation would bring together such organizations as the Y. M. C. A., Demolay, Boy Scouts, and high school and collegiate conferences.

CAROLINA TEAMS IN THREE MEETS HERE THIS WEEK

Matmen Meet Duke Monday; Rookies Battle Monograms Saturday Afternoon; S. I. C. Indoor Games Saturday Night.

Three big home events stand out in bold relief on the coming week's athletic schedule at the University.

The first will be the Carolina-Duke wrestling meet here at 8:30 o'clock tomorrow night, to settle the state title, and to have an important bearing on deciding "Who's Who" for the first Southern Conference wrestling tournament March 7 and 8, in which both teams will contend.

The second and third will both come on Saturday, the final feature Monogram-Rookie battle, which annually closes Tar Heel winter grid work, and the first Southern Conference indoor games.

The football game will be played in Kenan stadium at 2 o'clock. Prelims for the big indoor mete will begin at 4 o'clock and finals at 6:45. University athletic authorities are expecting the combination of attractions to draw a great crowd of fans.

The Monogram-Rookie tilt, which will close a 6-week period of intense work, which Coach Chuck Collins regards as the most successful winter practice held here, will give a pre-view of what the 1930 Tar Heel grid legion will be like.

The old stars—Nash, Branch, Farris, Lipscomb and the rest—will be carrying Monogram colors, pitted against Chandler, McNeill, Suggs, Croom, Daniels, McDade, Smith and all the other fine youngsters who aspire to 1930 posts.

The south's best trackmen, including world champions in Hamm of Georgia Tech and Flippin of Virginia, will compete in the big indoor track meet that night. Entries are already in from Virginia, Georgia Tech, Tulane, Georgia, South Carolina, and N. C. State and are swelling rapidly.

The Tar Heel wrestlers have a clean slate in the state, and a victory over Duke in tomorrow night's meet here would mean a state title. It would also rate Tar Heel chances of copping the first tournament with the best. The Tar Heels, headed by the undefeated 125-pounder Stallings and the star 175-pounder Ferguson, have lost but to V. M. I., and that was on the margin of two unusually close decisions that might will go another way in a second meeting.

University Undergoes Period Of Expansion Under Chase Regime

Woodburn Chase, who has been at the head of the institution for the last 10 years. University students of the future will probably refer to this remarkable period as the Chase Decade.

Found by Walker and Joyner

Credit must go to former President F. P. Venable and to N. W. Walker and J. Y. Joyner for bringing Dr. Chase to North Carolina. At the University commencement of 1910 the trustees voted to provide for an additional professor in the school of education. Dr. Venable, who was president then, authorized Professor Walker to look for a man to fill the job. The addition of a professor in those days was a real event, and Professor Walker was authorized to scour the country, if necessary to find the right man.

Walker evidently took the assignment pretty seriously, for he hied himself over to Raleigh and persuaded J. Y. Joyner, then State Superintendent of Public Instruction, to accompany him on this trip of exploration. The two went to Boston, ostensibly to attend the annual meeting of the National Education Association but actually to try to pick their man. There they met Dr. Chase, a native of Massachusetts and a graduate of Dartmouth, who was then teaching at Clark University, where he had won his doctorate. Right then and there ended the search for the new University professor. Walker and Joyner were both thoroughly sold on Chase, and their opinion was backed by the hearty endorsement of Dr. Herman Harrell Horne, a native Tar Heel of high repute in education, and by a number of other prominent educators. When Dr. Venable returned from Europe that summer he found the recommendation of Dr. Chase lying on his desk, and he immediately asked Professor Walker to wire the Massachusetts man to come to Chapel Hill.

Became Psychology Professor

Chase was given a full professorship and a salary of $2500. He went to work as professor of the philosophy of education. Two years later Dr. Horace Williams, the philosopher, asked young Chase to take over his class in psychology, and the newcomer readily agreed. Chase had won his doctorate in psychology.

During the Christmas holidays of his first year here Dr. Chase went to Indiana, and when he returned he was accompanied by a bride, the former Miss Lucetta Crum. Dr. Chase had been living with the Walkers, who treated him as a member of the family, and he and Mrs. Chase were members of the Walker household for the remainder of the year.

The death of Edward Kidder Graham forced Chase into the spotlight. During the trying war days of 1918 Graham let the state and the nation overload him. He was unquestionably a genius for administration, and during the four years that he had been president the University had attained a popularity with the people of the state and a national prestige that made the alumni thrill with a pride they had never known before. Graham was a demon for work, and he delegated few of his major tasks to the lesser lights of the campus. With the war came the S. A. T. C., requiring a complete reorganization of the University personnel and methods. Then Graham was asked to direct the Southeastern division of the S. A. T. C., and, although his friends feared the strain would be too much, he accepted. He worked long and late, and the strain began to tell. Then along came the influenza epidemic and killed him. He was as much of a war casualty as any soldier who died on the field of battle.

Thrust Into the Picture

The suddenness and untimeliness of Graham's death overwhelmed the campus with grief. Marvin Hendrix Stacy, then dean of the college of liberal arts, was appointed chairman of the faculty, and Dr. Chase was called from the school of education to take Dean Stacy's place. Then, just two months after the death of Dr. Graham, the same epidemic came along and killed off Dean Stacy. The double blow staggered the University. Two great leaders had fallen in a row, and the loss of both seemed irreparable.

Then into the picture came Chase, not voluntarily but pushed into it purely by dint of circumstances. When Chase was appointed dean nobody ever dreamed that Stacy would die so soon, and consequently nobody had seriously thought of Chase in connection with the presidency. But now the University had been thrust into another dilemma. Everybody knew Chase to be an excellent teacher, but he hadn't been tried as an administrator, and there was among some considerable skepticism as to how he would fit into this new capacity. The fact remained, however, that

John Efird, Soph, In Recital Tuesday

John Efird, sophomore at the University, will appear in a piano recital next Tuesday night at 8:30 o'clock in the lecture hall of the music building.

There will be no admission charge, the concert being one sponsored for the public by the University music department. Mr. Efird gave a similar recital last year, inaugurating student concerts given through the music department here.

Before coming to the University in the fall of 1928, Mr. Efird studied at the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore and the Fox School of Pianoforte Playing in Boston. As an enrolled member of the music department here last year, he proved himself one of the most talented musicians at the University.

The program to be given by Mr. Efird is one well representing the greatest and most well known piano composers, and one demanding a thorough knowledge of interpretation and a skillful technique on the part of the artist. Among those whose works will be represented are: Bach, Schubert, Schumann, Rachmaninoff, and Chopin.

It is hoped that the public will respond to the opportunity of hearing Mr. Efird in concert for the second time.

Philological Club Will Meet Tuesday

Dr. J. P. Harland announces that, at the next meeting of the Philological Club on Tuesday, March 4th, at 7:30 p. m., Dr. E. C. Metzenthin will lead in the discussion of the topic, "Goethe and America," after presenting his own view as that of an "unorthodox Goetheaner." The discussion of this topic is especially appropriate at the present time, since a number of American scholars are collaborating during this year in a standard work, to be published for the centenary of Goethe's death, on "Goethe and America," to which Dr. Metzenthin is to contribute an article on "Goethe and the Church," while Professor Foerster has been asked to contribute a chapter on "Goethe and Humanism." An interesting discussion is expected to follow the presentation of the "unorthodox view."

The Philological Club, which meets on the first Tuesday of every month, at 7:30 p. m., in the Graduate (Smith) building, cordially welcomes any member of the faculty and any graduate student who is interested in the special topic, even if he is not a member of the club. An invitation always goes to the Erasmus Club of Duke University, and usually a number of its members come over from Durham to the meetings of the Philological Club.

somebody had to be appointed to head up the faculty, and without delay. The net result was that the trustees took what many at that time considered a long chance and elected the 35-year old psychologist chairman of the faculty. That was in January, 1919. June of that year the trustees met in regular commencement session and elected the Damyankee president, upsetting predictions and smashing precedents in wholesale fashion.

Has Carried on Brilliantly

Dr. Chase took up where Ed Graham left off. Graham had foreseen the great educational expansion that was to take place in the decade immediately following the war and was laying the foundations for the important role that the University was to have in that development when he was stricken down. Dr Chase took up and carried on. And the way he has grown with his job and achieved for the University has amazed even those who had most confidence in him at the time of his election.

In 1921 came the great educational campaign that swept the state from Cherokee to Currituck. That campaign was inspired and directed from Chapel Hill. The result was a bond issue of $20,000,000 for permanent improvements and charitable and educational institutions to cover a six-year period.

The results are in evidence here today as on other campuses of the state. During his administration the resident student body has almost trebled in numbers. The six weeks' summer school has grown into a summer quarter of 12 weeks, and the enrollment has jumped from 800 to well over 2,000. There has been a tremendous increase in the number of extension students. In 1919 there were just 24. Today there are 35000. The total University enrollment for this year is approximately 8,000.

Big Increase in Support

When Dr. Chase took over the reins back in 1919-20 the University was getting $217,000 for maintenance and nothing for buildings and permanent improvements. A decade later the University was getting from the state legislature $880,000 for maintenance and $610,000 for permanent improvements (for the academic year 1928-29).

The physical expansion during the Chase decade has been equally remarkable. Eight dormitories for men and one for women have been erected. Saunders, Murphey, Manning, Venable and Bingham halls, all classroom and departmental structures, have been built. And finally the University Library, the largest and most beautiful building on the campus, has become a reality. The new library houses the largest book collection in the south this side of Texas. During this same period most of the old buildings on the campus have undergone a remodeling on the interior and have been made fire proof.

University Has 12 Divisions

The University of today is made up of 10 different schools and two other major divisions, the summer school and the extension division. The other seven schools, in addition to those mentioned above, are the college of liberal arts, the school of applied science, the schools of law, pharmacy and medicine, the graduate school and the school of education.

Under the Chase administration there has been a steady strengthening of the faculty and standards of these schools. Until after 1920 not over 40 graduate students had been registered in any one year. This year there are well over 200 graduate students (not including those in summer school), and they come from 80 institutions and from 20 states.

Important new enterprises have been undertaken during this 10-year period. Among them are the institute for research in social science and the University press. Both have gone forward rapidly in their development and now command national reputations.

Has National Reputation

The Chase policies have commanded the respect of leading educators throughout the country and have won for him the national reputation which he so richly deserves. As a result of his efforts the big foundations which make annual grants have come to regard the University as the strategic point of operation in this territory. Last year nearly $100,000 of the University budget came from grants from such foundations.

Recently Dr. Chase served as president of the National Association of State Universities, of which he had been secretary-treasurer for a number of years. His election to membership on the General Education Board, a Rockefeller Foundation, and to a directorship of the Julius Rosenwald Fund offer further testimony to the high regard in which he is held in the academic world.

Further evidence may be found in the fact that previously he had been offered the presidency of the University of Oregon, the University of Cincinnati, the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, and the Social Science Research Council of New York. And it is known that he came within a hair's breadth of being offered the presidencies of the University of Michigan and Ohio State.

For Intellectual Freedom

Dr. Chase has been virtually a crusader for the forces of intellectual freedom. His firm stand was largely instrumental in defeating the first anti-evolution bill in the state legislature of 1925. It also gave the University a new and far more respectable position in the national limelight.

"Freedom of thought and discussion," Dr. Chase has held, "is indispensable to intellectual Bolshevism, the one leading to truth, the other to license. Freedom, he has asserted, should always carry with it responsibility.

And now Chase is going to Illinois to become head of one of the half dozen largest universities in the country, an institution with a student body of around 13,000, a faculty of approximately 1500, and an annual maintenance fund of some over ten millions. The opportunity to work with an institution that occupies such a significant position in the future development of higher education was too tempting. Chase's departure will bring universal regret in North Carolina and throughout the South, but nobody will blame him for going. He has built in Chapel Hill an educational monument that will last. North Carolina's chief consolation in the loss is to be found in whatever pride she may take in the tribute paid her by Illinois.

Both Sides Satisfied With Results Of Opening Day Of Carolina Theatre Boycott

Student Movement For Reduction In Admission Price At Local Theatre Began Yesterday.

LEADERS ARE CONFIDENT

Proponents Of Boycott Express Confidence In Outcome Of Movement; Theatre Officials Say No Effect Of Operations Noticed In Attendance Yesterday.

The boycott of the Carolina theatre began yesterday following two week's work on the part of the backers. Complaints against the admission price of 40 cents at the local theatre took definite form two weeks ago when printed forms were circulated asking students to agree to boycott the theatre until prices were reduced to 30 cents.

Sunday night circulars were distributed throughout the dormitories and fraternity houses asking those who signed the agreement to stand by their word and not to be influenced by "the clever business schemes of Mr. Smith who is hoping to destroy this move by recently giving theatre parties and also by running a series of good pictures next week."

Proponents of the boycott stated last night that the results of the first day's operation were very satisfactory. George Davis, one of the leaders of the movement, said late last night that he was confident of securing a reduction in the admission price if those students who signed the agreement would stick by their words.

E. Carrington Smith, manager of the theatre, said yesterday afternoon that if the boycott existed box office receipts for the day failed to show it. Attendants at the theatre stated that attendance at the afternoon shows remained as expected.

Confidence that the boycott would succeed was expressed by those promoting it. They stated that it would be continued so long as the students desired a reduction in the prices and were willing to back up their desires by remaining away from the shows.

Chemical Engineers

The student chapter of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers announce that a meeting of the society will be held tonight in 201 Venable hall.

ENGINEERS TO LEAD SIGMA XI MEETING

Short talks by members of the faculty of the school of engineering will make up the program to be given at the meeting of Sigma Xi this evening at 6:15 at the Carolina Inn.

Following the custom of each department in presenting outlines of research work being conducted in the department, the school of engineering, which has charge of the program this evening, will present its research work through short talks by six faculty members.

Dean Braune, who will lead the program, will discuss recent work on pressure tests conducted on culvert pipe; T. F. Hickerson, professor of civil engineering, will tell of his work on the analysis of continuous beam and frame structure; H. G. Baity, who is in charge of the sanitary engineering work, will outline the work that has been done in that department on sewage; N. P. Bailey, instructor in aeronautics, will describe his research on the flow of air around air foils; R. M. Trimble, of the department of civil engineering, will speak of the work that has been done in testing a number of welded specimens; and Thorndike Saville, professor of hydraulic engineering, will describe researches in hydraulic and sanitary engineering.

The meeting this evening is one of the regular monthly supper meetings of the society. Those who expect to attend the meeting and have not yet notified the secretary are requested to do so as early today as is possible.

Spanish Bull Fight Will Feature Party

The Young People's Service League of the Episcopal church will give a party tonight at 8:30 in the parish house of the church. The entertainment will be featured by a "Spanish Bull Fight." There will also be dancing and special numbers.

Those attending the party are requested to wear "goofy" costumes; a prize will be awarded for the best costume. Refreshments will be served.

The members of the student body of the University as well as the members of the league are cordially invited to attend. There will be no admission charge. A special invitation has been extended to the young ladies of the University.

Senate Will Discuss Seven Bills Tonight

At the last meeting of the winter quarter tonight at 7:15 the Dialectic Senate will discuss the following bills in order:

RATAN DEVI TO APPEAR MARCH 6 IN SWAIN HALL

Costume Recital Of Folk Songs To Be Given Here In Swain Hall Under Auspices Entertainment Committee.

Ratan Devi will appear here March 6 in Swain hall at 8:30 in a costume recital of folk songs of the east and west, including Kashmiri folk songs and East Indian Ragas. The recital is the second number on the student entertainment program for this quarter.

Madame Devi has appeared at many of the largest universities in the country, such as Harvard, Columbia and Chicago; she has given recitals at such places as the National Arts Club in New York City, and the Fine Arts Club in Chicago. Everywhere she has been she has received most favorable press comments.

When she was in England, Bernard Shaw and William Butler Yeats hailed her singing as a revelation. She has been called the "solitary occidental of our generation who can interpret the musical genius of Hindustan." The singer possesses a very pleasing contralto voice, with the rich, warm tone to express the almost weird Indian melodies. Her programs are distinctive not only for unusual and previously unsung folk songs, but also because of the charming manner in which she presents them, according to her critics.

After Madame Devi finishes a series of English and Continental European folk songs, she puts on a Hindu costume: a scarf of the hue of the flesh of a fresh ripe mango fruit, splashed with rose, a rose-embroidered kurt skirt, and trousers worn by ladies of the Punjab. It is in this costume that she sings the great Ragas "with a skill worthy of a Hindu court minstrel's and an intelligence often surpassing his. . . . Ratan Devi portrays Indian music with a genuine India-consciousness."

REGISTRAR WILL MAIL REPORT TO LOCAL ADDRESS

All Undergraduate Students Will Receive Grade Announcements Before Their Final Registration.

The registrar's office is planning to deliver grade reports to the local mailing address of all students in the undergraduate divisions of the University, as well as the school of pharmacy and the graduate school, before the final registration date, March 22. With that purpose in mind, it is imperatively necessary to have correct addresses for all students concerned. Envelopes will be addressed from the registrations handed in at the beginning of the quarter. In quite a number of cases there are no addresses at all for the students, and in many other cases the mailing address has been changed since registration.

This service from the office will be facilitated and made decidedly more effective if each registrant will see to it that his proper mailing address is available. With the proper cooperation, the registrar's office is of the opinion that these reports can be delivered before March 22. They will, therefore, urge that every student let them have his correct address before Friday of this week if there has been any change since winter registration, or if no address was given.

Metzenthin To Discuss "Goethe And America"

An interesting topic will be discussed at the regular meeting of the Philological Club in the Smith building, according to Dr. J. P. Harland, president of the club.

Dr. Metzenthin will open a discussion on "Goethe and America" by presenting his unorthodox views on the question of Goethe's influence, past, present, and future, on America.

The meeting will begin at 7:30, as usual.

Article In Scribner's By E. W. Knight Defends Summer Schools

In Scribner's for March Professor Edgar W. Knight has an article entitled "Go to the Ant, Thou Sluggard" in which he defends the summer session of the American university and rebukes those who look upon the summer school with scorn. He points to the summer school as the symbol of an enterprise that has spread far beyond its original frontiers and now touches the educational life of the United States at a thousand intimate points, "for very few are the American schools, large or small, in which the appeal and influence of this educational agency have not penetrated."

The article points to the contrast between many students who attend the regular semesters and most of those in the summer session. The latter go about their work, Knight observes, "with intelligence, despatch, and industry. For genuine earnestness and depth of purpose few other students are so impressive. Few anywhere else show such eagerness for excellence and respect for thoroughness in their work or such capacity for sustained effort as those who kindle their torches every summer at this central flame.

"The goal for most of them is enlarged opportunity for educational and cultural growth and intellectual refreshment after months of routine and much arid monotony, and it seems to lie most directly through the summer session. They are not bothered with entrance examinations and irritating admission requirements exacted by the regular term which bewilder multitudes of its students and often shrivel the cheeks and whiten the hair of the registrar and age him before his time. The demands are so few and simple that summer session students can do quickly and comparatively easily the necessary chores of registration and get promptly to work. They are not confused by the president's speech or delayed by the dean's desire to lay on hands at the beginning of the session, nor are they later diverted or tyrannized by extra-curricular side shows and vaudeville. They are not exposed to collegiate traditions. There are no chapel exercises or pep meetings

Trustees Meet In Raleigh Today To Take Action On Selection Of New President

Full Meeting Of Board Will Consider Question Of Picking Successor To Dr. H. W. Chase.

SELECTION IS UNLIKELY

Support For Connor And Baity Developing; Some Trustees Want Immediate Action But Appointment Of Committee Probable.

The board of trustees of the University will meet this afternoon in Raleigh to consider the selection of a successor to Dr. H. W. Chase, resigned president. The resignation of Dr. Chase was announced three weeks ago simultaneously with the statement that he had accepted an offer to become president of the University of Illinois.

If precedent is followed, the board will appoint a committee to consider the qualifications of possibilities and to report at a later meeting, probably at the annual June meeting.

Several men have been proposed, with R. D. W. Connor, professor of government, and Frank Graham, professor of history, having strong support. However, last Friday Tyre C. Taylor, private secretary to Governor Gardner, announced that Mr. Graham had stated in a letter to the Governor that he did not wish his name considered. At the same time a movement proposing Dr. H. C. Baity, head of the civil engineering department here, was announced.

Several members of the board have suggested immediate action and announced their support of Mr. Connor, who was considered seriously eleven years ago at the time Dr. Chase was elected. At that time Mr. Connor was secretary of the state Historical Association and a member of the board of trustees. A ruling of the Attorney General that the trustees could not choose one of their own number prevented consideration of his name.

No action has been taken by the faculty in recommending a successor and none of the possibilities has made statements other than Mr. Graham in his letter to the Governor.

Education Notice

All juniors and seniors in the school of education who are majoring or minoring in the field of Mathematics are requested to call at once at No. 10, in the old library, and see C. E. McIntosh relative to their registration for the spring quarter.

TOTAL OF $224.50 IS RECEIVED FOR POOR

Contributions received over the week-end for the "Campus Relief Fund for Orange County Poor" swelled the total to $224.50. The $90 collected from the benefit motion picture performance given Sunday afternoon at the Carolina theatre brought the donations almost to the $200 mark, and the total of $40.50 received during the week-end resulted in the present sum.

Contributors over the week-end were Dr. and Mrs. R. W. Adams, T. B. Douglas, Jim Magner, Jack Lindley, E. C. Longest, A. V. Cole, "Bo" Shepard, George A. Long, Craig E. Wall, Thomas Rose, Jr., J. A. Hudson, Marion Alexander, Jr., J. J. Hutchinson, Glenn Holder, R. McD. Gray, Harry C. Finch, J. T. Manning and I. H. Manning. The largest single contribution that has yet been made came over the week-end from a graduate student who wishes his name withheld.

Contributions should be sent to Dr. L. M. Brooks, P. O. Box 747 or the Alumni building, or turned over personally to one of the members of the committee in charge of the fund. The committee is composed of Dr. L. M. Brooks, Louis Graves, Harry F. Comer, Ellis Fysal and Robert Hodges.

Carroll To Speak To Taylor Society

At the regular weekly meeting of the University student branch of the Taylor Society to be held this evening at 7 o'clock in the auditorium of Bingham hall, D. D. Carroll, dean of the school of commerce and economics, will speak on "Education for Business Leadership."

In his talk Dean Carroll will present his views on what constitutes a good education for one who wishes to become a leader in the field of business endeavor. He will discuss education under the two heads of education for the purpose of training one to earn a living efficiently and education for the purpose of learning how to enjoy life to the fullest extent.

These two phases of education have come to be recognized in recent years as essentials, and now greater importance is being attached to the latter. In keeping with this view, that education should train one to be able to enjoy life as well as to be able to earn a living efficiently, the school of commerce and economics now requires a large amount of liberal work in its curriculum.

As Dean Carroll is head of the branch of the University which is responsible for the training of those interested in taking up business as a career, his views on what constitutes a

Tar Heel Topics

Tardieu seems to be just what his name implies in forming his new cabinet.

Wonder what has become of all the optimists who told the world last week that spring had arrived?

"Moonshiner Flees" headlines the Tar Heel. A new variety of insect or merely a headwriter's brainstorm?

Evidently there are quite a few who don't take much stock in the economics of President Hoover's economy program.

A yachting party of New York millionaires report that they encountered a Rhinodontycus off the coast of Florida recently. Yep, the stock market crash and prohibition have pretty disastrous results sometimes.

What with freezing weather, the French and English governments almost on the rocks, the naval conference tottering, business on the blink and severe earthquakes reported in California, a fellow feels rather shaky after reading the newspapers these days.

All Eyes Focused On Raleigh Today

The attention of a considerable portion of North Carolina's populace, high brow, low brow and just ordinary people, will be attracted to Raleigh this morning when the University board of trustees meet to select a successor to President Chase, or at least ways and means of going about the business of selecting a successor. And it's a pretty tough assignment that they have before them.

Men most prominently mentioned for the vacated president's chair are Frank Graham, R. D. W. Connor, Dean Addison Hibbard, Archibald Henderson, C. T. McCormick and Dr. H. G. Baity. Present indications from this vantage point are that the next president will be one of these men. We believe that any one of them is capable of guiding the University through the most troublous of times in an eminently satisfactory manner. They have the executive ability, character and other intellectual and spiritual qualities required for the execution of one of the state's highest trusts. There are few reasons why the trustees should look beyond the University faculty ranks in their quest for a president, and these reasons, if any, are far outweighed by the factors of familiarity with the local situation, close contacts of many years with faculty and students, and the high respect that these men command from every member of the huge University body politic—alumni, students, faculty and employees.

Personally, we believe that Frank Graham embodies an unusual combination of energetic leadership, traits of character which compel affection and respect, and wise, tolerant but firm convictions. He has stated that he will not permit his name to go before the board of trustees; he has no ambition to ascend to the presidency. But he could hardly refuse to accept the responsibility if the board of trustees thrust it upon him.

Student sentiment is divided upon the question of which is the most desirable man for the presidency. Dr. Connor, Dean Hibbard, Professor Graham, Dr. Henderson, Dr. Baity and Dean McCormick all have a large and enthusiastic body of supporters.

Nearly everyone here has decided which man he prefers, and has expressed his views in private or in public. That is as it should be. Every student, in particular, should form his own opinion, and there is no reason in the world why he should not express it.

Reviewing For Comprehensive Exams.

During the past week many of those seniors having to take the comprehensive examinations given yesterday have been engaged in intensive review. Many have been "cramming" for weeks. Students majoring in economics have been reading religiously on the subject, and history students have been going over old notes as assiduously as if they were being confronted by a quiz of as specific nature as a regular two-weeks quiz in History One or Two. In fact, one particular senior we happen to know of made an attempt to go over all of his notes of the courses in his major and practically memorize them, supplementing this with much additional reading in the library.

If we undestand the purpose of the comprehensive examination correctly, it is designed to test the student's knowledge of his elected field after he has completed his study of it. If this is the case, then surely intensive review on the student's part defeats the purpose of the exam. What a student has really assimilated from his work if he attempts to "spot" the questions or to go over his work, looking for details, or to do a tremendous lot of reading, merely in preparation for the exam.

The only preparation should consist of the actual work involved in the courses. If a student cannot absorb enough from his courses to pass a test of as general nature as the comprehensive exam, then he should not be allowed to make special preparation for it. It seems to us that seniors should be warned against reviewing, if the experiment of the comprehensive examinations is to be successful.

Readers' Opinions

DEAN HIBBARD FOR THE PRESIDENCY

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

Considerable discussion has been heard on the merits of various men connected with the University who are eligible to the presidency of the institution. The names of R. D. W. Connor, and Frank Graham have been thrust into the arena of candidates with more impetus than those of any others.

Mr. Graham has already signified his intent to refuse the honor even should it be extended him. Mr. Connor is well qualified to assume the role of university administrator, but a considerable group of students feel that there is even a better candidate for the office, although he has never sought the place.

Professor Addison Hibbard, for eleven years a member of the faculty, and for several years dean of the College of Liberal Arts has demonstrated by his constructive program, creative ideas in educational practices, and executive ability in heading the arts college, the biggest college in the University, that he is fully the best qualified to fill the office.

Mr. Hibbard in the conducting of his classes and his official university duties has become the most outstanding faculty leader, interested primarily in student and university affairs. Largely due to his influence the recent rules of requiring seniors to pass a comprehensive examination on their major study, and for requiring the grade C for graduation on one-half of all undergraduate courses, thus exhibiting his desire to raise the standard of scholarship and to place the institution with those few which stand at the very top. On the other hand realizing that constant attendance on class becomes onerous and irritating to students of excellent calibre, he was in a large measure responsible for the introduction of the optional attendance for juniors and seniors.

For the past several years he has been engaged in research work upon modern tendencies of education in the universities of this country. His articles have appeared in the Outlook and other magazines from time to time and have been appreciated.

As a man of letters he has been responsible for The Lyric South and The Book of Poe. He is at present engaged in compiling an anthology of southern short stories. Due to his teaching experiences in Japan he has acquired a broad tolerant outlook and an intersectional background. On the other hand he has become in his residence here in the state one of the most enthusiastic and diligent southerners and North Carolinians.

Dave Carroll's idea of a Student Entertainment Committee with regularly scheduled events of the first rank, received its most hearty support from Dean Hibbard, who was and still is the the system's biggest support.

The past few presidents of the University have been selected from the faculty of the college of liberal arts and the Deanship of that school and we are of the opinion that should the trustees follow this precedent they would not err in choosing Dean Hibbard. We were prompted to write this communication only after we discovered that our opinion of Mr. Hibbard was also the opinion of practically every student whom we engaged in conversation with on the subject. We feel that the University requires a clear-headed, intellectual, and energetic man to succeed to the administration of President Chase. Hibbard is that man.

A FEW CRITICISMS OF THE ADMINISTRATION

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

May I take this privilege of using your "Readers' Opinions" column to offer a few criticisms that I think would be helpful to the administration of this University. Having come here as a new student, I have observed quite a few existing conditions which I think are anything but fair to the student body.

I refer first to the condition of the present laundry charges. When a student registers in the University, he is forced to pay a laundry deposit of $8.50. This sum must be able to stand up before the outrageous rates charged by the laundry, for a period of from two to three months. This sum is perfectly reasonable to pay when the charges are at all uniform, but, under such conditions as exist here this sum is entirely too small. Don't misunderstand me to say that I think that this sum should be raised. I only mean that the high and non-uniform rates should be lowered. For instance, to have a pair of B. V. D.'s laundered here, one must pay the sum of ten cents. On the other hand, only five cents is charged for the washing of a sheet. When the latter comes back, it is "spick and span," but when the underclothes are brought back in the laundry bundle one could not even tell that they had been to the laundry—they are so mussed up.

And another thing! When I registered the first part of this quarter, I wanted to pay room rent for only this quarter. No sir! I had to pay for two quarters at one time. It is true that this is cheaper than paying for each quarter separately, but, as the case is with me, I have come to the end of this quarter and desire to move to a room out in town. I go over to the South building fully expecting to be given a refund. Again—No sir!! I am told that I must sell the room myself, and that must even be done through the cashier's office. Suppose now that I am unable to sell my room, as the case is; then, I, who am already financially disabled, have to lose this rent in order that the State of North Carolina will not suffer. I ask you, fellow students, is this fair?

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for all this space, I will close, hoping that something will be done about these matters.

—A New Student.

Merely Meandering

john mebane

To our utter dismay we received the following last night by wire:

"Dear Merely Meandering:

It might be better for everyone concerned if you spent more time writing columns and less time writing sonnets. Your columns need attention."

* * *

To F. V. P.

You do not like my sonnets so you claim!
My sonnets are a part of me; I bring
My insides out and set my soul on flame
And with a loud and mighty voice I sing
In poetry of almost anything.
Dislike my verse? You are a saucy dame
To question merit and to dare to fling
Such impudent remarks at my good name!

Mayhap you don't know who I am, or who
My uncle Horace was or what he did.
Why, I shall build myself a pyramid
Of poetry, and from it pity you.
On what grounds do you think you may asperse,
Who cannot tell good poetry from verse?

I Am No Sonneteer

I am no sonneteer, though I may play
At writing poesy and tend my rhymes
Meticulously, change them many times
And polish meter carefully each day.
Alas! I am no sonneteer, I say.
Though I may sing of love and death and crimes
In many countries under many climes,
I am no sonneteer, to my dismay.

I am no sonneteer; will you believe
I am no sonneteer, or must I prove
My point to you? Alack! I cannot move
A single tear, or laughter, or relieve
The pent-up feelings. Must I persevere
To make you see I am no sonneteer?

Tommorrow

What will you say tomorrow when I go?—
You who have pledged your love, sworn to be true
Though I stay long, and when I come to you
Again on slow-returning feet, may show
Naught but a head that's greyed and hands that know
The savage pain of labor? . . . My adieu
I give reluctantly, for I pursue
But shady ghosts of hope that soon lose glow.

Tomorrow yill you think that love has changed
And lost the glamour only nights can give?
Tomorrow will our feelings be estranged
And will you hold the future tentative?
Or will you think our love is only blind?—
Think what you will—I, too, may change my mind.

* * *

Pain

O, lass, you think that you have loved before:
If you but knew what true love was, had felt
A flame curl round the heart and seek to melt
The frosted coldness lying at the core
Of every untried heart, you would know more
What real love is. Ah, if love should but pelt
Your heart with kind caresses, it had dealt
More harshly than you dreamed. One may restore
A broken china vase; but broken hearts
Must serve eternity nor ever think
Save in oblivion they may forget.
Real love is rare, but when it first imparts
A knowledge of itself, it tends to sink
All hope like stone. . . . I wish we'd never met.

PLANS FOR GLEE CLUB TRIP BECOME DEFINITE

Plans are rapidly becoming settled in regard to the trip to be made by the University Glee Club on March 6.

Letters were sent out through the Alumni Association in an effort to strengthen the finances required in order to attend the New York contest, and responses have been very encouraging. A very prominent alumnus of Asheville is mentioned among those who have materially assisted in raising the fund.

The previously announced schedule for the contest trip has been changed only slightly. Mr. W. A. Whitaker, an alumnus, has invited the club to dinner at the New York Athletic Club for Friday evening, March 7, which is the day preceding the contest at Carnegie hall.

University Wrestlers Capture State Championship By Defeating Duke Mat Team In Tin Can 24-8

Stallings, Tsumas And Cowper Win By Falls Over Blue Devil Opponents.

TWO DUKE MEN WIN

Captain Woodard, Moore And Ferguson Gain Time Decisions To Give Tar Heels First Wrestling Championship.

Showing a decided superiority in every match but the 115 and unlimited, the Carolina wrestlers defeated Duke here last night, 24-8, annexing the state title.

Carrying the fight from the start, Stallings, Tsumas and Cowper accounted for falls in the 125, 145 and 175-pound classes. Captain Woodard, Moore and Ferguson had goodly time decisions in the 135, 155 and 165-pound weights.

Gamble won Duke's first match in a close, hectic 115-pound fight.

Bryan accounted for a fall in the unlimited match with McKinney, feature of the evening, which turned into a rolling contest, with both men on top frequently, and with time margin about even when Bryan finally pinned his man after 8 minutes 57 seconds of fast wrestling.

Summary:

115 pounds—Gamble (D) defeated Usher, time decision, 1:56

125 pounds—Stallings (C) won fall from Gentry, 3:32.

135 pounds—Captain Woodard (C) defeated Hall, time decision, 7:58.

145 pounds—Tsumas (C) won fall from Harrell, 1:46.

155 pounds—Moore (C) defeated Lemmons, time decision, 4:56.

165 pounds—Ferguson (C) defeated Perry, time decision, 4:3.

175 pounds—Cowper (C) won fall from Adkins, 3:12.

Unlimited—Bryan (D) won fall from McKinney, 8:57.

Referee—Hesmers (V. M. I.).

FRATERNITIES WILL NOT HAVE PICTURES IN FURMAN ANNUAL

Fraternity pictures will not be carried in this year's Bonhomie, according to the action of the Pan-Hellenic council last Tuesday afternoon. Such action came as the result of a prolonged discussion of the present cost of pages in the Furman yearbook.

The cost of running fraternity pages in the Bonhomie for $40 per page is too expensive on the various social groups of the campus, it was pointed out by members of the council who were advocating the omission of all fraternity pictures. Two weeks ago it was unanimously voted by the inter-fraternity governing body to consult members of the Bonhomie staff in an effort to bring about a redistribution of funds, thereby making the cost of each campus organization considerably lower, but the committee appointed failed in its purpose. As a result the above action took place.

Just what the final outcome of the step taken by the Pan-Hellenic will be is only a matter of conjecture. Efforts are being made to secure partial payment for fraternity pictures from the school administration on the grounds that social clubs are a big asset to the school. At present there are approximately thirty pages of athletics carried in the Bonhomie free of charge, because such a section in the year-book is usually considered a big asset to Furman. Whether or not the fraternities will succeed in getting aid on the same basis is not yet known.

Allen-Goodridge Lose

Carolina's representatives lost in the finals of the Southern Conference boxing tournament held last night at the University of Virginia. The Tar Heels took fourth place in the tournament, with Florida first, V. M. I. second and Tulane third.

Captain Allen, lightweight champion last year, lost to Captain Rainey of Virginia in the welterweight division last night by a decision. Noah Goodridge, fighting in the lightweight division, lost for the second time this year to Captain O'Connell of Florida, also by a decision.

This was Captain Allen's last fight as a member of the Tar Heel boxing team. Goodridge is a junior.

Florida in winning took first in the 115 and 135 pound divisions and second in the middleweight class to score 13 points; V. M. I. won first in the 160 pound division and took two seconds to score 11 points; Tulane won first in the light heavy and heavy weights for third place.

BASEBALL SQUAD FORCED IN DOORS BY COLD WEATHER

Practice To Take Place In Tin Can During Cold Snap; Battery Candidates Working Under Hearn.

A cold bitter snap ended indefinitely the outdoor practice of Carolina's battery aspirants, and Coach Bunn Hearn was forced to order the candidates to the Tin Can where practice will be resumed until warmer weather. The coaches are taking no chances on lame arms and are taking every precaution to prevent this.

Although practice was called only a week ago, the players are all "het up" and are cutting loose in an effort to show Coaches Ashmore and Hearn that they belong on the varsity staff.

Fleming and Wright, two of last year's veterans, are showing up well. It is about these two men that Carolina will likely build its mound corps. Scarrboro and Johnson, two rookies, are also showing good form.

This year Carolina should have one of the greatest catching staffs in years. Captain Maus is still as brilliant as ever and the others are all showing good form. Probably the most outstanding catcher that is coming up this year is Bob Kushner, captain of last year's yearling nine. Kushner reported with the rest of the battery men and is going great now, and will probably do most of the reserve catching for Carolina. Potter is also showing up good now, and will push Kushner for second honors.

Although the call was for battery candidates, nearly all of last year's veterans reported and are whaling away at the ball. Lufty, Jackson and Sher have been sending the ball far and wide, sharpening up their eyes for the oncoming season.

TAR HEEL SPORTS EDITOR SELECTS ALL-STATE FIVE

Councillor, Werber, And Croson Of Duke Selected On Mythical Team.

MARPET ALSO CHOSEN

(By Roulhac Hamilton)

As far as actual play goes the basketball season is over, but no season can be properly called closed until the annual argument on the subject of All-State teams has been settled to the dissatisfaction of all concerned. We are well aware of the futility of selecting such a team, but we are reliably informed that such a task is expected of us. So, with many misgivings, we put forth our views on the subject.

The 1930 season failed to produce the usual crop of more or less brilliant basketeers that fans are accustomed to associate with North Carolina. Instead of spending most of our time wondering which of two players to give preference to, we sometimes find ourselves wondering whether or not there are ten men in the state worthy of an All-State rating.

In filling the forward positions four men seem worthy of consideration. "Chalky" Councillor, Duke, and Jimmy Brown, State, are the spark plugs of their respective organizations and have flashed brilliantly throughout the season. They are given the first team berths over Pritchett, Davidson, and Haar, State. Pritchett is a consistent, steady player who has shown up well throughout the season. Haar has not shown up as well this season as might have been expected from his last season's performance, but is undoubtedly one of the best forwards in the state.

The year has been exceptionally bad for centers. Only one man can possibly be called outstanding. Croson of Duke has been one of the main cogs in his team all season and is one of the outstanding centers in the south. He gets the first team rating. The battle for the second position is between three men: Harper, Carolina; Johnston, Davidson, and Morgan, State. There is little to choose from among the three, but Johnston's work seems to have been a shade more consistent during the season, and he is given the place.

The guard positions gave less trouble than other places on the team. Bill Werber of Duke, prominently mentioned for All-Southern, is rated over all the other guards in the state and is given one position. Artie Marpet of Carolina, Farley of Duke, and Johnson of State gave much thought in selecting the fifth member of the quint. The position went to Marpet because of his record which was established in the face of the handicap of playing on a mediocre team and the fact that his play seemed to improve in proportion to the difficulty of the game. Johnson and Farley are given second team positions.

Duke, with three men on the first team and one on the second leads in the selection. State, placing a total of three, one on the first and two on the second, follows in the picking and Davidson, with two on the second team comes next. Carolina, with a lone representative on the first team completes the list.

The teams:

First		Second
	Left Forward
Councillor (Duke)		Pritchett (Davidson)
	Right Forward
Brown (State)		Haar (State)
	Center
Croson		Johnston
(Duke)		(Davidson)
	Left Guard
Werber (Duke)		Johnson (State)
	Right Guard
Marpet (Carolina)		Farley (Duke)

Ten Conference Teams Will Enter Indoor Meet Saturday

Twenty Gold Medals To Be Awarded To Best Players In Each Department Of Play; Fetzer Coaching Monograms.

FORMER STARS JUDGES

Brilliant Field To Compete In First Conference Indoor Contest.

Ten Southern Conference institutions will vie for honors in the first Southern Conference Indoor Games, to be held in the Tin Can March 8, it was learned today, with final check of entries.

The ten institutions are Maryland, Washington and Lee, Tulane, Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia Tech, Georgia, N. C. State, Duke and North Carolina.

The field will be almost as large as that which competed in last year's Southern Conference championship outdoor meet. With the calibre of such individual entries as Hamm, Flippin, Armstrong, DeColigny, Simon, Young, Sandifer, Quinn, Farmer, and so on more than equalling the number, the first indoor championship should go over with a bang.

Events open to all Southern prep, high school and freshman athletes will draw hundreds more performers, so that track lovers attending will easily see the greatest indoor track meet ever staged South of the Mason and Dixon .

An extra attraction for those attending will be the Monogram-Rookie football battle, annual closing feature of Tar Heel Winter grid seasons, scheduled for 2 o'clock, prior to beginning of preliminaries at 4 o'clock.

Washington and Lee, one of the last teams entering, will send a delegation of 23 men, entered for all 12 varsity events, and headed by the Generals' Southern Conference championship mile-relay team, and by such individual stars as Sandifer in the dashes and jumps, Speer in the hurdles, Dickey and Broderick in the middle distances, and Pomeroy in the vault.

Duke, another late entry, will send 21 men for all events but the broad jump, boasting such stars as the jack-of-all-trades Freeman for the dashes, hurdles and high jump, Turner for the pole vault, and Simon and Heizer for the two mile.

Maryland will send a delegation of five, headed by Captain Quinn, who placed third in the sprints at the recent Meadowbrook Games, and ran the Tar Heels' sensational sophomore Farmer a great race for second in the sprints at Virginia's recent invitational indoor meet.

Cold Weather Hinders University Golf Team

Although the golf team had hoped to have a tournament this week to decide who is to play when it meets State College March 28, cold weather will likely cause it to be postponed. The team is practicing as much as possible on the links and in the Tin Can. If weather improves enough this week, the tournament will be held in a few days. If not, it will be held as soon after the spring holidays as possible.

Y Deputation Team Has Three More Trips

Three more cities still remain on the program of the Y deputation team for the remainder of this year. The last trip that the team made was to Fayetteville some two weeks ago.

The second trip of the team will be made to Charlotte Thursday, March 6. This time, however, the team is to be composed of only one man, H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y. Mr. Comer will leave here Thursday in time to arrive in Charlotte for a "Father and Son" banquet that night to be given by the Hi-Y club. It is under the auspices of this club that Mr. Comer is making the trip. Friday will be taken up with meetings with different groups of high school boys.

A trip to Rocky Mount, to take place the last week-end in March, will be the next number on the team's program. On this trip the regular team, composed of two or three speakers and the quartet, will render the programs.

On April 18 the team will make a trip to Wilmington to deliver a series of programs over the week-end. This trip is, at present, the last one on the team's program, but other dates will probably be made before the end of next quarter.

Efird To Give Second Piano Recital Tonight

John Efird, sophomore of Monroe, will give a piano recital tonight at 8:30. As last year, when he appeared for the first time, the concert will be given in the lecture room of Person hall and will be free of charge.

Mr. Efird's program will consist of the following: John Sebastian Bach's Preludio and Fuga in B Flat Major; his Fifth French Suite consisting of Allemande, Courante, Sarabande, Gavotte, and Gigue; Schubert's Impromptu in A Flat; Mokreje's Valcek; Schumann's Novellette in F; Rachmaninoff's Prelude in G Sharp Minor; and the following works of Chopin: Butterfly Etude, Revolutionary Etude, Etude in E Minor Op. 25 No. 5, Etude in C Major Op. 10 No. 7, and Valse in E Minor.

This was one of a series of such visits that Mr. Hollett makes every year to keep in touch with the employers who use University students in their regular work.

Carroll To Speak To Taylor Society

proper training for business leadership should be very interesting.

As was announced several days ago the meetings of the Taylor Society are open to the public, and again this week the officers extend an invitation to the student body to hear the speaker of the evening.

Dean Carroll is the last of a series of six faculty speakers who are delivering lectures before the society on subjects related to business management. During the quarter the group has already heard W. F. Ferger, H. D. Wolf, C. T. Murchison, E. D. Strong and Malcom D. Taylor, all members of the University faculty.

The program for the meetings of next quarter has not been definitely chosen, but it is to include the presentation of several papers by student members of the society as well as talks by some prominent outside speakers. The society hopes to be able to present to the campus next quarter talks by several men who are prominently connected with scientific business management.

Symphony Orchestra Has Large Audience

About one thousand Southern Pines inhabitants attended the concert given by the University orchestra for the platform hour at the Church of Wide Fellowship last Sunday night.

At least 50 people made the trip from Chapel Hill, several not connected with the orchestra going just to hear the renditions.

The two solos given by Mrs. G. Richard Trott, soprano, were well received, and the presentation of Haydn's Surprise Symphony by the orchestra seemed to be particularly liked by the audience.

Benefit Show Nets Relief Fund $90.00

The benefit showing at the Carolina theatre Sunday afternoon of "The Love Doctor" netted the Orange County Poor Fund a total of $90. The picture was presented free under the auspices of E. Carrington Smith, manager of the theatre, and the Chapel Hill Rotary club. The money was turned over to George Lawrence, treasurer of the relief fund.

for them to attend, no yells to practice, no campus politics to participate in, no campus orator to applaud, no oldest graduate to listen to, no fraternity rushing season to endure, no make-up examinations to take, no falderal to chant, no college spirit to cultivate, no founders' day to observe, no graduating exercises to celebrate, no alumni secretaries to listen to or to receive letters from, and few other forms of academic whoopee to indulge in. Summer school students are remarkably safe from most of the collegiate bacilli.

"Those who teach in the summer session are likewise protected more thoroughly from collegiate viruses than those who serve in the regular term. They have no faculty meetings to attend, no long reports to make or to hear read on such subjects as athletics, fraternities, musical and dramatic organizations, dances, student health, sanitation, and mortality, honorary degrees, holidays, pensions in arrears, the living conditions of the faculty, the honor system, or university sermons. There are no delinquent students to nurse and no soft pedagogy to practice. There are no parades to march in, no voting to do on scholarships to deserving athletes or on honorary degrees to undeserving politicians, no petitions for changes in students' programs, and no obscene student publications to suppress. The teachers in the summer session are annoyed neither by freshmen week nor weak freshmen, nor by sentimentalists who so often enjoy themselves by weeping over the erring ones. And both students and teachers in the summer session are free also from those stupid institutional loyalties which sometimes betray trustees, presidents and faculty, students and alumni, and inordinately proud patrons of many American colleges and universities into the dangerous and practical fallacies of looking upon their particular institutions as ends in themselves. It is very fortunate, therefore, for students, faculty, the public, and particularly for the cause of education that the summer session lacks the usual academic traditions and other combinations in restraint of education. For if it had traditions, they would very likely be had.

"The teachers in a first-class summer session are the best that the institution can recruit from its own staff and from sister universities. Some of them are engaged from one to two years in advance. And as in the case of insurance agents or morticians in Rotary International, summer session instructors profit most who serve best. Nowhere are the incompetent, unskillful, and sympathetic ones more fully appreciated by really discriminating students; and nowhere are the incompentent, unskillful, and unsympathetic instructors so certainly shunned as in the summer session, no matter how methodically correct their materials and methods. Presumably the summer school student had enough of the latter kind of teachers in required, dogmatic, and sterile courses back in dear old alma mater in his callow and indifferent days even when another paid his fees. But conditions are different now. The courses are generally elective and the student is paying his own way, and he looks cautiously for what he wants or thinks he wants, seeks out the spirited and inspiriting, the genial and flavorsome teachers, and on these he generally places his bets. The teacher who is myopic and faltering finds himself lonelier in a first class summer session than a college widow beyond the draft age at a debutante ball."

PLAYMAKERS TO PRESENT FIFTH BILL OF SEASON

Program Of Four One-Act Plays To Be Given In Little Theatre Thursday, Friday, And Saturday Nights.

The Carolina Playmakers will present their fifth program of the season, a bill of four new one-act plays, Thursday evening at 8:30 in the Playmaker theatre. The performance will be repeated Friday and Saturday.

The plays to be presented are: For Auntie's Sake, a college comedy by John Patric; Hollyhocks, a New England folk-play by Joseph Fox; Suspended Animation, a comedy by Kent Creuser; and Death Valley Scotty, a California folk-play by Milton Wood.

All of these are "first plays." The authors have developed material gathered from localities with which they are familiar. Joe Fox, the author of Hollyhocks, comes from Massachusets. Milton Wood, who bases his play Death Valley Scotty on a California legend, comes from that state. Kent Creuser's play deals with the difficulties of a student in the playwriting course here at the University, in which course he is enrolled himself. John Patric's play is centered about the efforts of a college boy to "make a hit" with a co-ed.

Writing for the play program, Professor Frederick Koch says regarding For Auntie's Sake, "The incident seems suspiciously autobiographic, although the author insists that the character of the charming, but not too intelligent, co-ed is none of his acquaintance." Of Hollyhocks he says, "It is an authentic play of New England village-folk. But for her relentless Puritan conscience, Millie's lot would still be cast with the hollyhocks of her country garden. But the specter of divorce was unrelenting. As Grannie says, 'It is not a question of money or of what the village-folk would say, but of what's right and what's wrong'."

Of Suspended Animation Professor Koch says in writing for the program, "Here is a true episode in the frenzied struggle of the student in English 31 in writing his first play. The author vouches for the reality of the scene . . . his own room . . . and the 'bull session,' from 6:30 one evening to 8 o'clock the next morning out of which the idea came. The characters are enacted by the actual participants in the original 'bull session.' The sandwiches were good, the coffee hot, and the conversation spirited. But the idea of Suspended Animation did not come to the author until the ghastly hour of 5 o'clock in the morning."

The scene of Death Valley Scotty is laid in the famous California desert. Professor Koch states, "The author, Milton Wood, vividly records for us his own impressions of that mysterious figure who has been there so long that the oldest prospector of the region can only say of him: 'Scotty was thar when I come'."

Casts for the plays follow: For Auntie's Sake — Penelope Brown, Lottie Frances Mays; and Fred Barrett, John Patric.

Hollyhocks — Elizabeth Foster, Irene Fussler; Millie, Nettina Strobach; Paul, Bobby

Many People Attend John Efird Recital

Last night John Efird, sophomore at the University, appeared before a large audience of Chapel Hill residents in a piano recital at Person hall.

The well received program was the second presented here by Mr. Efird since attending the University. Representing the best of piano music, it was divided into two parts.

Comprising the first division was the Preludio with Fuga in B Flat Major and Fifth French Suite by Bach; Impromptu in A Flat Major by Schubert; and Valcek by Mokrejs.

In the second division Mr. Egrd began with Novelette in F by Schumann and then Prelude in G Sharp Minor by Rachmaninoff, finishing the well planned program with four famous Etudes and the Valse in E Minor by Chopin.

The music department hopes to stimulate interest in student programs, and a concert such as that of last night is encouraging toward this enterprise.

Bibliography Posted For Use Of Debaters

According to information secured from the secretary of the debate council, the bibliography on "Resolved: That the chain store system in its present form is detrimental" has been posted in the reserve room of the library. It is also posted on the bulletin board on the second floor of Murphey hall.

The question of the chain store is the one which will be used in the Carolina-Northwestern debate of April 15. The debate squad will hold the first discussion of this question Thursday night. Dr. Taylor will deliver a lecture on the subject.

All students who expect to compete for a berth on the team must be present at the meeting Thursday night.

Math Seminar Today

M. A. Hill, instructor in mathematics, will present the second of two papers on the Correlation Theory at the meeting of the mathematics seminar this afternoon.

The paper Mr. Hill will present this afternoon is "The Normal Frequency Method," one of the two methods of the correlation theory.

FROSH ENGINEER NOTICE

Freshman engineering students will not attend the usual Wednesday noon meeting today because no speaker has been obtained to continue the series of orientation and motivation talks that have been given weekly during the past quarter.

Davis To Give Talk To Wm. Cain Society

C. R. Davis of New York, a senior in the school of engineering, will speak on "The Westchester County Park System" at the meeting of the William Cain student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers tomorrow evening at 7:30 in Phillips hall.

The lecture to be given by Mr. Davis is one of a series of three illustrated talks that have been prepared by the national office of the A. S. C. E. for presentation by students at the meetings of the student branches of the organization.

In the lecture Mr. Davis will tell about the development of the park system of Westchester county, New York. This park system contains over 448 square miles lying between the Hudson river and Long Island sound. Within the area in which the parks are located lie the cities of White Plains, Yonkers, Mount Vernon and New Rochelle.

The meeting Thursday evening is the last meeting of the William Cain society this quarter. At this time the question of an open house for the school of engineering may be taken up.

Whites Feature Court

An unexciting session of Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Monday morning was characterized by the fact that for the second time since the establishment of the institution nearly a year ago, there were no charges against negroes.

J. M. Davis, 22, white, charged with having passed a worthless check for $4.80 on April 20, 1928, upon Sol Lipman, pleaded "not guilty," claiming that he gave the check to Lipman with the proviso that it was not to be cashed immediately.

Judge Hinshaw believed, however, that Davis was guilty: "Two months at hard labor on the county roads," he said to Davis, who looked up in great alarm. "Sentence to be suspended upon payment of the check and casts of the case."

Davis was willing to pay the check, but balked at "the casts," preferring to take chances with the mercies of a higher court. He gave notice of appeal.

Senior Notice

H. A. Bargeon, representative of the S. H. Kress and Company, will be in Chapel Hill this morning to interview seniors who are interested in making a connection with this organization. Any men who would like to talk with Mr. Bargeon concerning employment are invited to get in touch at once with Henry Johnston at 204 South building.

Chase Signs Cablegram To Naval Parley

Dr. Chase, retiring University president, was among the 1200 signers of the cablegram sent to the American delegates at the Naval Conference in London urging "reduction and not merely limitation of armaments." The cablegram reminded the American representatives of the Kellog-Briand Peace Pact and of President Hoover's statement in his Armistice Day address in which he stated that America was ready to reduce its armaments when the European nations were ready to do so.

The cablegram was prepared and the signatures of 1200 prominent men and women from all parts of the United States secured within 72 hours. The colossal undertaking was directed by Ralmond B. Fosdick, Professor James T. Shotwell of Columbia University, James G. McDonald, director of the Foreign Policy Association, and Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt.

Other prominent signers from this state were Josephus Daniels, President W. P. Few of Duke University, President F. P. Gaines of Wake Forest, Howard Rondthaler, president of Salem College, S. B. Turrentine, president of Greensboro College, and R. P. Binsford, president of Guilford College.

Two Young Men Held For Alleged Theft

William Roberts, 18, and Denzil King, 19, who claim Durham as their residence, together with Paul Prince, 25, a traveling salesman, appeared before the local Recorder's Court Monday morning to answer a charge of larceny of a suitcase containing clothing worth $100, from Tommy's Tavern on the Durham road during the course of a dance late in February.

Roberts and King claimed to have found the suitcase by the roadside. They were walking toward Durham, they said, and were picked up by Prince, driving his car, to whom they told their story of finding the case. The contents were divided between the three.

No probable cause was found in the case of Prince, there having been no evidence of his participation in the theft, nor of guilty knowledge. Roberts and King, however, each posted bond of $300 to insure their appearance at the March term of the Hillsboro court, to which they were bound over.

A. nominating committee, which consists of the senior members of the present cabinet and the employed staff, announces the following official nominations: for president, Ed Hamer; for vice-president, Joe Eagles, I. H. Manning and Claude Farrell; for treasurer, F. M. James and K. C. Ramsay; for secretary, Harry Finch, Sam Gorham, J. E. Dungan and John Miller.

University Trustees Pick Committee To Investigate Presidential Possibilities

Group To Report On Suggested Persons For President At Call Meeting Of Full Board.

CHASE IS VOTED DEGREE

University Trustees Hold Meeting In Raleigh With Eighty-One Of Hundred Members Present; Congratulates Illinois.

(By Will Yarborough)

With the largest number of members to attend a meeting since Dr. H. W. Chase was elected president eleven years ago, the board of trustees of the University met in Raleigh yesterday morning to consider the selection of a man to succeed Dr. Chase. Eighty-one of the one hundred members were on hand for the meeting. The appointment of a committee of [illegible] to consider the field of poss[illegible] was the major action taken at the two-hour session yesterday morning.

The board met in the Hall of the House of Representatives with Governor Max Gardner, ex-officio chairman, presiding, at 11 o'clock yesterday morning. It was decided to follow the procedure adopted when a successor to Edward Kidder Graham was elected: the selection of a committee to consider the fitness of those suggested for the presidency. Alexander H. Graham of Hillsboro, Judge John J. Parker of Charlotte, Leslie Weil of Goldsboro, Charles Whedbee of Hertford and Stahle Linn of Salisbury were named on this committee. It will not nominate or select a man but will only report on the fitness of persons suggested at a call meeting of the full board later. It is said that this meeting will likely occur sometime in April.

Resolutions of regret over the resignation of Dr. Chase will be drawn up by a committee composed of Judge Francis D. Winston of Hertford, Walter Murphy of Salisbury, Judge J. Crawford Biggs of Raleigh, Josephus Daniels of Raleigh, and U. S. Representative C. A. Jonas of Lincolnton.

Other action of the board consisted of voting unanimously to confer the degree of Doctor of Laws on Dr. Chase. Governor Gardner was instructed on motion by Josephus Daniels, editor of the News and Observer, to wire the University of Illinois congratulations on securing Dr. Chase as president and an expression of regret that he is to leave the state.

The list of possibilities has steadily grown since the announcement of Dr. Chase's resignation as president. Professors Frank Graham and R. D. W. Connor were prominent among those first suggested. However, Mr. Graham in a letter to the Governor asked that his name be withheld from consideration. Others mentioned prominently in Raleigh yesterday were Chief Justice W. P. Stacy of the State Supreme Court, Associate Justice W. J. Brodgen of Durham, Dr. Ben R. Lacy, Dean Addison Hibbard and Dr. Archibald Henderson.

It has not been learned whether the faculty will make a recommendation or not. Up to the present student sentiment has not crystallized in favor of any particular person.

Junior Smoker Friday

Artie Marpet, vice-president of the Junior class, announces that the regular class smoker for the winter quarter will be held in Swain hall Friday night at 9 o'clock. General Albert L. Cox of Raleigh, former commander of the State American Legion and prominent attorney, will speak.

Both Literary Societies Lay Plans For Coming Quarter In Executive Sessions.

Officers for the spring quarter were elected by the Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Assembly in executive sessions held last night. T. B. Rector will be president of the senate, and G. P. Carr was chosen speaker of the assembly.

RECTOR DI PRESIDENT

In the regular executive session for the winter quarter last night, the Dialectic Senate elected the following men to offices for the spring quarter: C. A. Shreve, president pro-tem; J. M. Little, critic; K. C. Ramsay, clerk; McB. Fleming-Jones, sergeant-at-arms. The president for the spring quarter, Beatty Beatty Rector, had been elected at the last executive session.

The president appointed Senator K. C. Ramsay to confer with a committee from the Phi Assembly with regard to the Bingham debate.

The Philanthropic Assembly held its regular quarterly election of officers last night. The officers elected were: speaker pro-tem, Representative Haywood; sergeant-at-arms, Representative Baldwin; reading clerk, Representative Whedbee; assistant treasurer, Representative Ferguson; ways and means committee, Representatives Speight, chairman, Hobgood and Yarborough. Paul Carr was elected speaker for the coming quarter at an earlier meeting. John A. Lang, retiring speaker, was given a unanimous rising vote of thanks for his work as speaker for the winter quarter. Speaker Lang, in a short address, made five recommendations for the continued progress of the society. He read an honor roll of members whom he considered outstanding in their work for the good of the society.

Five students—J. A. Hudson, Norman Woodard, Wilbur Blackman, Charles Wrenn and Charles Forbes—were initiated at the meeting. Representative Speight made an announcement concerning the formation of a pre-law club. Refreshments for the members were served at the close of the meeting.

The State Scores In The Wiggins Trial

When the state rested its case in Mecklenburg Superior court Monday afternoon against the five Gastonia men charged with the murder of Mrs. Ella May Wiggins last September, it had presented a formidable array of evidence. The defense must offer some weighty testimony if it is to clear the defendants, particularly Horace Wheelus.

Fortunately the sort of legal charlatanism and emotionalism exhibited by the prosecution in the Aderholt murder trial last fall has been absent from the proceedings against the men accused of slaying Mrs. Wiggins. No dummies of murdered people have been introduced in the courtroom, nor has the prosecution tearfully pleaded for vengrance against monstrous fiends in human form who go about the country murdering law-abiding citizens. With nation-wide attention centered upon the Aderholt trial last fall, North Carolina received, and deserved, the opprobium of the press and the public for the manner in which its solicitors conducted the prosecution.

Probably the most dramatic moment of the Wiggins trial occurred Monday afternoon when Mrs. Noah Ledford and her husband furnished damaging evidence against their former next door neighbor, Horace Wheelus. In substance their testimony is that Wheelus came to them during the investigation of the affair by Judge McElroy last November, and requested that they establish an alibi for him by swearing that he was at home at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of September 14, when the striking Bessemer City textile worker was shot. Mrs. Ledford refused to "swear a lie for him or anyone else. I told him that I would swear the truth if he wanted me to go to court; that he left home at 10 o'clock on the morning of the killing. He said: "Hell, if that's all you can swear, you can stay at home."

Noah Ledford testified that their two sons, 17 and 19 years of age, had been working at the textile mill. When his wife refused to establish an alibi for Wheelus, the boys were "cut off" from work.

The testimony of the Ledfords reflects seriously upon the operators of the mill in question. Nothing could be more damnable than the discharging of employees because they will not shield criminals whom the management wishes to protect. An ugly taint of suspicion has been cast upon the mill owners as well as Wheelus.

If the defense does not conclusively refute the testimony of the Ledfords, its case will be materially weakened, as far as public opinion is concerned.

The Present Plight Of Debating at Carolina

To one attending the debate Friday night in Gerrard hall it seemed that the pitifully small audience was well deserved; we do not mean that the boys who debated last night were worse than the usual run of Carolina debaters, but they are the victims of the American system, and this system is receiving its just rewards. As a contrast to the very small crowd last night, numbering not over fifteen outside of the debating class which had to attend as part of its work, we thought of the reception given the English women debaters here a year ago when Memorial hall was almost filled with students, faculty members, and townspeople. Then we began comparing the two systems of debating, and came to the conclusion that the audience was quite right in going to hear the English debaters, while staying away from the other debates.

All the debates we have ever heard delivered by Carolina men or an yother American team for that matter have been of the bombastic, didactic, and assumed manner type of oratory. Each speech follows the same outline; each speaker uses the same cut and dried phrases. Every one starts off, "It is my firm belief that so and so is true and in support of these contentions I cite these authorities." Following this a long list of dry statistics and drier opinions are cited. In the end we have "conclusive proof that the resultant of this contention is undeniably right and justified." The whole matter is a very serious and solemn performance; with the utmost seriousness and gravity the speaker proclaims that, "It is our firm conviction that America is unalterably right and can never be changed from her righteous and mighty policy." Throughout the whole there is never any relief from the overpowering monotony of the serious business, never a joke, a wisecrack, or a witty remark. The stiff manner of the declamatory speakers and the entire emphasis upon convincing either the audience or the judges that they are right makes the American system of debating very unattractive and certainly unentertaining to the audience.

But the English speakers approach the subject of debating from an entirely different angle. They have no pre-conceived idea that they must conceive any one of any "contentions" or establish any sound "resultants." Their idea is to furnish the audience an intelligent and entertaining discussion of the subject in hand. They take their mission not quite so seriously as the Americans and appear in a more affable and pleasing manner. Wit is the chief implement of attack; they never miss an opportunity to get off a good joke or pull a witty remark The evening should be enjoyable, they think, both for the audience and the speakers, and to this end they prepare their speeches and direct their efforts.

Interest in debating at Carolina is at a low ebb, although probably not as low as last year. Before the coaches or speakers can hope to stir up any great interest or have an appreciable sized audience, they must change their methods; they must abolish the old style of bombastic oratory, and substitute a more human, a more entertaining, a more modern type of speaking. Under the present system no member of the audience derives any amount of pleasure from the debates, and certainly debating is a form of entertainment. When the debates furnish a pleasant evening's entertainment, when there is a more enjoyable type of debating instituted, and when the listener is made to feel that he is getting the worth of his time in entertainment, then we may expect debating to become popular and the debates to draw large crowds. Not until the debate can be made a good "show" as well as a statistical performance, will it gain a well deserved popularity.—J. D. McN.

Readers' Opinions

THE "CITY FATHERS"

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

To date there has been much said about this wonderful addition which our noble "city fathers" have annexed to their famous Bumming Ordinance now one year old. There can be no doubt that nation fame will result from such sagacity if our "city fathers" will only continue their pursuit. God knows publicity is due some one for such a thing and we heartily recommend our "city fathers" for the lime light. But pardon, gentles all; we also give due credit to the wives of these deep-minded aldermen, for they no doubt combined their intellect with that of our "city fathers" and from that combination was born this famous act. If they would condescend to indulge in such ignominious hallucinations as listening to the prattle of an humble child, we suggest that the aldermen and their wives hold office alternately. We suggest a change yearly. Following this schedule, it might be possible to eliminate such enactments as the one now under discussion. The men while holding office would refrain from passing many laws because the women would repeal them when they came in. This would make everything hotsy-totsy! Before I close this paragraph and reveal some more sagacity of our "city fathers," I will summarize what I have said in the following sentence: In case you have not caught the point, dear "city fathers," we just don't give a damn for such ordinances. Now is that much clear? All right.

Next in order in this discussion is the wonderful friendly relationship that exists between the University and the city. Now it is perfectly natural that we should love our "city fathers." Everyone will admit that, but the point is this: To what advantage is this love? There is a cop on every corner to spit his burley at the children when they blink the wrong eye first. They fined a man the other day for honoring an alderman's wife by calling her Mayor! (I don't blame her for raising cane though. I wouldn't have that put on me either.) They parade old Franklin prouder than a brigade marching down Pennsylvania avenue. So we have concluded that if cohorts of "smiling" cops and feminine rule and 40c shows and bumming ordinances are the result of such paternal love, we are sick of love. The point is, if you have not caught it, we do not give a damn for such love. Is that clear? All right.

In conclusion we are forced to add that our "city fathers" are honorable fathers, and that their wives are . . . that their wives are their wives. And being a good child, I am going to tell my fathers a little secret so they will be forewarned and their wives can be forearmed. Sh-h-h! Here it is: I've been told that the students are planning to start a pajama fad around here in the spring for summer wear. Now I have told you, my fathers, so you had better call your wives into consultation and usher out an ordinance making it a capital crime to appear in public so indecently clad. I'm with you on that score because pajamas make me blush so much I don't even wear them myself. Now how is that for modesty? I don't know what this world is coming to anyway! So my dear fathers, let us get together on this thing, and put a stop to it. Yours for bigger and better Ordinances.

JIMMY VALENTINE.

MR. HAMILTON AND HIS COLUMN

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Although he states that it is not the policy of his column to dispute the policies of any coach, Mr. Hamilton does just that in his column in the Thursday issue—that is, if his statements regarding the football-winter sports situation is correct. I do not think that he has any right to project his nose into something that concerns the coaches—let them settle it among themselves.

I also think, since he admits that football is the most important sport, that he is wrong in resenting the situation which he says exists. If football is the most important sport why should it not be given preference over all the sports.

And Mr. Hamilton speaks loudly of his definite knowledge on the subject of the basketball players and the lone wrestler who were given their orders on the subject. As far as I know there is no member of either team who is a very good football player. Why should any coach want to bother with these men?

In my opinion, Mr. Hamilton is getting all hot and bothered over something that don't amount to much.

SELF-HELP MEN SHOULD USE LOAN PRIVILEGE

Dean Bradshaw announces that before any student decides to drop out of school the spring quarter because of lack of finances, he should inquire about the loan funds now available at the office of the Dean of Students.

Although the funds are not plentiful as could be desired, there will be enough to help a considerable number of students in staying in school. A part of the necessary funds at least might be obtained in this way. If any student is undecided, he should investigate the offer of the funds, at any rate.

GARDEN CLUB TO MEET

The officers and active members of the Garden Club will hold a business meeting this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Davis hall.

Last night in the Methodist social rooms, Mrs. A. K. King reviewed the December book-of-the-month, Bernard Fay's Franklin, the Apostle of Modern Times before the literature department of the Community Club.

IN THE WAKE OF NEWS

Jack Dungan

The registrar smiled with pleasure. Mr. Billy Noble smiled with pleasure. In fact, the entire administrative and teaching staff of the University smiled with pleasure. It was Friday morning and the postman was busy delivering the week's Chapel Hill Weekly, without which every true Chapel Hillian feels completely lost.

The contented registrar leaned back in his great swivel chair, read with satisfaction of the establishment of a midget golf course, and paused to reflect on the fact that Mr. Lay would go to Raleigh. Attracted to the other large news story by its title he pondered about who would be the next president of the University. Then he saw the head "The Hottest February" and glanced down the column. Horrors! With a sickening flash it struck him. A word leaped from the page and smote him in the face. In a second's time his community pride in the Weekly and its editor was shattered. There in black and white glaring at him was a proof reader's error. Yes, sir, a proof reader's error! The perfect paper had fallen. There it was "weaher" when it was plain that the editor had meant weather.

On the other hand, Mr. Billy Noble, the only person having bound volumes of the entire seven years that the paper has been in existence, even considered writing in to cancel his subscription immediately. How transitory is fame!

The Chapel Hill Weekly is now seven years of age, and, seriously, here's hats off to both the institution and to its extraordinary edtior, Mr. Louis Graves, who has in seven years made his paper the most talked-of country weekly in the south.

Travis Brown together with B. Moore Parker, editor and business manager of the college album, has signified their intention of contributing space in the Vanity Fair section of the book to the Orange County Poor Fund. That's about as useful, however, as some of the aid they have failed to receive.

The Spanish bull at the Episcopal church has at last degenerated into a fight.

The paper has it that H. F. Comer will compose a deputation team which will journey to Charlotte, or rather as the Tar Heel really has it, that a team will be composed of Mr. Comer. O Mores!

* * *

Ralph Massey has a system in regard to a certain well known custom recently under discussion, which seems to work pretty well with the profs: attending classes even eight-thirty's.

Judge Stacey has been mentioned again for the presidency. If the honorable legislators elect the judge, the University will be in for a long sentence and a rigorous regime.

Frank J. Raskob's story on Dr. Henry's Al-Smith-for-president move got spot news places in the New York News, the Baltimore Sun, which became so interested in the movement that it wired down for a three hundred word story, and other papers.

BROWN SPEAKS IN RALEIGH

Roy M. Brown of the sociology department spoke at Christ's Church in Raleigh yesterday morning. The subject of Professor Brown's speech, delivered before the church relations committee of the inter-racial commission, was "The task and Opportunities of the Churches in North Carolina."

Football Carnival To Feature Veteran-Rookie Tilt Saturday

Twenty Gold Medals To Be Awarded To Best Players In Each Department Of Play; Fetzer Coaching Monograms.

FORMER STARS JUDGES

A special feature of Saturday's Monogram-Rookie game, closing Carolina's winter grid work, will be the Winter Football Carnival Contests, which Carolina's Notre-Dame trained coaches are inaugurating in Tar Heelia this year.

The Tar Heel gridders, monogram and rookie, will vie in this final feature battle for honors in offensive and defensive play, blocking, passing, receiving, punting, place-kicking, drop-kicking, and other departments of play.

Tar Heel grid stars of other years will act as judges, and on the basis of play in this final game, 20 gold medals will be awarded the men superior in each department of play.

All of which seems to mean that the Tar Heel gridders will be giving their best in this final Monogram-Rookie battle.

Coach Collins and assistants will name the three best men at each particular function in trials this week, and these men will be competing on Saturday for final honors.

The 15 medals for best offensive end, tackle, guard and center play; for best defensive end, tackle, guard and center play; for best ball carrier; for best blocking halfback; for best offensive quarterback play; and for best defensive fullback, halfback and quarterback will all be awarded on the basis of play in Saturday's game.

The medals for best passing, receiving, punting, drop-kicking and place-kicking will be decided in contests between halves.

Coach Fetzer is drilling the Monogram squad this week, Coach Collins the Rookie squad, and from all indications Saturday should hold in store for Tar Heel grid followers a great battle.

Atlanta, Ga., March 4,—The University of Alabama defeated Duke University here tonight by the score of 31-24, thereby winning the Southern Conference basketball title. Alabama held the lead throughout the game.

INTEREST SHOWN IN INDOOR MEET

Enthusiasm Has Become Widespread Over South; Track Luminaries To Compete.

Widespread interest all over the south is being evidenced in connection with the coming indoor track meet, to be held in the Tin Can Saturday, March 8. The project has grown from the stage of an invitation meet into an accredited southern conference indoor track event, which compares with the basketball tournament in Atlanta, the boxing tournament in Charlottesville, and the wrestling tournament at V. M. I.

This will be the first meet of the kind ever held at the University. Unusually long straightaways will aid the three hundred contestants in their attempts to lower southern intercollegiate time records. Saw dust pits for the pole-vaulters and high-jumpers complete the equipment which reproduce as nearly as possible the favorable conditions of an outdoor meet.

In addition to the ten colleges and universities entered in the intercollegiate events, there will be a large number of athletes from high schools and preparatory schools of both North Carolina and Virginia.

Several stars are attracting the focus of public attention upon their respective events. Hamm, of Georgia Tech, holder of the world record in the broad jump, and also holder of the southern intercollegiate record for the 220-yard dash, is the individual star of the meet.

Among the freshman entries, Lauck of Virginia and Jensen of North Carolina are expected to provide one of the most interesting races in their three-quarter mile contest, having finished first and second respectively in this event at the Virginia indoor meet.

Officials include J. V. Mulligan, a nationally known starter; W. A. Alexander, head football coach at Georgia Tech, as referee; and other notable figures in southern athletics. The University loud-speaker with a special announcer will enable the spectators to follow more easily the different events.

Coaches Shifting Football Players

The Tar Heel football coaches, looking at the 1930 season, have begun already to convert men from one position to another. Major changes so far are the shifting of Hodges and Redding, freshman centers, to tackle, where both men have been showing well, and shifting of Davis from guard to end, where the fast youngster has shown real class. All three men will be seen in Saturday's final winter battle here between the Rookies and Monograms.

SPORT RAMBLES

Roulhac Hamilton

In the Readers' Opinions column of this paper is a letter replying to our column in the Thursday issue. The letter is signed by a gentleman calling himself "Carolina" and we believe that it calls for reply.

In the first place, we beg to assure the gentleman that our statement of the existing situation between football and the winter sports is correct. We have no desire to misrepresent the facts involved, nor have we any possible reason for doing so.

In the second place, this question is not only one of concern to the coaches—it is a matter that every student has a right to know about and to take interest in. As a student in this University and as an individual interested in the development of every sport at Carolina, we feel that, in presenting the facts to the student body, we are absolutely within our rights.

If "Carolina" will read the Thursday column he will see that, while we admitted that football is Carolina's most important sport, we emphatically denied that its importance was so great that the other sports must give way before it. We do not think that any Carolina team is so unimportant that those who wish to participate in it may be denied the right on account of the desires of another man.

The next criticism made by the author of the letter is that as far as he knows, there is no very good football player on either the basketball or wrestling team. He wishes to know why the coach should wish to bother with them. Presumably, it is because he is interested only in the development of the football team, no matter if it is at the expense of the winter sports. And, as for the good football players, which Mr. Carolina knows nothing about, we beg to point out that the wrestling team lost its best heavyweight to the football team, and that in addition to being a good wrestler, Mr. Thompson is a good football player.

In closing his letter "Carolina" accuses us of getting all hot and bothered over something that doesn't amount to much. Again we beg to differ with the gentleman and assure him that, in our opinion, this thing amounts to a great deal. We maintain that every Carolina sport is important and that no coach has the right to hurt the success of somebody else's team by robbing him of his material. And that is what it amounts to when a man is coerced from one team to another, in spite of the fact that the latter is no longer in season. We are not denying the right of the football coach to hold winter practice. We are only denying his right to inveigle those men who are useful in some other sport into taking part in it. As far as the other football players are concerned we say "go ahead."

The only way that Carolina is ever going to amount to anything in the field of sports as a whole is not by the development of one team, but by the development of the teams in every field. The only way that these teams can be properly developed is by the cooperation of all the coaches. And this column is interested in obtaining that cooperation chiefly because we want to see Carolina well represented in every sport, rather than in one, and because we want to see every team get at least an even break in the distribution of material.

CHARLOTTE AND DURHAM TO MEET IN TITLE CLASH

High Schools Meet Tonight In Tin Can For Class A State Championship; Spencer-Trenton Meet For Class B Title Follows.

Two undefeated quints, Charlotte high representing the West, and Durham high carrying the Eastern colors, will meet here tonight for the class A basketball title of North Carolina. The feature battle is to be played in the Tin Can at 8 o'clock.

It will be the first half of a doubleheader, which will also include a battle between Trenton, Eastern winners, and Spencer from the West, for the North Carolina class B title, to begin at 9 o'clock.

Charlotte high, led by Aitken and McCrachren, ended a straight line of 12 victories in the Western conference, with Saturday night's 17-13 win from Asheville high. Asheville, finishing with 10 wins to 2 losses, had defeated every team in the West but Charlotte, and led the Wildcats 11-10 at the third turn, but could not match Charlotte's great final quarter comeback.

Durham High, led by the big football star and forward Edwards, and by Holloway, a guard and former captain, showed great power in winning the Eastern title from Raleigh, 20-12.

In the class B race, Trenton took a nip and tuck 27-22 game from Lumberton for the honor of representing the East, while Spencer defeated Welcome in Salisbury last night for the Western title.

An interesting sidelight of the battle will be that Durham high teams have won the state title in 1916, 1918, 1925, 1926, and 1927, while Charlotte high teams have been several times in the finals but have not won a title.

The probable lineup:

Charlotte High		Durham High
Aitken		Tilley
Bell		Edwards
Alexander		Harris
Villas		Holloway
McCachren		Hockfield

Co-Eds Play Last Game Here Tonight

The battling Carolina Co-eds play their last home game of the season in Bynum gymnasium tonight at 7:30 o'clock, meeting Cobb Memorial high school.

The game will be a return engagement between the two teams and the co-eds will be hoping to avenge a previous 32-11 loss to the Cobb team.

The visiting team, which is coached by Miss Mary Blackwell, is one of the outstanding sextets of central North Carolina.

The Cobb tossers, champions of their county for eight consecutive years, have won 15 of 17 games this season, and scored 576 points to all opponents' 305.

Neighbors and L. Gatewood, forwards; T. Gatewood, center, and Millner, guard, are playing their fourth year together and will probably start for Cobb, with Sykes and Jones as the other guards.

Louise Thacker, who scored 17 points in the last game, will be at center for the co-eds, with Lee and Johnson, forwards, and Currie, Curry and Hill, guards.

Betas Defeat Ruffin

Beta Theta Pi No. 1 and Ruffin, two hitherto undefeated teams, met in a fencing bout yesterday afternoon with the Betas coming out on top after a hectic and well fought match. The fencing of both teams was far better than that displayed in their first matches. Fenker of Beta Theta Pi showed up best, winning two bouts and allowing Potter to complete his last match. Silver and Aycock of Ruffin and Brown of the Betas all showed a fine brand of fencing, each winning two and losing one.

ALL-UNIVERSITY TEAM PICKED BY DAILY TAR HEEL

Men Selected Solely On Merit Of Playing Exhibited During Winter Football Games.

Following up its policy of selecting all-state, all-intramural, and all-everything teams, the Daily Tar Heel announces its selections for the all-University winter football team. It is to be plainly understood that these positions are filled without regard to any past performances of the players, but are chosen solely on the merit of the playing exhibited in the winter practice games. The number of games participated in is taken into consideration in making the choices, and a player who has played a consistently good game during the entire series of scrimmages is given preference over the man who pulls a brilliant performance in one or two games and is mediocre in the others.

First Team		Second Team

"Georgia," the eleven which finished the winter practice schedule without a loss, placed the number of men on the all-University teams, with four on the first team and three on the second. "Virginia," which did not function as well as a team and finished last in the winter football race, came next with

Weekly Celebrates Seventh Birthday

The Chapel Hill Weekly, a unique venture in journalism, which has grown and thrived despite the prediction of many skeptics at the outset that it would be short-lived, has just celebrated its seventh anniversary.

The entire force of the paper, together with a few invited guests, held an anniversary dinner in the social rooms of the Methodist church last Friday night, with Cy Bazemore presiding. W. M. Pugh and M. C. S. Noble made short talks.

The Weekly made its first appearance on March 1, 1923. For ten weeks it was printed in Durham, and then Editor Graves acquired a linotype machine, a cylinder press and job presses, stones, type, and other equipment, and set up a shop in the basement under Sutton's drug store. After a little while those quarters became crowded, and the Weekly moved into a new plant on Rosemary lane in 1924.

The reputation of the paper has grown until its influence and prestige is now felt all over the country. The job work has also grown. Today the Weekly has eight full-time employes and half a dozen self-help students doing irregular work as they are needed.

DEVIL'S ISLAND SETTING FOR "CONDEMNED!" AT THE CAROLINA THEATRE

No one can deny that the local color is authentic in "Condemned!", the story of the French penal colonies in South America, which has been made into Ronald Colman's latest starring picture and comes to the Carolina theatre today. It was adapted from "Condemned to Devil's Island," last year's best-selling novel by Blair Niles.

In order to gather authentic material for this book, most of which has been incoroprated in the photoplay, Mrs. Niles secured the official permission of the French government to visit the famous Devil's Island prison in French Guiana, permission which has scarcely ever before been granted to any journalist. She was the first white woman ever to land on the shore of the famous Devil's Island itself, and the first individual to follow the paths taken by escaping convicts through the fever-infected jungles which hem in the prison.

Born on a plantation near Lynchburg, Va., Mrs. Niles has traveled widely, and become one of the most noted writers on travel subjects in the English-speaking world. Her books include masterly descriptions of Ecuador, Colombia and Haiti, as well as numerous contributions to the best magazines. She has been honored by election to the English Royal Geographic Society and was one of the founders of the Society of Women Geographers.

"Condemned to Devil's Island," with its descriptions of life in the most famous prison in the world has been recognized as her masterpiece. Brought into international notice at the time of the Dreyfus scandal in France, thirty years ago, Devil's Island's peculiar horrors have earned it the universal name of "The Island of Living Death." Her story of the attempted escape of the frenzied convict was seized upon at once by Samuel Goldwyn as an ideal vehicle for Ronald Colman.

Library Gets One Of Polk's Letters

The University library has recently been made the recipient of an interesting old letter, written to James K. Polk, president of the United States and a member of the class of 1818. This letter was written by Alfred O. P. Nicholson, class of 1827, to the president recommending the appointment of a young Tennesseean to the U. S. navy as a midshipman.

Alexander B. Andrews, class of '93, of Raleigh presented the letter to the University. Mr. Andrews saw the letter advertised in a collector's list and purchased it.

On the back of the letter appears an indorsement of the application written by J. Y. Mason, class of 1816 and Secretary of the Navy in Polk's cabinet. The indorsement orders the proper officials to "prepare an appointment."

Nicholson, the author of the letter, was a lawyer and an editor. From 1833 to 1839 he served Tennessee as a member of the house of representatives, and served in the U. S. senate 1941-43, and again in 1859-61. He was Chief Justice of the Tennessee Supreme court from 1870 to 1876.

The letter was written as follows:

"Nashville Tenn
Apr 22. 1848

James K. Polk
Prest. U. States

Dear Sir:

"I understand that Master William McNeill Armstrong a son of our old friend Gen. Armstrong is desirous of a place in the Navy as Midshipman. In this wish I am informed that his father and other relations concur. He is now about seventeen years of age and will do credit to his country, his family, and himself.

I know nothing that I could say in behalf of this young man which is not already as well known to yourself. I am sure that if you can gratify his aspirations you will also gratify his numerous friends.

Very Respectfully,
A. O. P. Nicholson."

STEINER THINKS THAT PARENTS LOWER MORALS

Grinnell, Ia., Feb. 28—(IP)—Dr. Edawrd A. Steiner, of Grinnell College, believes that the greatest menace to America is "the tired business who wants to get a kick out of life."

Dr. Steiner says that the young people ought to bring about a "revolt against the morals of their fathers and mothers." This procedure, he says, may bring about the only salvation for America.

"It is not our young people who are going to excess," he declares, "They do not go away to be prodigals The horrible thing is that now they do not have to run away from home to be prodigals. They have some company at home. The middle-aged people are doing it.

"The young people I deal with in college are a wholesome, fine class. I take my hat off to every girl on the campus from the newest freshman to the seniors."

four firsts and two seconds. "Tennessee," which finished second, failed to place a man on the first team but had five on the second. "Georgia Tech" rated three positions on the first and one on the second.

At ends, Nelson of "Virginia" and Brown of "Georgia," both varsity men, had a slight edge over Johnson of "Tennessee" and Parsley of "Georgia Tech," and were given first places in their stead. At tackles, the rookies seemed to have it over the veterans and McDade (G), Hodges (T) and Smith (G) copped three out of the four positions. McDade made a good showing in all the games in which he played and seemed a little better qualified for the left tackle berth than Hodges. Underwood, a veteran who played with "Virginia," played a strong game and was the logical man for the right tackle position. The rest of the line was comparatively easy to arrive at, since Blackwood and Fysal at guards and Lipscomb at center left little room for competition for their positions. McIver and Philpot, the former a veteran and the latter a new man, charged and blocked their way to the second team guard berths while Gilbreath performed well enough at center to outrank other aspiring pivot men.

In the backfield, Branch at quarter and Magner and Nash at halves received overwhelming support for first team positions. The fullback hole was harder to fill. Two of the strongest candidates for that position, House and Harden, had to be ruled out because of the few games in which they engaged. The consistent manner in which Suggs let loose with the punts, added to his heavy line-plugging, gave him the fullback place over McAllister, flashy freshman. In the second team quarter position, the race between Wyrick and Moore was close, but the ground-gaining ability of Moore in his passing combination with Chandler gave him a slight advantage over Wyrick. Chandler showed up well at half but he was slightly overshadowed by Croom and Slusser. Croom showed plenty of ground-gaining ability for a new man, while Slusser by his speedy spurts and light-footed end runs gave Nash a pretty good race for first place.

Dean Carroll Urges Students To Harmonize Their Education With Underlying Fundamentals

Business Leaders Must Have Habits of Work and Spiritual Stamina Says Head of Commerce School.

Presenting his philosophy of education before the meeting of the Taylor Society Tuesday night, Dean D. D. Carroll, head of the school of commerce and economics, stated that education must be vitally attuned and related to life.

"Education which is not related to life is not really education, and it becomes such only when it relates itself to life, either as it is now or will be in the future," stated Mr. Carroll.

In presenting the subject "Education for Business Leadership"; Dean Carroll followed a plan of analysis, carrying the subject from one stage to another until he reached the basic factors making up the proper training for those who expect to become business leaders.

"Training for business leadership must establish habits of work," stated the speaker, "and I am against optional attendance because in the future the students will not have this privilege." He concluded this subject by saying that the institution which through optional attendance fails to develop habits of work is failing in its function.

"The two greatly magnified characteristics of the present age: specialization and the broadened reach of the individual in enjoying life, have given education the two-fold purpose of preparing men to earn a living in a highly specialized civilization and of teaching them how to live and get the most enjoyment from this broadened individual life.

"Education for business leadership must fill a paradoxial requirement," stated Mr. Carroll, "for it must make an ever nar-

CHAPEL HILL BOY SCOUTS SET UP NATIONAL RECORD

Train Ninety-One Eagle Scouts In Five Years to Establish World's Record.

When the Chapel Hill Boy Scout troop wrote a national record, back in 1925 under the leadership of Scoutmaster Vernon Kyser, professor in the school of pharmacy, with six Eagle Scouts numbered in its membership of 36 active scouts, the University began a pioneer work, which has grown steadily until it touches every section of the state, and affects other states as well.

Back in those days North Carolina had only 63 Eagle Scouts, with ten per cent of them in Chapel Hill. That "wonder" record centered community interest and the University projected its program of scouting into every part of the state, using the "wonder" troop as an example.

The five-year record of the local troop is a state achievement, according to Scoutmaster Kyser, with nine of the state's 80-odd Eagle Scouts in the local unit. The record is also a national one for a troop with 26 Scouts at this time and 91 during the five years, Scoutmaster Kyser says.

A feature of her program will be the songs of the Ragas in special costumes.

GLEE CLUB OFF ON N. Y. CONTEST

Leave This Morning To Participate in National Tournament.

The University glee club will depart this morning at 8:30 o'clock for New York in order to participate in the national intercollegiate glee club contest to be held at Carnegie Hall the night of March 8.

The trip will be made in a new 16-cylinder bus sent down by the American Motor Coach Company and recently designed by them especially for long speedy trips. The club expects to reach the Hamilton Hotel in Washington by about 5 o'clock this afternoon, and wil proceed ffom there tomorrow morning to New York, arriving there at a similar hour late in the afternoon.

In New York, the Park Central Hotel will become the group's headquarters. On the evening of its arrival the club will be entertained by W. A. Whitaker, an alumnus, with an informal dinner at the New York Athletic Club.

For the following days the club's schedule is as follows: There will be a rehearsal on Saturday at 11:45 in the hotel, and at noon Albert E. Pickernell, national president of the glee club council, will give a luncheon at the Harvard Club to which the Carolina group is invited. At 8 o'clock that night the concert is scheduled. The return trip will be made in the same manner as the one today and tomorrow, the club leaving New York on Sunday morning and arriving at Chapel Hill late Monday afternoon.

Committees Chosen For Bingham Query

According to information received from the president of the Di Senate and the speaker of the Phi Assembly, committees from both societies have been appointed to select the query for the annual Bingham commencement debate. The committees will meet at an early date and will make reports to their respective societies. The contest is limited to juniors.

The Bingham medal is offered to the best speaker of the entire debate, which is always held during the week of commencement. The prize was begun in 1899 by the late Colonel Bingham and is continued now by relatives of his. It was won last year by J. C. Williams, of the Di Senate.

PLAYMAKERS TO PRODUCE LOCAL PLAYS TONIGHT

Reserved Seats Obtainable By Season Ticket Holders at Student Supply Store.

The Carolina Playmakers present their twenty-sixth bill of original plays tonight at 8:30 at the Playmakers' Theatre. The program consists of four one-act plays: "For Auntie's Sake," a comedy of college life, by John Patric; "Hollyhocks," a folk-play, by Joe Fox; "Suspended Animation," a comedy, by Kent Creuser; and "Death Valley Scotty," a folk-play by Milton Wood.

This is the fifth performance of the season. All of the plays are being produced for the first time. They were written in the playwriting class, and are the first work of the authors. The performance will be repeated tomorrow night and Saturday night.

Elmer Hall, technical director of the Playmakers, has built an elaborate set for "Death Valley Scotty," the scene of which is the famous California desert. The play deals with the legendary figure known to all prospectors of the region. Milton Wood, the author, takes the title role of Scotty.

"Hollyhocks" presents a divorce problem against the stern background of New England Puritan morality. It is founded upon incidents with which the author, Joe Fox, was familiar as a boy.

"Suspended Animation" and "For Auntie's Sake" are both college comedies. The first is based upon the actual experiences of the author, Kent Creuser, in his struggle to write a play. The participants in the "bull session" from which the idea originally came take part in the play. John Patric's comedy has to do with the efforts of a college boy to "make a hit" with a co-ed.

Reserved seats may be secured by season ticket holders at the Student Supply Store.

The lecture will describe the development of the park system in Westchester county, New York. The system covers more than 448 square miles, and within the limits included in the system there are four cities: White Plains, Yonkers, New Rochelle, and Mount Vernon.

The meeting this evening will be the last meeting of the society this quarter.

ASTRONOMY NEW COURSE OFFERED

Course Taught by the Late Dean Patterson Will Be Given Again.

The physics department announces that Physics 14, a cultural course in astronomy, will be offered next quarter as a freshman - sophomore elective course under the instruction of Dr. Karl H. Fussler.

The course which was taught by the late Dean A. H. Patterson until his death in 1928, has been changed from a junior-senior elective to a freshman-sophomore course. The course may be taken by others than men in the first and second year classes, but it cannot count as a science major course.

The course has no physics or mathematics prerequisites, as the subject will be treated in a non-mathematical manner.

The astronomy course will be a cultural treatment of the subject, taking it up from an historical standpoint. There will be lectures with slides and star maps, and the use of astronomical instruments will be demonstrated.

Dr. Fussler, who will teach the course, is well fitted for the position, having studied at the Kirkwood Observatory, at the University of Indiana, and has taught astronomy at the U. S. Shipping Board School of Navigation at Philadelphia during the World War.

Social Conference Meeting Changed

The dates for the annual meeting of the North Carolina Conference for Social Service have been shifted from April 6-8 to April 13-15, according to announcement made today by Miss Harriet Herring, secretary of the conference.

The meeting is to be held in Charlotte.

The shift was made in order to avoid a conflict resulting from the fact that superintendents of public welfare, many of whom had planned to attend the Charlotte meeting, are to hold their regular meeting with county commissioners during the week of April 6-8, the dates originally set for the Conference.

Pre-Law Students To Meet Tonight

According to a statement by Waddell Gholson a meeting of undergraduate students interested in law will be held tonight at 7:30 o'clock in the first year class room of the law building for the purpose of organizing a Pre-Law Association. This will be done in an effort to make the college years of a pre-law student mean more to him in terms of preparation for the law-office and the court-house. Professors R. D. W. Connor and M. T. Van Hecke will speak and the meeting guarantees the forthcoming of keen and stimulating ideas.

This movement has been encouraged by the law faculty and the law school association, and they have offered to give their hearty cooperation. They have expressed the belief that much benefit will be obtained from the discussion and debates on such subjects as: "The comparative desirability of two, three, or four years of college preparation for law," "The relation of outside activities such as athletics, debating, and journalism, to law," "The relation of courses in history, science, literature, and economics, to law," and "The advantages of the University of North Carolina School of Law, its faculty, library, and methods of work."

A program has been arranged for this meeting that is suggestive of those to be used in such an organization, if organized. Professor R. D. W. Connor, of the history department, will speak on "Why the Lawyer Should Study History" and Professor M. T. Van Hecke, of the law school, will give the same subject from a lawyer's viewpoint. After these talks the proposals for organizing the Pre-Law Association will be heard and plans for future activities will be made. All students interested in such an association are urged to attend.

Infirmary List

Yesterday's infirmary list numbered three students: Beth Coley, C .H. Guthrie and George Sheram.

There will be a meeting of the administrative board of the graduate school today at 4:30 in the office of the graduate school in South building.

NEW FACTS ARE DISCOVERED BY OTTO STUHLMAN

Old Water Theory Disproved at Recent Experiment; Temperature Plays Great Part in Reaction.

H_2O is not the correct formula for water! The bubbles which hit you in the face when you open a pop bottle are not air bubbles, but are drops of water! The formula for water is not constant, but changes with the temperature!

Such are some of the startling discoveries brought to light by an experiment concluded Monday night by Dr. Otto Stuhlman of the physics department, in collaboration with Henry Zurburg, senior in the University.

Seated before a table piled high with graphs of various sorts, Dr. Stuhlman related the substance of what is to constitute a talk before three different scientific societies in Washington within a few weeks. The specific topic of investigation—effervescence—is associated with the release of gases from a liquid upon release of pressure. It was found that the bubbles coming from the mouth of a soda bottle when it is opened are in

Tar Heel Topics

The "Spanish bull-fight" at the Episcopal church Tuesday night must have been quite a bull-session.

Youthful bandit has confessed to holding up four North Carolina movie theatre box offices with a toy pistol. That's giving the movies some of their own medicine.

Ratan Devi, who appears here tonight on the student entertainment program, "portrays Indian music with a genuine India-consciousness," according to advance publicity. If the wording had been "India-rubber conscience," what a whale of a difference it would have made in the size of the crowd!

The seniors had E. C. B. Erhinghaus, a candidate for governor in 1932, as the speaker at their last smoker. Now come the juniors with announcement that Albert Cox, also a candidate for the governorship, will speak at their smoker. Evidently the campus politicians are missing no chances of getting pointers on how it's done by the experts.

The University Presidential Straw Vote

At the meeting of the University board of trustees in Raleigh Tuesday it was evident that sentiment had not crystallized on the choice of a successor to President Chase. The suggestion was frequently advanced that the matter should be approached with great caution and much deliberation.

We are in hearty accord with the attitude of the trustees. It is vitally important to the future progress of the University, and to some extent of the entire state, that the most competent man be selected for the presidency. Qualifications of the men under consideration should be fully determined.

We believe that the trustees will consider student opinion to some extent in arriving at a decision. In order to assist them in ascertaining the opinion of the student body, we are conducting a straw vote through the Tar Heel on the most logical men for the presidency. A ballot appears on the front page of this morning's edition, and it will be repeated in the Friday, Saturday and Sunday issues. These ballots are to be filled out and dropped in the ballot box in the lobby of the Y.M.C.A.

We request that each student refrain from voting more than once. The straw vote is conducted in order to determine the opinion of the majority of the student body on the most desirable man for the presidency from a student point of view, and this cannot be accomplished if the ballot box is "stuffed." Each ballot must be signed by the name of the voter; otherwise the vote will not be counted. The results will be announced in next Tuesday's issue of the Tar Heel.

During the past few days the chief source of ammunition for campus "bull-sessions" has been speculation upon the most likely successor to President Chase. The straw vote will give the "bullers" an opportunity to express an opinion in tangible form.

Pine Trees And Hard Times

It seems that the state of North Carolina is about to become the newest battleground for the warfare between lumber interests and advocates of highway beautification. Whenever fine roads are built through forested or semi-forested districts such a controversy invariably follows. Pennsylvania, New York, and Michigan are states that have recently terminated such disputes within their borders.

Lumber concerns always watch with interest the laying of good roads across timbered regions. Then when the roads are finished they move in and begin to operate. The forests alongside the highway, being nearest the line of transportation, are naturally the first to be razed, and with such methods it is only a question of time until every highway traverses a strip of unsightly stump land. This is exactly what North Carolina is threatened with.

We are a perfect example of a state whose new roads are renderen twice beautiful by leading through the heart of splendid forests. It is one of our boasts, and it is one of the things that makes our state so attractive to people from other parts of the country. Beautiful woodlands have become rare in eastern United States, so that to drive over our highways is an unusual as well as a happy experience; especially for visitors from the North.

But even now the sawmills are beginning to eat out a trail along either side of our roadways, so that the part of the state which should be kept beautiful at any cost, the part that everybody sees, is the very first to be mutilated. Moreover, most of our woods are pine woods, and, although there are few trees statelier than pines we must remember that there is scarcely any landscape more monotonous than cut-over pinelands. Are we going to allow our network of fine roads to become also a network of pine-stump wastes?

That financial ebb which sometimes follows in the wake of abnormal development is now upon North Carolina. It is at such a time that a state needs all the tourists it can attract. Our state is fast getting the reputation of being a tourists' paradise, chiefly because of our fine roads and the beauty of the country they traverse. If we allow our roadsides to be turned into wastes of sand and stumps what will become of our tourist trade?

Of course we must utilize our timber resources, but this does not necissitate the desolation of our roadsides. We might well follow the example of Michigan, which has recently taken over a 200-foot strip on each side of portions of its state highways leading through forested areas. Even such a narrow stand of forest alongside the highway is sufficient to conceal the unsightly results of lumbering operations which may take place beyond it. At any rate it is a matter which should interest every person concerned with the welfare and prosperity of our state. —J. J.

Readers' Opinions

BLAKE AND COLUMNIST GALLAND

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I would like to express my thanks to you for the vast amount of free publicity you have given me through your Daily Tar Heel. I cannot understand why you are devoting so much valuable space for free publicity. It could be so much better utilized for real news that your subscribers expect to get for their subscription fee. But, after considering it thoughtfully for a while, it comes to me easily. The Tar Heel once carried lots of real news, news that the student body and other subscribers appreciated reading, at least, the average intelligent student and subscriber.

But, taking in consideration that the Tar Heel has advanced from a tri-weekly to a daily paper, it naturally necessitated an extraordinary editorial staff. And, by reading the daily Tar Heel regularly, especially the editorial page where you find Mr. Harry Galland's writing under the head of "Pen Points," it is easily seen that the Tar Heel has disclosed one real genius, a real literary man, some call them intelligentsia. His writings truly amplify his mental vocabulary. Few writers of his caliber have been found in the University student body in the last twenty years.

I am sure that some of the biggest publications have already sent out scouts to land his signature to a contract with their publication. And, ere a couple of years roll around, we expect to hear his name mentioned along with other great literary writers, such as Mencken, Durant, and Bernard Shaw.

JOHN D. BLAKE.

STUDENT DICTATORSHIP!

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

All hail to the arrival of student dictatorship over student ideas! (Would that we might say, "All hell to it.") I have become my brothers' intellectual keeper seems to be a new "Christian" idea among some of our well-intentioned journalistic brethren. And the seemingly long-earned right for the Demos to express itself now comes to be suppressed. Yes—oath resounding against oath—the ill, demoniacal, infernal Demos of our student body, as it is looked upon by our worthy new rulers, is wretchedly incapable of ideas in the first place; and then, holy gods and you too, O Allah, when it believes that its sense of justice gives birth to an idea, it is slapped in the face with the true, correct, unbiased views to offset "false and misleading rumors." The erstwhile intellectual who so brilliantly poured out reason by the columns for the benefit of the Southern Textile Bulletin now becomes the exalted patron of exploitation somewhat nearer home. (The man under cover always considers war a great game.) Now, the student body, so excellently shown the multiple means of supporting a glorious Daily Tar Heel (it seems Tar Hell) last spring, begins to see that the chief means was an indirect one, one which still takes money from the students' pockets; and this way is to let the students pay indirectly for spacious advertisements. They are so important that we fear the loss of one patron, and we might say whisperingly, the loss of one job on the staff even at the expense of freedom of the press.

The fourth estate chooses the extreme right of the house; with benevolence (and also selfish and condescending pride) it shrinks from the ghastly appearance of the general and more democratic views. In this way, it elevates itself to the one twenty-seven hundredth percentage of the student body and reckons itself the very top spot of its intellectual cream. (I hesitate to call it cream for fear that it is still of a finer quality—perhaps scum.) This is a part (the triumvirate—though we believe it chiefly a one-man affair and have certain doubts concerning the authentic signing of a certain article Saturday night)—this is, then, IT which seeks more "manifest proof" for our ideas I suppose, since even there have been turned down many letters which only tended to express opinions just as the Tar Heel managers themselves have done. Perhaps, next, we shall meet on the campus some examples of a perfect intellectual pedigree who shall choose to fine us a nickel or take away from us the right to speak for a week upon our having expressed certain ideas orally. Down goes freedom of speech, then; that of the press has already preceded it. We fear grave consequences. Still, we wish to exhort the Demos to a more courageous stand; we wish to ask it to stand for itself. And we most earnestly wish to ask the dictator to allow us a meager bit of freedom and mercy.

BLANK IGNORANCE.

Young People's Social

The Young People's Service League gave a very entertaining social last Tuesday night in the social rooms of the parish house. The program was varied, consisting of fancy dances, vocal selections, and games.

The "goofy clothes" prize was won by Garland McPherson and Penelope Alexander. Carl Griggs rendered a few vocal selections, after which he and Louise Thacker gave a number of fancy dances. Jack Wardlaw and Frank Zappa supplied the musical atmosphere.

ENGINEERING SOCIETIES NOT TO MEET THIS WEEK

Because of the coming examinations the electrical and the mechanical engineering societies will not hold meetings this week.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

Two weeks ago today a man boarded a late night train in Chicago, purchased a newspaper for a few minutes of reading before turning in, and then he had the thrill of his life; for there was the name of an old schoolmate of his in big headlines, first page, first column. The man was Charles Eichenhauer, an Illinois editor, and the name in the headlines was that of Harry W. Chase.

When Editor Eichenhauer had subsided from the excitement of learning that Dr. Chase had been chosen to be the new president of the University of Illinois he began to think about their old days together at Dartmouth. His reminiscences on the subject are intensely interesting in that they afford a very human glimpse of Dr. Chase when he was a college sophomore. Mr. Eichenhauer said:

"In the fall of 1901—can it really be that long ago—I, as an uncertain, doubtful and dispirited freshman, was assigned to my room in one of the country's most historic eastern college halls. I had been taught to beware of sophomores because they were the common enemy of freshmen. When the homesickness was becoming acute there was a figure at the open door. It was that of a tall, spare youth with a particularly classical cut to his countenance. There was something friendly about the newcomer who seemed somewhat more serious than the jolly roistering, returning students who were going up and down the dormitory corridor.

"'How ah you, freshman?' he asked, his accent betraying his New England ancestry.

"'I'm a sophomoah,' he added.

Here was someone to be dreaded!

"But he added, 'I live right around the cohnah. Come in to see me.'

"Here was a pretty wholesome sort of a fellow after all. A sophomore with a heart for a homesick freshman!

"And so the two, Harry Chase and I, lived almost side by side—just around the corner—for the entire year. Every change of class period meant passing each other in the hall. There were the usual courtesies. Soon there came the dormitory horseplay and initiations, the dormitory 'chin' and the dormitory banquet. The sophomore was there and so was the freshman. In time there came short visits in the room of either one or the other.

"Dismiss the freshman, for he is of no concern in this story, but watch carefully the sophomore.

"There was not much to distinguish this sophomore from all the rest of his sophomoric tribe so far as interest in college affairs was concerned or leadership in campus activities. To the crowd that seeks distinction in the by-products rather than the essentials of college interest there was little to attract attention to this tall youth who seemed to be growing taller and whose countenance seemed to be developing a more thoughtful aspect from year to year. He was not the type who chased the rainbow of college political honor, who was loudest at all student gatherings, who thought that the value of a college education varied directly with the number of wild escapades that were part of his experience. He believed that a college education was primarily offered to a youth to develop every part of his being, to make of him a thoroughly rounded man who would know how to live as well as how to make a living or how to get by. He was studious and thorough, a reading, thinking college youth, and yet, withal, a human and companionable fellow."

And so we have the picture of President Chase as a college boy.

In finishing his story Mr. Eichenhauer told something of the brilliant career of Dr. Chase during the 27 years that have passed since they last bade each other good-bye, saying, among other things: "He completely remade a big southern university, and gave it a fame as an educational center that was nationwide."

WEALTH OF NEW MATERIAL FOR GAME SATURDAY

Question Of Who Shall Star For Rookies Flares Up As Annual Grid Affair Draws Near.

If tradition holds good, Saturday afternoon's Monogram-Rookie battle, closing Carolina's winter football work, should reveal a number of new backfield stars for the 1930 Tar Heels.

Of the backfield that worked for the Rookies in last year's annual feature, Johnny Branch, Yank Spaulding and Rip Slusser all achieved eminence and played prominent parts in Carolina's brilliant 346-point season of 1929.

The important question with fans is who the new stars will be this year? Who will be found to carry on in the shoes of the graduated Ward, Spaulding and Jackson?

This Saturday's game, carded for 2 o'clock in Kenan stadium, prior to the first southern conference indoor games beginning in the Tin Can at 4 o'clock, will tell the tale.

A first-string Rookie backfield is impossible to predict at this early part of the week. There are too many promising candidates for Coach Collins to decide on his starting quartet yet. It may suffice to point out those who give most promise of providing Branches and Spauldings and Slussers of this year's game.

Jimmy Moore, reserve quarter, has looked unusually good at pass receiving, and might possibly be converted to a halfback. Peacock, a freshman, has shown fair stuff, but needs seasoning.

Chandler, Croom and Jackson have set the pace for left halfbacks coming up from the frosh and look unusually good, with White, another frosh, rating almost on a par with the select trio.

Daniels, Ferebee, Morrisey, Thompson, Donnell and Frazier, freshmen, and Houston, reserve, have all shown promise at right half, but the right halfbacks do not quite equal the Rookies who carry the ball from the left side.

There are four fine Rookie fullback prospects in McAlister, reserve from last year; McNeil, regular freshman fullback last year; Lassiter, a transfer who will be eligible next year; and Suggs, regular freshman in 1928 who was out of college last fall.

GALAXY OF STARS COMING FOR MEET

Long straightaways, easy turns and a track just a fraction over 9 laps to the mile, should unite with such stars as Young of Georgia, Ochs of Virginia, Simon of Duke, and Barkley and Lowry of North Carolina to produce some unusually fast distance runs in the first southern conference indoor games here Saturday night. The Madison Square Garden track, where some of the biggest indoor meets in the country are held, takes 11 laps to the mile, as compared to the local track's nine and a fraction laps.

Cincinnati, O.—(IP)—An echo of war-time hate has been silenced permanently and the local board of education has voted to pay Henry S. Curtis, of Jefferson City, Mo., for the so-called "pro-German" speech he made here in April, 1918.

Curtis, an authority on child education, had been employed by by Superintendent Randall J. Condon to make a survey of schools and playgrounds in Cincinnati and presented his findings in a speech to city teachears.

Stars Appearing Here Saturday

University To Welcome Stars Here Saturday For Big Meet

Tin Can Is Unusually Fine Building for Use as Indoor Track.

MANY NOTABLES ATTEND

If maximum of facilities for performers and comfort and enjoyment for spectators count for anything, University athletic officials, in charge of preparations for the first southern conference indoor games here Saturday night, are going to "sell" indoor track to the south.

The big northern indoor meets, with their world champions, have consistently drawn enthusiastic crowds of from 20,000 to 40,000. Due to lack of facilities the south has seen little of such spectacles.

The first southern conference indoor championship has drawn an entry of world and southern champions that rank with the best. The Tin Can, where the meet is to be held, offers a floor space 110 by 300 feet, a longer track than Madison Square Garden, and the indoor track equipment that has been installed is as good as the country's best.

University athletic officials are determined to add to the splendid spectacle the maximum of comfort and enjoyment for spectators.

Bleachers, to occupy the whole south side of the Tin Can, will face the sprint and hurdle lanes, and all finishes will be directly in front. The program has been carefully worked out on definite time schedule so as to keep the 300 star performers moving in a continuous panorama of action. Every event will be announced over a loud speaker so that those attending may keep up perfectly with the progress of the meet. And last but not least is the steam heating system which will insure a temperature conducive to fast performances, yet comfortable to spectators.

Facilities for the performers are equally good and should insure stellar performance all along the program.

The sprints and hurdles will be 60 yards, which is the longest indoor straightway in the south, and as long as Madison Square Garden.

S. I. C. SPORTS

(By Jack Bessen)

By virtue of a 31-24 victory over the Duke Blue Devils, Alabama's Crimson Tide succeeded N. C. State as the southern champions.

Duke established a record when the Tide defeated them Tuesday night. It made the second time running that they had gone to the finals only to lose out for the championship. Last year the Devils lost to State and this year the Tide turned the trick.

The Carolina team received a tremendous ovation from the fans when it entered the floor, only the two local teams, Georgia and Georgia Tech receiving larger ones.

The fans in Atlanta are surely hard hearted. As a defeated team marches off the floor, the fans howl: "Next train leaves at 10:45!"

The tournament was full of upsets. State was conceded to have a better team than Sewanee, but Sewanee shellacked the Terrors 26-19. On the strength of State's victory over the Georgia Bulldogs, Carolina was doped to take the opening game, but the Bulldogs refused to carry out the advance dope, defeating the Tar Heels 26-21.

Kentucky fans got so "het up" about their team that hundreds of them journeyed to Atlanta for the Duke game. Most of them left for "dear old Kaintuck" that night. Reason: Duke 37, Kentucky 32.

The final game was the roughest game of the tournament. The Devils, tired after the gruelling Kentucky game, were like children in the hands of the Tide. Several of the lighter Duke men played most of the game on the floor.

Tennessee was the dark horse of the tournament, putting out one seeded team, Washington and Lee, and giving Alabama a great battle.

The Vols had three of their football team starring on the quintet; the touchdown twins, Hackman and McEver, and Bobby Dodd. This trio was greatly responsible for the Vol's great showing in the tournament.

DURHAM DEFEATS CHARLOTTE FOR CLASS A TITLE

Last Minute Spurt Gives Eastern Team 14-11 Win.

After battling on even terms for three quarters, Durham forged ahead with a three-point lead in the final minutes and took the class A state basketball title from Charlotte high by a score of 14 of 11 at the Tin Can last night. Neither team had been previously defeated in its class during the season, and they were well matched up for last night's play.

Close, furious guarding characterized the game throughout and goals were few and far between. The half ended with Durham and Charlotte in a 4-4 deadlock and the end of the third quarter found them tied 9-9.

Harris and Holloway led the attack of Durham, while Tilley, speedy little forward, gave a beautiful exhibition of floorwork and passing. Aitkin, forward, and Captain McCachern, guard, showed up well for Charlotte, the former registering four points and the latter five.

Spencer Wins

Led by their flashy Captain, "Cotton" Grossman, Spencer high school swamped Trenton high 33-11 to win the class B championship last night. The score at the half was 14-2. Grossman's consistent playing was the chief factor in Spencer's victory. Holt, with 14 points, led the scoring. Captain Brock led Trenton's second half rally with six points.

Four Vaulters To Spread Stuff Soon

With four University vaulters showing promise of reaching 12 feet indoors, and other outstanding vaulters expected from all over the south, that most spectacular event of track is expected to be one of the big features of the first Southern Conference indoor games here Saturday.

The Tar Heels, with a whole quartet of vaulters to enter, should make the strongest bid for points, and especially when consideration is taken that Brodie Arnold and Wick Smith have consistently been bettering 11 feet 6, and Raymond Ruble and Bill Dry have been doing 11 feet regularly.

Younger Undergraduates Favored By Dr. Robinson

New York, March 5.—(IP)—A story in the New York Times for February 9, said:

"The theory recently advanced by Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard University, that the younger undergraduates at colleges generally excell in scholarship those of more mature years was upheld in a statement issued today by Dr. Frederick B. Robinson, president of the College of the City of New York, in discussing the findings of the personnel bureau under the direction of Dr. Arthur N. Payne.

"During the past three semesters the personnel bureau has given more than 30,000 psychological tests to entering freshmen and sophomores. The tabulated results, it was reported, reveal a distinct superiority of the younger men. It was also announced that a steady decrease in the average age of entering students has been noted."

Track Notice

All assistant and sub-assistant track managers are asked to meet this afternoon at 4 o'clock at Emerson field.

DUKE LOSES TO ALABAMA IN HOT BASKET CONTEST

Corbett, Tennessee Forward, Stands as High Conference Scorer.

Although the Duke Blue Devils let down in the pinch and lost the conference basketball crown to Alabama, they may be able to take some consolation in the fact that their center, Croson, was high scorer of the tournament with 33 points. Alabama's star forward, Laney, came next with 30 points, while Corbett and Faust of Tennessee ran up totals of 28 and 27 respectively in three games.

Corbett of Tennessee, in the Washington and Lee game, gained individual scoring honors with 15 markers. Croson followed with 14 in the Georgia Tech game and 13 in the Kentucky game; while Wages and Perkins of Georgia Tech, in the Tulane game; Councillor of Duke, in the Georgia Tech game, and Cox of W. and L. in the Mississippi game, all registered 13 points.

MORE DONATIONS ADDED TO FUNDS

Total Amount Subscribed for Relief of Poor Is $248.50; $24 Given Yesterday.

The Tar Heel relief fund for the poor of Orange county continues to mount upward, with donations coming in every day. The contributors Tuesday and Wednesday were Dr. E. C. Metzenthin, Flem Wiley, "Red" Foister, Dr. English Bagby, Mrs. M. L. Skaggs, W. McFleming Jones, Glenn Holder, Robert Hodges, Anonymous, and C. S. H. C. S. H. is an undergraduate who contributed generously but wishes his name withheld. These added $24 to the fund, bringing the total now to $248.50.

The relief fund has been established for a week, but the last issue of the Tar Heel for this quarter will mark its close. For four more issues, extending over the week-end, the Tar Heel will continue to publish names of contributors. Contributions should be mailed to Dr. L. M. Brooks, Box 747 or the Alumni building, to the Tar Heel office, or turned over personally to one of the members of the committee in charge of the fund: Dr. L. M. Brooks, Harry F. Comer, Louis Graves, Ellis Fysal, and Robert Hodges compose the committee.

In spite of the near approach of spring there is no lessening of the demand for funds. Welfare director George Lawrence tells of a case in which the family concerned is especially deserving. A negro woman and her dwarfed and feeble-minded son are the only ones left now, and the only work the woman has been able to obtain is part time employment as a cook at a nearby sawmill. She had another son, 19 years old, who supported the family, but this boy died three weeks ago of pneumonia. When the situation came under Mr. Lawrence's attention a week later, he found the two near starvation. An interesting fact, revealing the good qualities of the woman, is that when he returned two weeks afterward he discovered she still possessed two dollars of the original five allotted her.

"I holds onto the dollar until the eagle squalls. When he squalls loud enough I let him go," the old woman told him.

Library Installs Patent Coat Hooks

A dozen lockdown coat hooks have been installed by the library authorities. Students leaving coats, hats, or slickers in the cloak room are urged to make use of these new coat hooks. More will be installed if use requires them.

While these coat hooks are simple to operate, they may present something of a puzzle to the uninitiated. They are often used in cafeterias and restaurants. All that is necessary to do to lock the coat onto the hook is to hang up the garment in the ordinary way and press down the top of the hook. This clamps the coat collar between two jaws, one of which is tipped with rubber to prevent damage to the cloth, and at the same time releases a flat slug which can be withdrawn from a slot and carried off as a key. To unlock the coat, simply reverse the process: press the slug into its slot and the upper jaw of the hook will be released, allowing the coat to be removed.

Library officials wish to call attention to the fact that several people making use of these hooks have neglected to remove the slug from the slot, thus making it possible for the coat to be stolen.

Efird Gives Program

(By Harold S. Cone)

The program given Tuesday night in Person hall showed unusually good judgment on the part of John Efird, pianist, in the selection of his numbers.

Beginning with two typical Bach groups Mr. Efird continued the first division of his program with two comparatively light numbers. In the second part he worked up to a Chopin group with two preliminary selections, Novelette by Schumann, and the not very well known Prelude in G Sharp Minor by Rachmaninoff.

Mr. Efird seemed to be lacking in assurance in his rendition of the Bach numbers. While many light finger passages were lacking in clearness, the effect may have been partly caused by poor acoustics noticeable in one section of the room at least.

Schubert's Impromptu in A Flat Major, to pass over a few inaccuracies, was the first illustration of Mr. Efird's feeling for lyric passages. While a tendency to increase the normal tempo was noticed in the playing of this selection, Mr. Efird gave a sympathetic interpretation of Schubert's melodious theme, especially toward the closing bars. He was much more at ease during the light "Valcek" by Mokrejs, the closing number of the first group, during which piece he demonstrated some efficient technique.

Mr. Efird showed far more assurance in the presentation of the second portion of his program. The Novelette and Prelude, while not outstanding, left a better impression than the opening numbers of the preceding group.

In the Chopin numbers, he frequently showed technical skill, but the playing of several passages rather indicated a lack of thorough preparation. Especially in the well known Etudes, Mr. Efird again seemed to increase the time faster than a normal interpretation. Chopin's Valse in E Minor brought the program to a fitting close.

The Tar Heel wishes to correct a statement indicating that Mr. Efird's program was sponsored by the music department. Mr. Efird is not studying with the department this year, and he planned and presented his own recital.

RUTH TAYLOR, NOTED BLONDE, AT CAROLINA

In Hollywood there are blondes. Armies of them. Some are blondes, some blonder, but Ruth Taylor still stands out as the blondest. Little has been heard of her since she so ably personified Anita Loos' idea of the little prattling and chattering character in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." In the meantime Ruth has not lost one iota of her vivid blondness.

She is back, blonde and chattering in "This Thing Called Love" a Pathe dialogue picture starring Edmund Lowe and Constance Bennett, which will be seen and heard at the Carolina theatre today. This time she is not endeavoring to inveigle "kind gentlemen" to go shopping with her, but under her blonde coiffure she has little ideas and big ideas of how to mould and hold a husband.

Dean Carroll Speaks Before Taylor Society

rower man who is fit to earn a living in the modern specialized world and an ever broader man capable of enjoying the opportunities of life; however, what is impossible in the physical world is possible in the spiritual and intellectual, for a man can be both a specialist and at the same time a masterful, broad man."

Continuing his analysis from the broad divisions of education, Dean Carroll pointed out that the training for efficient specialization in itself consists of two factors: an understanding of the underlying principles and a knowledge of the techniques and methods of the field.

Of these two, the latter is the more important, for the principles are fundamental and permanent, whereas the technical methods are only temporary.

Still following his plan of a complete analysis, the speaker divided the training in the principles into the two divisions of the type of men that business requires. These are the technical experts and the coordinating, executives. Men of the latter type are comparatively scarce, stated the speaker, and it would pay a student to do a bit of serious self-analysis before deciding which class he will choose.

At this point, Dean Carroll paid tribute to President Chase, stating that the biggest thing the retiring president had done while in office was to build a growing number of highly specialized men into an efficient group.

As the final analysis of business leadership, Dean Carroll said that the business leader must have habits of work and must have spiritual stamina. The position of the modern business leader is the most powerful in the world, he stated, and the leader must have increasingly higher characteristics as his opportunities increase.

In conclusion Mr. Carroll said that educational training must do the apparently impossible, for it must narrow a man to a specialized field and broaden him to a wider personal enjoyment of life.

Dean Carroll was the last of a series of six faculty speakers who have spoken to the Taylor Society during this quarter on subjects related to business management.

in the affairs of the institution in general. Archibald Henderson, professor of mathematics and literary critic, has rendered much valuable service to the University on committee work and in the mathematics department.

Of the faculty members Dean Addison Hibbard is probably one of the best acquainted with modern tendencies in American university life. Professor H. G. Baity has received much praise for his work in the department of engineering.

Dr. Ben Lacy is president of Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., and is considered by many to be one of the leading educational figures in the south. He is a son of the late Ben Lacy, who was for many years treasurer of the state.

Justices Stacy and Brogden have been connected with the life of the University for many years and are both well acquainted with the affairs here. They have served as visiting professors in the University law school from time to time.

Professors William E. Dodd, of the history department of the University of Chicago, is one of the leading educators of the country and has been suggested for the presidency by a large group.

reality globules of liquid forced from the surface of the body of liquid by the action of gas bubbles, which rise to the lower layer of the surface film, distort the surface, and explode, throwing the drops of water into the air. The height to which these bubbles will ascend depends entirely upon the temperature of the liquid. Either at a high temperature or (contrary to general belief) at a low one, the drops will be thrown to approximately the same height. At a little less than 40 degrees C., splashing of the liquid practically does not exist. Thus, a pop bottle opened at a temperature just from the ice, and one opened at a temperature of about 80 degrees C., or that of a summer day, would exhibit the same amount of splashing. Consequently the release of gas and explosion of the bottle at these temperatures is more imminent. Recently a man in Raleigh had his arm blown off by the explosion of a bottle just taken from the ice.

These facts are, however, only superficial evidence of the fact that the molecular structure of water is, not merely H_2O, but either $(H_2O)_2$ or $(H_2O)_3$ depending upon the temperature. The mixture of molecules is such that one or the other of the above conditions dominates, with the predominant transition taking place at about 40 degrees C. Near 100 degrees the double molecular type is primarily in evidence, while at about 10 degrees C. the triple molecular type is predominant.

To investigate these various phases of the phenomenon of effervescence, the experimenters allowed various kinds of gases to bubble through water which had been distilled twice. Then by a statistical study of the splashing, it was found that the above interpretation was the most probable one. As a check on the work, the entire process was repeated using, in the place of water, benzene, which, according to chemical data, shows no change in molecular structure in the temperature range used in the experiment. Hence, the splashing experiment under these conditions showed no discontinuity at any temperature at which it was examined. This was contrary to the results obtained on the graphs of the water experiment, which did show discontinuity in molecular arrangement, proving that arrangement to be not constant.

GENERAL ALBERT COX TO ADDRESS JUNIORS TONIGHT

Regular Winter Quarter Smoker Will Be Given at 9 O'clock In Swain Hall.

General Albert L. Cox, prominent Raleigh attorney, will speak at 9 o'clock tonight at the Junior class smoker in Swain hall, according to announcement by Artie Marpet, vice-president of the class. This is the second class smoker of the year. Alex Mendenhall's orchestra will provide music for the affair.

The speaker graduated from the University with A. B. and A. M. degrees in 1904 as permanent president of his class. While here he was a member of the varsity football team, participated in track and baseball and was a member of the Golden Fleece. Since leaving the University he has served in the state legislature and as a superior court judge. He served successively as captain and colonel on the Mexican border and in the Great War. He is now a brigadier general in the officers reserve corps. The general has been active in American Legion work and was commander of the North Carolina department several years ago. He is mentioned prominently as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor in 1932.

Art Courses Offered By Extension Division

A course in American Art and Southern artists of note, designed for busy women who haven't time for intensive application to textbooks, is now being offered by the extension division of the University of North Carolina, according to a recent announcement by Russell M. Grumman, director of the extension division.

The aim of the course is to present a general background of American art history, with special emphasis on southern artists of note, and to give a brief survey also of present-day art and artists in this country.

The course is suited for either individual or group study. In a majority of the programs outlined in the course of study there is one article to be read from a book or magazine and one to be prepared by a member of the group. It is believed this method of study will stimulate interest in native art and artists and foster in the comunity an interest in beauty.

The course was prepared by Mary deB. Graves, well known Chapel Hill artist.

Friends of Esperanto Will Not Meet Today

Dr. E. C. Metzenthin announces that the meeting of the "Friends of Esperanto," scheduled for this evening at 5 o'clock, has been postponed because of a meeting of the faculty from 4:30 to 6 o'clock.

According to present plans a few more meetings will be held at the beginning of the spring quarter. All those who have paid their dues are urged to attend the next meeting in order to receive their copies of the Esperantist, the bi-monthly magazine, and the Key to Esperanto, the dictionary.

The day of the next meeting will be announced in the Tar Heel about the middle of March.

Student Tosses Bottle Into Ocean; Receives An Answer

(By Henry Wood III)

An experience that comes to one out of millions has been the good fortune of Nicholas W. Dockery, a student in the Engineering school here at the University. The long arm of fate picked up a tiny black object, tossed here and there by the mountainous waves of the Atlantic, carried it to a pretty little beach on the coast of Belgium, placed it in the hands of a young French girl, and carried an answer back across land and sea to "Nick" Dockery in Chapel Hill.

Last August "Nick" was crossing the Atlantic enroute to Paris and a tour of Europe. As the West-Ellare sighted the English coast 500 miles distant, "Nick" played his "trump." He enclosed a dollar bill and a note in a long-neck Scotch bottle; in the note he wrote his name, address, the date, the latitude and longitude, and a request that if this message should by some chance come into anyone's possession, for that person to communicate with him at once. He carefully corked and sealed the bottle, and hurled it into the ocean.

"Nick" had completely forgotten the incident until Monday, February 17, when he found in his box at the Sigma Chi house, a strange letter with Belgium stamps and postmark. It was an answer to his fateful message of the sea.

"Nick" has replied to the letter and is anxiously awaiting word from his unseen correspondent on the other side of the world.

The letter follows:

Mr. Nicholas W. Dockery,
Rockingham, N. C.,
U. S. A.

My dear Mr. Dockery:—

The winds of chance have blown me your unique, though laconic, billet de boteille. And let me hasten to add that the same winds have blown you a unique distinction — whether honor or not you shall decide for yourself. But distinction it certainly is, inasmuch as you are the first person to ever receive a letter from me without my first having met and become more or less personally acquainted with that person. I am not the kind of a girl that you may have supposed abounds in port towns, who would gladly write to what you Americans call "a will o' the wisp," just so long as the "will o' the wisp" wore pantaloons.

But wind, and chance have combined themselves in presenting to me your name and address, safely tucked down the throat of a bottle, and curiosity —which by right and prerogative all women possess—now impels me to address myself to you, my vague and faraway . . . what shall I say? . . . Friend? Not yet—because I don't know you, nor what you look like. You may be a gay young Lothario, a modern Don Juan. You may be married! Or you may be a wrinkled old granddaddy, and this missive may eventually amuse your charming grandchildren. So, I dare not call you my friend. However, you shall be my "potential" friend.

So, I openly write you, leaving the outcome of this postal ex-

Relief Fund Grows

MARCH ISSUE OF SCHOOL JOURNAL IS MAILED OUT

Two More Issues of Publication To Be Released During Present College Year.

The March issue of the High School Journal, which is published by the school of education made its appearance yesterday and is being mailed to its subscribers throughout the state and nation. Two more issues of the Journal for the present school year, those for April and May, are forthcoming.

Several articles of general interest are included in the current issue of the Journal. In "Our Schools and Our Public," Dr. A. Monroe Stowe, professor of education at Randolph Macon Woman's College, discusses the attacks being made upon the public schools, and considers the work and duties of the school today. Defining the task of the elementary schools as not to fill the mind of the pupils but to "develop abilities needed in living," and that of the secondary school "to help boys and girls to become better acquainted with themselves and the world in which they live," Dr. Stowe emphasizes the need of ways and means of accomplishing these aims and, especially, of clearing up misconceptions of the public about the worth of the public school curriculum.

In "North Carolina's Adventure in Good Will," N. C. Newbold, of the state department of education, gives an account of

PRE-LAW GROUP ELECTS SPEIGHT NEW PRESIDENT

Addresses By Connor And Van Hecke Feature First Meeting.

Last night saw the organization of the University's first Pre-Law Association.

An interested group of 50 pre-law students met in Manning hall, and following an interesting program featured by addresses by Professors R. D. W. Connor and M. T. Van Hecke, voted unanimously to organize the long-sought Pre-Law Association.

W. W. Speight, who presided, was elected president. Other officers elected were Charles Whedbee, vice-president, and Bill Jarman, secretary.

Meetings are to be held every three weeks, with programs designed to acquaint future law students with the law school and to aid them in selecting academic courses and extra-curricular activities which will give them the best background for the study of law.

Membership is open to all students seriously contemplating the study of law, or desirous of giving the profession consideration before making up their minds definitely.

At last night's meeting Dean C. T. McCormick expressed unqualified approval of the move, declaring that law is not a separate entity, but one branch of social science, which is becoming more and more interlocked with history, politics, economics, psychology and even the natural sciences, which more and more is requiring a broadened background for the successful practioner.

Waddell Gholson explained the purposes of the proposed organization, and as president of the Law School Association pledged the whole-hearted support of that body to the movement.

In line with the proposed keynote of future programs, Professors Connor and Van Hecke spoke interestingly and stimulatingly of the value of history

HAYWOOD TO BE CHIEF MARSHAL

Shore Names Raleigh Man as Alumni Day Official; Class of 1905.

Dr. Hubert B. Haywood, of Raleigh, will be chief Alumni Marshal for Alumni Day of the commencement program, according to an announcement made here recently by the central alumni office. Dr. Haywood's appointment is made by W. T. Shore, president of the General Alumni Association.

The newly appointed commencement Alumni Marshal is a member of the class of 1905, which is observing its twenty-fifth year reunion this June. President Shore is a classmate of Dr. Haywood. For the past several years it has been customary that the twenty-five year class be honored with the office of Alumni Marshal. Dr. Haywood was elected chief commencement marshal by his class in his junior year at the University, and his appointment now is in recognition of that fact and also of his prominence as an alumnus.

Graduating in 1905, Dr. Haywood entered the medical school of the University of Pennsylvania where he was graduated in 1909. Since 1915 he has practiced medicine in Raleigh, and has also served as physician to several institutions there and on the staffs of two hospitals. At the University he was a member of the Zeta Psi fraternity, Gorgon's Head, and Golden Fleece. He was active also in

Radio Presentation Of Amos 'n Andy Attracts Students

Each week-day night as the clock strikes seven, books are hastily dropped, meals are left unfinished, and a mad dash made for the nearest radio, for that is the hour of the most popular entertainment feature of the evening, the Pepsodent presentation of Amos 'n Andy. The large crowd of students gathered nightly in front of the Carolina Smokeshop loudspeaker attests to the large following of this pair of black-face comedians, who regale millions of Americans with their peppy ten minute dialogues.

The fine style of negro characterization which Amos 'n Andy present, combined with an interesting and highly amusing series of events occurring daily in their administration of the Fresh Air Taxicab of America, Incorpulated (1 cab), have succeeded in winning for them a place in the hearts of all radio listeners.

Two broadcasts, usually from Chicago, are given each night by this pair, one at 7 o'clock over the eastern network of the National Broadcasting company, and one at 11 o'clock over the western chain of the same company. From Maine to California, from Washington to Florida all radios are tuned in on the inimitable pair of comedians, who have usurped the position long held by another famous pair of negro dialectitians, Moran and Mack.

Both Amos and Andy, whose real names are Freeman F. Gosden and Charles J. Correll respectively, were at one time residents of Durham. Correll, who is a native of Peoria, Illinois, came to Durham from Chicago, where he had secured a position as director of amateur stage productions, to coach Gosden who is of Richmond, in the art of directing.

They were immediately attracted to each other, and in March 1928 teamed up and began their broadcasting activities. They have continued over the air with only few brief interruptions since that time. Besides broadcasting, they appear nightly in front of Publix theatres' footlights and make numerous recordings.

Davis Lectures To William Cain Club

At the meeting of the William Cain student chapter of the A. S. C. E. held last night in Phillips hall, C. R. Davis, a senior in the school of engineering, presented an illustrated lecture on "The Westchester County Park System."

In the lecture Mr. Davis traced the development of the splendid park system of over 448 square miles in Westchester county, New York. By means of lantern slides he illustrated the reclamation of swamp areas and the development of these areas into parts of the park system.

As a part of the park program, a parkway was built along the Bronx river, the flats at Rye were filled, a low area was dredged to form a lake, and a 4,000 acre forest preserve was established at Poundridge. The unusual part of the entire system is that it was entirely self-sustaining during the past year.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

A sculptor says that, without fearing the comparison, many of our London statues could be placed among the most famous ones in Italy. The trouble is that they aren't.—The Humorist (London).

The New York World mentions the firm of Bee and Blank, "publicity advisors to Colonel Lindbergh." We suppose its connection with this famous client must bring the firm a tidy bit of publicity.—Detroit News.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt says: "World peace is a hundred years away." And when that century is up no doubt there will be waiting plenty of new issues that will have to be fought out.—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

According to Ursula Parrott in the Mentor, women are not having as much fun with "this freedom" as they expected to have. The most obvious growth from the seed of "Equal Everything for Women" is a large and increasing crop of left over ladies. —Atchison Globe.

Tar Heel Topics

The epitome of incongruity: The South Carolina legislature is considering a bill to outlaw the "stretch-out" system.

Anyway, the London naval conference has not been entirely in vain—it has given a few dozen delegates a nice vacation abroad.

Senator Smoot must have tasted a sweet victory yesterday when the Senate passed his bill providing a tariff rate on Cuban raw sugar.

What with a "galaxy of stars" participating, the first Southern Conference indoor track meet in the Tin Can tomorrow night should be quite a brilliant affair.

Washington was fifth in the number of major crimes committed in American cities during January, according to statistics of the International Association of Police Chiefs. Evidently they didn't count those committed by Congress.

An Opportunity for Athletic Eminence

Tomorrow evening a unique event in the history of southern conference athletic competition will be staged in the Tin Can. Track stars of the first magnitude, representing practically every major college and university in the south, will compete in the first conference indoor track meet.

There is a strong probability that the meet will be made an annual affair if it is successful, bringing to the Univesity an event comparable in importance with the conference basketball tournament in Atlanta. Considerable credit is due Bob Fetzer, Dale Ranson and their assistants for arranging the meet.

Although the Tin Can is hardly an example of aesthetically pleasing architecture, it affords excellent facilities for the affair. In fact, it has been converted into a miniature Madison Square Garden through the expenditure of a tremendous amount of hard work. It even excels the famous New York sports center, so far as actual facilities for staging the events on the program is concerned.

The idea of an indoor track meet on a large scale is novel in these parts. But track as an intercollegiate sport is assuming an increasingly important role in the south, and the University will be assured of leadership in it if tomorrow's meet is successful. The program in itself, including as it does a long list of events in which many of the most notable figures of American collegiate track competition will participate, offers inducements to attract every real sports lover here—and that includes practically the entire student body. But the fact that the University is confronted with an opportunity to secure permanently an annual championship tournament places attendance upon the meet in the duty category.

Further Observations of Debating at Carolina

There can be no doubt that the system of debate which is employed by this and other American universities is an imperfect one. American collegiate debaters usually lay too much stress on memorized speeches and too little on the native platform, endeavoring to couch their thoughts in language that betrays no hesitancy. Although these criticisms are valid, they must be considered in connection with the background which the average debater of this, or other American universities, has.

Those who have heard intercollegiate debates in Chapel Hill in recent years have noticed that the participants laid great stress on fine phrases, subtle jest, and a great wealth of extraneous matter that was pleasing to the ear, but which failed to throw much light on the question. The speeches of the debaters have in large measure been reminiscent of after dinner speeches, and as such did not fulfill the expectations of those who hoped to hear the question argued with care and precision. It is not at all uncommon to hear people say "I didn't want to hear a lecture."

These are the common criticisms which people are offering of the debates in which the University has been represented in recent years. An assistant editor of this publication discussed the problem at length in Wednesday's issue, raising several questions which the present writer, who has been rather intimately associated with debating for the last three years, desires to comment upon.

True it is that students always attend the Carolina-British debates in large numbers; but why? Is it not because of curiosity about the looks and voices of the Britishers, rather than to hear the debate itself? It is manifestly unfair to contend that the English system of debating is better than the American plan merely because of the fact that students attend the Carolina-British debates, which are conducted on the English scheme, but refuse to attend debates between Carolina and some other American university which are conducted according to the American plan. When American teams debate in England the audiences are much larger than when two British teams are competing. The crowd is drawn by curiosity, rather than by a desire to hear a discussion of the particular question under consideration.

But let us consider the two plans aside from the problem of the audience. Under the Oxford, or British, plan the subject is not disclosed until the speakers are on the platform. The debate must be entirely extemporaneous. There is a great deal of spontaneity in the speeches, and the debaters lay greater stress on the rebuttal. On the other hand, the American plan provides that the debaters shall know both the query and their respective sides a considerable time before the debate. This enables the contestants to prepare speeches and to memorize them beforehand. A weighty objection to this procedure is that the opposing teams often argue in parallel directions. The result is that the thrusts of the opposing team are often not answered until the rebuttal.

But one must remember that most of the British debaters who come to this country are professional or graduate students, and that the average British college student has a much wider acquaintance with literature and other phases of educational data than the average American college student. Just why this is the case is obvious when one examines the status of English society and scrutinizes the influence of that institution upon the character of the average Englishman. The American college debater cannot hope to compete with graduate and professional debaters from England in a debate where the query is not announced until the audience has assembled. Were this the case, our debates would be less interesting even than they are now.

An intermediate system of debating is rapidly developing whereby the query is announced ahead of time, but the debaters do not know which side they will present until they have taken their places on the platform. This seems to embody the solution to the situation.

Regardless of the numerous criticisms which are being directed at debating, the fact is that students of the University are taking more interest in that activity. The debate squad system whereby the prospective debaters study the question under faculty supervision is proving a great success. For every varsity team there are about eleven well prepared contestants. Debating is gradually regaining its lost territory and will continue to do so as long as the spoken word is supreme.

Readers' Opinions

DR. BAGBY FOR PRESIDENT

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

The writer was much interested this morning upon observing your "presidential ballot" but was greatly disappointed upon noting the absence of the name of the man, who, to my mind, is best qualified to head the destinies of Carolina for the next half-century.

I refer to Dr. English Bagby, of the psychology department. There are many reasons why this man would make the ideal president.

First, his appearance. There is no one on the faculty, probably, with the same appearance of dignity and charm. His very bulk inspires confidence in what he says, and his boyish smile shows a keen interest in everything that goes on around him—often an amused interest—delightful in a college president.

Second, his youth. It is the fashion nowadays to choose youthful men to head colleges and universities. A man as young as Bagby would naturally build for the future.

Third, his permanence. With Bagby at the helm, the very first official act of the new administration would be the building of the finest golf course in the country, at Carolina. And, if Carolina possessed the finest golf course, there would, so long as it was maintained so, never be an incentive for the president to leave. This would be highly desirable.

Fourth, his goodfellowship. No one ever accuses the psychologist of being "high-hat." In fact, he is quite the opposite—he's just "one of the boys." One could always walk into the presidential offices, perch on the official desk and bum a cigarette from prexy.

Fifth, his great interest in humanity. Bagby is delighted when he can aid anyone in psychological difficulties,—and of course, to a psychologist, most difficulties are psychological.

Sixth, economy. My candidate has no expensive habits, and does possess, in fact, comfortable personal fortune. He would undoubtedly work cheaper than many imported presidents.

Seventh, publicity. If Dr. English Bagby were the president of the University of North Carolina, and could be induced to make his characteristic speeches frequently, he would make Carolina known from the San Juan islands to the Florida keys, and from La Jolla to Fort Kent, as well as in distant countries. For there never was another man who could express ideas so interestingly.

THE TROUBLE WITH DEBATING

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

May I be heard on the subject of debating?

J. D. McN., writing on "The Present Plight of Debating at Carolina" in Wednesday's Tar Heel, suggested that all was not well with the venerable institution. Even during a boycott on the Carolina Theatre, it seems, students are unwilling to accept the substituted entertainment provided by the debating team.

I am not so sure that debates are intended to be amusing. The government assessed no tax on them during the war. I stand unalterably opposed to the introduction of tap dancing into intercollegiate debating, and I look askance at piano accompaniment to the third affirmative rebuttal.

The ultimate fault with intercollegiate debating is not that it is unentertaining but that it is ineffective. The antiquated and bombastic diction of the debater fails because it is unsuited to convincing argument. Who says "The gentleman who just left the floor" should be in danger of the Council, and who says "I have definitely and conclusively proven" should be in danger of hellfire, principally because the one statement is trite and wearisome and the other false.

The annoying phraseology of the debater and his devastating puerile seriousness are not what is wrong with debating; they are the results of what is wrong with debating.

An intercollegiate debater should say something definite about a pertinent and generally interesting question. He need not prove anything definitely and conclusively—in most instances he will be unable to do so, strive as he will. The question for debate should be considered as a subject for discussion rather than as a problem to be settled. It is to be seriously doubted whether the twenty-year old debater will be able to prove finally that modern science is, or is not, antagonistic to theistic faith; if he is intelligent and has spent some time in reading about the subject he should be able to express some interesting views on it. The question on which he is to express such views should be selected with some idea of propriety. "Resolved: That disembodied spirits inhabit the crystalline heaven" is inherently uninteresting to a modern audience. "Resolved: That skiing be made a major sport at Carolina" is without local appeal.

The debater fails in the choice and proper discussion of a suitable subject with reference to his own ability, the audience, and the time limits within which he is confined principally because of the system. Since debates are judged and victories appreciated, at least by the coach, the performance of the individual debater is perverted from reasonable discussion to absurd histrionics. Instead of saying anything he asserts everything, hoping that his violence and volume will scare the judges into rendering a favorable decision. Some good is done by replacing (as is done in many Universities) the three voluntary and non-professional judges with a single paid critic-judge who will prefer discussion to declamation. More is accomplished by omitting the judge altogether. It is a mistake to assume that there can be no good debating without an anticipated verdict, just as it is erroneous to assume that women cannot have beautiful legs without Atlantic City contests to determine which has the most beautiful.

When the system of intercollegiate debating is changed to encourage intelligent discussion instead of unintelligent assertion and nauseous bombast, educated people will resume the practice of attending debates.

ARNOLD WILLIAMS.

Daily Prayer

Grant, we beseech thee, O Lord, that whenever we go out of doors, we may draw the chin in, carry the crown of the head high, and fill the lungs to the utmost; that we may drink in sunshine, greet our friends with a smile and put our souls into every handclasp. Grant this, O Lord, for Christ Jesus' sake. Amen.

The above writings, put into the form of prayers for the use of the Y. P. S. L., were taken, for the most part, from "The Notebook of Elbert Hubbard," published by Wm. B. Wise & Co. New York.

Line Candidates For 1930 Eleven Will Exhibit Wares In Veteran - Rookie Clash

Game Saturday Afternoon Will Give New Men Chance to Show Ability Under Fire.

WILL BEGIN AT 2 O'CLOCK

Replacements for Farris, Eskew, Koenig, Holt, and Harper Will Be Watched Closely in Finale Of Winter Practice Season.

Coach Collins & Co. will exhibit a wealth of new line material for 1930 when Monograms and Rookies clash in Kenan stadium at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon in the closing feature of the Carolina winter football season.

Graduation of such men as Captain Farris, Koenig, Adkins, Holt, Eskew and Harper left gaping holes that must be plugged if the 1930 Tar Heels are to approach the success of last year's 346-point season.

A number of fine linemen are coming up from the ranks of the frosh and reserves. From the way they show tomorrow the fans will be in a good way to decide what the 1930 Tar Heels are going to be like.

Some especially strong men are coming up from the tackle ranks, where men are particularly needed. McDade and Smith, regular frosh tackles, have been showing lots of class, as also Underwood, a transfer who will be eligible next season.

Hodges and Redding, converted centers, and Collins are other more promising freshman tackles. Rose, Rowe, Daniels and Oliver are promising reserves.

At the guards, Bob Blackwood, a letterman in 1928 ineligible last year, has consistently shown with the best men in spring training. Kerr, a reserve, is looking good. Philpot,

Freshman Football

There will be a group picture of the freshman football team taken this afternoon in Kenan stadium at four o'clock. It is important that all members of the squad be present.

TWO MAIN TRACK MEN MAY BE OUT OF INDOOR MEET

Ty Reid and Ken Gay Will Probably Not Enter Contest; 300 Entries for Meet.

The University trackmen, state champions and Southern runners-up in 1929, will make a strong bid for honors in the first Southern Conference indoor games here tomorrow night, but will be materially handicapped by the last-minute loss of several stars.

Ty Reid, sophomore, who was being counted as one of the Tar Heels' best hurdle bets, is definitely out with an injured knee, sustained in winter football. Ken Gay, letter sprinter, and high Tar Heel scorer last year, will probably be out due to scholastic difficulties.

The Tar Heels will pin their hopes on an array of 29 entries, outstanding among whom are Farmer, sophomore sprinter; Captain Dave Nims, quarter-miler; Perry, letter hurdler; Barkley, veteran distance man; Lowry, cross-country star; Garrett, letter quarter-miler; Bagby, letter high jumper; Adkins, veteran shot putter; Neiman, veteran broad jumper and vaulter; and Arnold, vaulter.

The other Tar Heel entries will be Slusser, Case, Goodwin, Gray, Erickson, Weil, Hamer, Horney, Simpson, Wrenn, Medford, Rhodes, Shulenberger, Owen, Brown, Bullard, Smith, Dry and Ruble.

Fans will be particularly interested in the sprinting and hurdling of Slusser and Erickson, both new as trackmen in Tar Heelia, but well known as Tar Heel halfbacks, who will compete with such other southern football stars as Armstrong of Tulane, Flippin of Virginia, Chandler of Georgia and Boineau of South Carolina.

CANDIDATES FOR BASEBALL TEAM CONTINUE WORK

First Outdoor Batting Practice Held; Ashmore and Hearn Working With Hurlers.

Baseball practice for varsity and freshman aspirants was resumed on Emerson field yesterday after a four or five-day layoff on account of the weather. The pitchers and catchers utilized the Tin Can for warming-up purposes during the early part of the week, while candidates for the other positions had to remain content with a temporary cessation of workouts.

For the first time of the season, the batting cage was pulled up behind the plate and regular hitting practice was held yesterday. Several rookie pitchers started off with their mound work, while some 30 or 40 batsmen took their swings at the plate. Phil Sher and "Utility" Praxton, veteran outfielders, seemed to find the rookie style of delivery to their liking and poled out several nice ones that would have been good for singles and doubles in a regular game.

Behind the bat to take the throws for the new moundsmen were Potter, Johnson and Kushner. Captain Maus caught for Wright, Fleming and Edwards, experienced hurlers of last year's squad. With fair weather in view for the immediate future, the coaches, Jim Ashmore and Bunn Hearn, expect to get the men down to steady work to be in shape for the opening game with Springfield "Y" soon after the holidays.

The complete schedule will be released in a few days.

Awarded Two Letters

Yank Spaulding, who will play fullback for the Monograms against the Rookies in the closing feature of Tar Heel winter grid work here Saturday, is one of the very few Tar Heel gridders who have been awarded two monograms in one season. Spaulding played in hard luck two seasons, always missing his letter by the closest shade due to injuries. He was high scoring fullback in the state and did such meritorious work last fall that the Tar Heel authorities awarded him a letter for both 1929 and 1928.

Expect Fast Sprints

The sprint lanes in the Tin Can where the first southern conference indoor games will be held tomorrow night, are 60 yards, the longest indoor straightaway in the south, and as long as Madison Square Garden's straightaway. Which means fast times should be the rule tomorrow night, and especially when entries show such sprinters and hurdlers as Flippin of Virginia, Quinn of Maryland, Farmer of North Carolina, Hamm of Georgia Tech, and Armstrong of Tulane.

BOXERS TO GET MAJOR LETTERS

Athletic Council to Place Sport On Parity with Football, Baseball, Track and Basketball.

Breaking a precedent of 19 years the athletic council Tuesday night added a fifth sport to the list of major sports to make boxing, the youngest of the official teams on the campus, a major sport. The move was made retroactive to include the members of the 1930 squad.

The action of the council came as a surprise to the campus, who had hoped that boxing would be raised to a major sport, but expected the move to become effective with future teams.

Archie Allen, captain of the present boxing team and student member of the council, made the motion at the regular meeting. An amendment to make the ruling retroactive was passed unanimously.

Boxing was introduced on the campus as a sport in 1925 when Bill Cox and Addison Warren formed the nucleus of a team which met Fort Bragg, V. M. I., Washington and Lee and Virginia. It was not until the following year, however, that the athletic association made boxing a university sport and appointed Crayton Rowe as coach. The team that year broke even, winning from V. P. I. and losing to the conference-winning Virginia contingent. Ad Warren, captain of the team, went on to win the lightweight and heavyweight championship in the South Atlantic tournament, heavyweight championship and second place in the light heavyweight division of the junior national tournament and second in the heavyweight division of the senior national tournament.

The record of the team this year reveals an impressive string of victories through the first part of the season. Wins over V. P. I., Virginia, V. M. I., Washington and Lee, and Duke were scored in succession. The team met its first defeat at the hands of the strong Florida aggregation which won the Southern Conference title at Charlottesville last week. An intersectional engagement with Penn State was dropped by a 6-1 margin, but the pugilists of South Carolina were defeated by the same margin to complete the season's work.

The last sport to be raised to the status of a major sport was basketball. This newest of sports was introduced at the University in 1911.

An invitation to attend the national collegiate boxing tournament at Philadelphia the 21st and 22nd of March is under consideration by Crayton Rowe.

Passes Will Feature

From the way Freshmen Chandler, Croom and Jackson have achieved success in completing passes in winter grid games at Carolina, it looks as if a great "battle of the air" may be in store for those who see the Monogram-Rookie clash in Kenan stadium Saturday. These frosh will match throwing arms with Magner, Branch and the other Tar Heel passers who helped carry Carolina through its brilliant 346-point season last year.

Football Ends Saturday

Can intensive winter football make a 1930 football team at Carolina like the 346-point wonder team of last fall? Saturday afternoon's Monogram - Rookie game, closing winter grid work this year, may tell the tale to the host of spectators expected for this annual closing feature of Carolina's winter football season.

SIDELIGHTS
by
Sports Editor

THE MONOGRAM-ROOKIE battle in Kenan stadium will ring down the curtain on the 1930 winter grid activities, and will open one of the most active week-ends of the year in regard to sports at Carolina. The first Southern Conference indoor track meet will be held in the Tin Can tomorrow night and will be the climax of sports activities for the week-end.

THE S. I. C. Indoor track meet is another one of the numerous honors that have been accorded to Carolina track recently, mostly through the work of Coach Bob Fetzer. Coach Bob, more popularly known throughout the Conference as "Dean of Southern Track," is one of the main reasons for the acceptance by so many of the members of the Southern Conference of the invitations that were extended for the meet. This Southern Intercollegiate track meet tomorrow night will be the first of its kind, and according to many of the track officials will be the first of a long series of such annual affairs, which will be second in importance only to the outdoor S. I. C. meeting of cinderpathmen.

DUE TO THE EXPENSE of converting the Tin Can into one of the most up-to-date and best equipped indoor tracks in the south, the Tar Heel track officials stated that it would be necessary to charge students as well as visitors for admission to the meet. The track meet and the football game are both extra events from the regular student sports entertainment. The admission price for the track meet will be $1 for visitors and 50 cents for students. Track officials also announce that arrangements have been made so that events will be run off according to schedule.

THE ARGUMENT between the "Anciens et les Modernes" in Kenan stadium will no doubt settle many doubts that some of the alumni have entertained in regard to several of the positions in the Carolina line. The Rookies have several outstanding linemen in their midst, while the "Anciens" will be slightly better provided with backfield material. The numerous gold medals and prizes to be given away to the 20 most outstanding players necessitates the charging of admission for the student body as well as other interested spectators. Entrance fee for students will be 25 cents while others will be charged $1.

THE S. I. C. MEET affords a rare opportunity to the Carolina students to observe an outstanding array of nationally and internationally known trackmen in action, as well as seeing samples of what the Tar Heels will look like in the spring meets.

CAROLINA TO SHOW 1930 EDITION OF FULLBACKS

A quartet of fullbacks who will carry Rookie colors in the Monogram-Rookie game closing Tar Heel winter grid work here tomorrow look especially strong as varsity prospects for 1930. The men are McAlister, reserve; McNeil, regular freshman fullback last year; Suggs, regular freshman fullback in 1928 but out of college last fall; and Lassiter, a transfer.

With Veterans House and Harden due to be back, and with this quartet of stellar youngsters coming up, the Tar Heels should be well fixed at fullback next year, despite the graduation of Yank Spaulding, North Carolina's high scoring fullback in 1929.

WRESTLERS LEAVE FOR CONFERENCE MAT TOURNAMENT

Captain Woodard Leads State Champions to Lexington in Quest of Southern Title.

Led by Captain Wayne Woodard, the state champion Tar Heel wrestlers left yesterday for the Southern Conference tournament which is to be held at V. M. I. in Lexington, Va., this week-end, starting this afternoon and continuing through Saturday night.

The state champions have had a very successful season, having won from V. P. I., Davidson, State and Duke, and having lost only to V. M. I. in the conference. Matches were dropped to Navy and Princeton, the latter by the close score of 15-13.

The conference meet in Lexington will bring together the best teams in the south in V. M. I., V. P. I., Carolina, and the undefeated Generals of Washington and Lee. The Washington and Lee team has swept all of its opposition before it, having won all of its conference matches and having defeated the crack Army team. V. M. I. has won all of its conference matches and has been defeated only by Navy.

North Carolina will send three outstanding men to the meet in Stallings, 125-pounder, Tsumas, 145-pounder, and Cowper, 175-pounder. Other outstanding men to enter are Graves, V. P. I., 115 pounds; Mitchell, V. P. I., 125 pounds; Fields, V. M. I., and Ousterman, W. and L., 135 pounds; Killman, V. P. I., 145 pounds; Mathis, W. and L., and McRay, V. M. I., 155 pounds; Tolman, V. M. I., 165 pounds; Tilson, V. M. I., and Haase, W. and L., 175 pounds; and Davis, V. P. I., and Mitchell, W. and L., unlimited.

The tournament held in Lexington this week-end is the first Southern Conference wrestling tournament, and drawings will be made according to the recognized Bagnall-Wild system.

GOLF TOURNAMENT UNDER WAY TODAY

The second annual "tombstone tournament" of the country club will be held this afternoon as the second of the series of golf tournaments to be held this spring for members.

In this tournament each member will be allotted a number of strokes equal to his handicap plus par for two complete rounds on the course, 52. The contestants will play the course, going just as far as possible on the number of strokes allotted. The resting place of the ball after the final stroke will be marked with the player's "tombstone," a small wooden stake. The member who places his tombstone the furtherest down the course will be declared winner of the tourney.

The first of the spring tournaments was held last week, when 18 members competed. The winner of the last week's playing was Dr. R. B. Lawson, who was presented a prize donated by one of the local merchants.

According to information obtained from those in charge of the tournaments, the course at the club has been greatly improved since last year. During the past few months much work has been done, and a new hole, number 7, has been added.

With the excellent condition of the course at the present time and the fine golfing weather, the committee expects a large field of entries in the tournament this afternoon. All golfing members of the club are eligible to play.

to the lawyer.

History broadens and liberalizes man's thinking, said Professor Connor, and is an absolute necessity to the broad lawyer who regards the law not as a trade like the ambulance-chaser, but as a great profession whose members are not only lawyers but also molders of public opinion and public leaders.

Professor Van Hecke cited a number of interesting examples wherein legalistic holdings can be understood only in the light of history of their development.

His last, that of a supreme court ruling which held a statute forbidding strike injunctions unconstitutional, was especially food for thought.

That decision would not have been written, he thought, if the supreme court had understood the unsuccessful history of strike injunctions, which merely add torment and antagonism to industrial problems, without settling economic disputes before they reach the striking stage.

Student Tosses Bottle Into Ocean; Gets Reply

change in the hands of destiny —or the winds, again! But I am not afraid to "take a chance" —(there's another American expression for you, I'm sure!) For chance — to me — singularly enough, has never been unkind.

Now you are very curious— aren't you?—to know by what particular twist of fate your tiny note landed at last—still dry —in my hands.

It was in this way:

Last Sunday afternoon I was strolling along our pretty beach, near Saint Nazaire, with my aunt. The sun was bright, the air was crisp, the ocean breeze was invigorating—though a trifle careless in its disregard for my dress. This same breeze was gaily punting here and there a small—exceedingly small —sail boat, manned by several very young native fishing boys. They were shoving this way and that way, trying to centralize some small object, which was bouncing up and down in the water. Finally they drew a bottle into their boat. They took out the cork and withdrew a piece of paper. Then they tossed back into the sea the bottle, but not before one of the little fellows had tucked the note into the pocket of his blouse. They came ashore and seeing us still standing, watching the boys approached us. One of them— with hat in hand—gave me the piece of paper, asking me, in French, if I could read it.

To read it was not difficult, as I speak not only English, but Portugese, as well—besides my own language, which is French, of course. My father, a Parisien, was in business in Brazil for over ten years. I spent some years there with him, attending a missionary school in Rio de Janeiro. I hope you will not find deficient my English. All England would be disappointed if you should, because I spent six years in a seminary in dear Old London Town.

I shall not herein include a photographs—though I do hope to receive yours in acknowledgement of this letter. But so that you may have at least some idea of my appearance, I will begin by telling you what most women dread to tell—my age. I am 19 years and two months' old, having been born on the tenth of December, 1911. I was born at Liege. I was there when war broke out. My father immediately entered the service of Belgium. My mother and I moved to London. I am 5 feet 3 inches in height. My hair is dark chestnut brown; my eyes are also brown. Some people have told me they were "deep" brown. I weigh 117 pounds. I am fond of swimming and rowing. I did much of both in England. I have never visited the United States, but I do project a voyage to New York during the coming year.

Now, my dear sir, you see I have not been hesitant in answering your note. But, now I will conclude.

Ships and postoffices now will govern our future correspondence—instead of wind, waves and a long necked bottle.

And I hope that I shall not have to wait for answer to this billet doux as long as you did for a reply to your billet de boteille!

Yours sincerely,

CAMILLE Y. DUMONT.

Line Candidates For 1930 Team Will Show Wares Next Saturday

Petrie, Newcombe and Oliverio, freshmen, all show promise.

Nichols and Walker look to be the best of the freshman ends, with Cole and Davis showing promise also. Grindstaff, Allen, Johnson and Bridgers are the best of the reserve flankmen.

Three promising freshmen are coming up at center in Allen, Grier and Koehl.

Blackwood, guard; Underwood and McDade, tackles; and Walker and Nichols, ends, will perhaps bear most watching. The whole quintet is conceded an excellent chance at varsity line berths next year.

Both Monogram and Rookie squads have been working intensively this week in preparation for that final battle, and announcement of probable lineups shows that with just two exceptions the 1929 regulars will be intact under Monogram colors Saturday.

Jimmy Ward, left halfback, and Fenton Adkins, right tackle, will be the only missing men. Ward was married as he graduated at the close of football season, and is living in South Carolina. Adkins isn't to be allowed to play due to participating in the first Southern Conference indoor track meet here tomorrow night.

Don Holt, who was also graduated, is leaving his job in Graham to come back and hold down left end a final time, and to give a total of nine regulars.

Phil Jackson, who was the hero of last spring's Monogram-Rookie game, will take Ward's post at left halfback, giving an all-star backfield that will show Captain-Elect Strud Nash, right halfback; Pete Wyrick, quarter; and Yank Spaulding, fullback.

George Thompson, stalwart reserve, will take Adkins' place at right tackle, with Holt and Fenner, ends; Koenig at the other tackle; Captain Farris and Eskew, guards; and Lipscomb, center.

Of that starting eleven, Holt, Jackson, Spaulding, Koenig, Farris and Eskew will be playing their final game for all-time here.

The coaches were well pleased with the showing of the squads in this week's hard practice. The probable Rookie lineup has been announced as follows: Johnson and Bridgers, ends; Smith and Underwood, tackles; Newcombe and Petrie, guards; Allen, center; Moore, quarter; Chandler and Houston, halfbacks; and McNeil, fullback.

COX SAYS HOLD FAST TO IDEALS

Brigadier-General Cox Introduced To Junior Smoker By Will Yarborough.

With a speech by General Albert L. Cox, prominent Raleigh attorney, as the feature, the junior class held its second regular smoker of the year last night in Swain hall. Henry House was elected leader of the junior ball with Herbert Nelson and Jack Lindley as assistants. Artie Marpet, vice-president of the class, presided in the absence of Jimmie Hudson.

Following the election of the dance leaders, Will Yarborough was asked by the presiding officer to give a brief financial report. The speaker was introduced by Yarborough, a member of the committee and managing editor of the Tar Heel. In introducing General Cox, he said that it was especially fitting that one whose son was a member of the class should address the class. He summarized the career of the speaker by stating that he has been a member of the University board of trustees for several years in addition to brigadier general in the army and the "next governor of North Carolina."

Emphasizing the necessity of ideals General Cox told the class that he believed them to be of good material. "There is good timber and bad timber," the speaker stated, "and I believe the class of 1931 to be of good timber. Idealism has been the hope of man since the earliest times." Then briefly telling how Lindbergh, Morse, Fulton, Edison and others has been inspired by ideals, the speaker asked the class to hold always to its early ideals.

GREEN WILL READ NEW PLAY SUNDAY

Paul Green, noted playwright, author of In Abraham's Bosom, The Field God, and many other plays, will read his new negro play, The Potter's Field, at the Playmakers' April reading in the Playmaker theatre at 8:30 Sunday night.

The Potter's Field is a long play in one act. Mr. Green described it as a symphonesque. It is to be produced in New York next season by Sidney Ross.

As an added feature of the reading the Chapel Hill Negro Community Chorus and the negro group, the Silver Tongued Quartet, will render a program of negro songs: "Negro National Anthem" by the chorus, "Chapel Hill Boys" and "Ain't It a Shame" by quartet, "I Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray" by chorus, "Hush! Hush! Somebody Calling My Name" and "Let the Church Roll On" by quartet, "Swing Low Sweet Chariot" by chorus, Ezekiel Saw the Wheel" and "My Lord What a Morning" by quartet, "Steal Away" by chorus, and "Nobody Knows" and "Way Down South" by quartet.

Lutheran Speaker Sunday

The Rev. W. H. Greever, D. D., professor of religion and ethics at the Lutheran Theological Southern Seminary, Columbia, S. C., will address the Lutheran Student Association at the regular Sunday morning service, March 9. The service will be held in Gerrard hall at 11:00 a. m.

Playmakers Will React Three Plays

The Carolina Playmakers gave the second performance of their new bill of four one-act plays last night in the Playmaker theatre. The final performance will be given tonight at 8:30.

For Auntie's Sake, the first on the program, is a college comedy by John Patric. Hollyhocks, by Joe Fox, is a New England folk play dealing with a divorce problem. Suspended Animation is a comedy by Kent Creuser. It is based on the struggles of a student in a playwriting class to write his first play. Death Valley Scotty, by Milton Wood, is a California folk play centered about a legendary figure familiar to old prospectors.

In For Auntie's Sake, Suspended Animation and Death Valley Scotty the authors took a leading role. An elaborate set constructed by Elmer Hall, technical director of the Playmakers, added to the realism of Death Valley Scotty, the scene of which is the California desert.

MUSICAL PROGRAM BY ORCHESTRA SUN.

The University orchestra will present a varied program at 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon in the Methodist church auditorium.

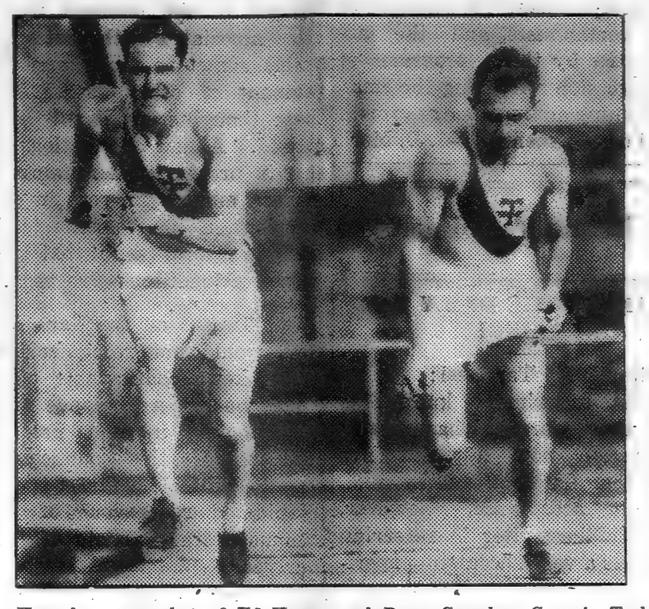
The concert, which will be free of charge, will consist of the following numbers: Slavonic Dance by Dvorak, Haydn's Surprise Symphony, Ballet Music from The Bartered Bride by Smetana, Funeral March of a Marionette by Gounod, and March of the Boyards by Halborsen.

Dvorak, a Bohemian, was one of the few modern composers who used folk tunes as his themes, and his Slavonic Dance is based upon such folk music.

The G Major Symphony by Haydn, well known as his "Surprise" Symphony is one of the most well known works among symphonic literature. While a very simple orchestral number, it is a good example of the completely pure form of his classic school. Built around a simple naive theme, a feature for which Haydn is famous, the symphony is equally interesting to laymen and musicians. It is quite standard in structure consisting of a movement in Sonate form, a slow movement with variations, a minuet, and a rondo.

During the afternoon a silver offering will be taken, to meet certain incidental expenses of the orchestra which are vital to its existance and cannot be obtained in other ways.

Carolina Glee Club In Contest Tonight



The University glee club tonight will participate in the national intercollegiate glee club contest at 8 o'clock in Carnegie Hall, New York City.

Only the first few places won will be announced immediately after the contest. The procedure will be the same as that of the district contest which the Carolina club recently won in Greenville.

At noon today, after a short morning rehearsal at the Park Central Hotel, the club will attend a lunch given at the Harvard Club by Albert E. Pickernell, president of the national glee club council.

The group plans to leave New York tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock.

Georgia Tech's Flashes

Here is a new shot of Ed Hamm and Doug Graydon, Georgia Tech's "Big Two," who will be among the most versatile athletes at the Indoor Games here tonight. Hamm is a world champion on the broad jump, Graydon throws the javelin 205 feet, and both boys rated with the South's best sprinters as well.

ORIENTAL SINGER PLEASES CRITIC

Ratan Devi Has Rare Talent In The Opinion Of Reviewer Greenblatt.

(By Milton Greenblatt)

Mme. Ratan Devi, who appeared before a large audience in Swain hall Thursday evening, has the rare talent of understanding both the oriental and occidental music. Thus she is able to explain the exotic field of Hindu folk music to audiences thoroughly unacquainted with it, and by her skillful performance, to make it enjoyable and somewhat intelligible.

She has a rich, well-controlled contralto voice though a little rough in its lower ranges. Her singing is restrained, careful and thoroughly artistic.

Although its structure is much different from that of western music, the Hindu folk song does not sound vastly different nor very strange. It is only necessary to listen to it carefully, and the ear becomes as accustomed to it as it does to our own music. The Hindu music stresses melodic quality, utterly ignoring harmonic bases. The songs Mme. Ratan Devi sang are based on a scale having 22 divisions, as compared with our own of 12. This minute interval division gives the music an extreme delicacy, and often a plaintive, strange sound.

It was hardly possible to hear the artist's explanatory remarks to the music. The audience was noisy, restless and somewhat indifferent. But what could be heard was splendid, and extremely interesting.

SWARTZ WILL ADDRESS STUDENT BIBLE CLASS

Dr. J. H. Swartz, professor of Geology, will speak to the Students' Bible Class of the Methodist Church Sunday, March 10 at 9:45 A. M. The subject of Dr. Swartz's talk will be "Immortality and the Possibility of Communing with God through Prayer."

"Tombstone" Postponed

The "Tombstone" golf tournament, which was to have begun yesterday afternoon at the country club course, has been postponed, according to R. B. Lawson, chairman of the golf committee, and will be played on Friday and Saturday of next week.

MUSIC DEPARTMENT TO GIVE RECITALS

The department of music will conclude its year's work next quarter with a series of recitals in which the department organizations, students and faculty will take part.

Students in the department will be required to attend all the programs, which are planned not as ordinary concerts, but as a definite part of their routine, giving them experience both in participation and in listening.

Recitals will be general, with students of piano, voice and various instruments, appearing on the same program. However, divisions will be made between elementary, intermediate, and advanced pupils, in that each grouping will comprise a separate recital. The distinctions will be made regardless of the pupil's age, but rather with respect to the length of time he has studied and his general proficiency.

In addition, the department will sponsor a program in the Chapel of the Cross at which an advanced organist will appear, and a general faculty recital some time in May. The regular spring concert of the University glee club and perhaps a concert by the orchestra in Kenan stadium will be included in the series.

Two of the student recitals are planned for April and two for May. The elementary programs will be for the most part in the afternoon, while the advanced students will perform in the evening.

Fund Up To $264.70

The Campus Relief Fund for the Poor of Orange County was increased yesterday to a total of $264.70. The latest contributions came from W. P. Fuller, Snydor Cozart, Sam Silverstein, and from two anonymous benefactors.

Ninety dollars of the amount has been realized from the benefit picture which was shown at the Carolina theatre last Sunday afternoon. The rest has been donated by students and townspeople. The Tar Heel will continue to conduct the fund through the three remaining issues of the quarter.

Donations may be made to Dr. T. M. Brooks, Box 747, or to any member of the Relief Committee.

Three Hundred Stars Here For Southern Indoor Track Games

Ticket Notice

Tickets for the Southern Conference track meet will be issued and punched at the afternoon series of events and will be good for the events beginning at 7:00 o'clock. There will be no reduction in the price of tickets which are used for the night events only.

The charge is made necessary because of the fact that the meet is not a regular University event and there is no special appropriation to cover the expenses of installing the extra equipment and conveniences of the meet.

Ten Colleges And Universities To Be Represented In Tin Can; Preliminaries At 4:00 O'clock.

The first Southern Conference Indoor Track Meet and games, the greatest ever to be held in the Southland, will get under way this afternoon beginning at 4 o'clock in the Tin Can. Preliminaries will be staged at 4, while the meet proper will begin at 7 o'clock.

More than three hundred of the South's best track and field stars have entered the meet. Such names as Flippin, Hamm, de Coligny, Day, Quinn, Farmer, Sandiver, Simon and a host of others are enrolled and give promise of the greatest athletic contest yet put on in the South this winter. Men are here from ten colleges and universities in the South stretching over so wide an area as Louisiana to Maryland.

Officials for the meet have been chosen from the best that the organizers could find. Heading the list will be J. J. Stegeman, J. V. Mulligan, Frank A. Knopf and W. A. Alexander. The Tin Can presents this morning the best indoor track and field combination which has ever been put together this far south. Workmen for several days have been busy remodeling the structure into a vast arena in expectation of the large audience anticipated.

Among the institutions having the largest representations here for the meet are Georgia Tech, Washington and Lee, Duke and Carolina. On the strength of reserve material these schools should have a slight edge on the others entered for the championship.

Ed Hamm, Olympic star and holder of the world's record broad jump, is a pre-meet favorite in the 60-yard dash. Quinn, who came in among the first in the recent Meadowbrook games, and Farmer of Carolina are also classy looking competitors. The Carolina officials have been busy preparing a long straightaway which is as long as any in the South and slightly longer than that used in Madison Square Garden.

The 60-yard high and low hurdles will occupy the attention of Harry Flippin, Virginia's stellar runner, who has been bothering world's records for the past two seasons. De Coligny, who starred on the line of Tulane's Green Wave last fall, Maddox of Georgia, Freeman of Duke, Speer and Finklestein of Washington and Lee, Harvey of Georgia Tech, Kennedy and Boineau of South Carolina, and Perry of Carolina will push Flippin all the way.

The hard 440 has attracted what may prove to be the fastest competition of the meet. Remsburg coming from Maryland has already this year placed second in the meet held at Virginia. Sheppard and Dickey are stars of the first rank and are entered from Washington and Lee; Ottinger and Floyd, La Forge of Georgia Tech, Cooke of Duke, and Dave Nims of Carolina present an unsually strong field.

In the half-mile, McGinn of State, on the basis of his placing second in the conference last spring, seems to be the best early bet, but will have to meet.

FACULTY MAKES CLASS ATTENDING HONORS MATTER

Optional Attendance Goes By Board Except For Junior And Senior Honor Roll Men.

At the meeting of the undergraduate faculty yesterday afternoon, the following motion was passed, to become effective next quarter: Resolved: (1) That optional attendance for all juniors and seniors be abolished. (2) That juniors and seniors holding positions on the honor roll in the preceding quarter will have the privilege of voluntary attendance in all courses.

Whereas heretofore all upperclassmen in the schools of liberal arts, education, and commerce have held the privilege of absenting themselves from class meetings on all junior and senior courses, now only the select few whose names appear on the honor list for the preceding quarter may do so, but the privilege will extend to freshman and sophomore courses. The lowered scholastic standing of a certain percentage of the student body, added to the conditions prevailing generally before and after holidays and on week-ends, is considered responsible for the somewhat reactionary procedure of the faculty members. About three years ago, due largely to the efforts of Dean Addison Hibbard, the system of voluntary attendance was instituted as more or less of an experiment, with the understanding that at any time the faculty was at liberty to revoke their decision.

A second motion passed at the meeting reads as follows: Resolved: That within a period of ten calendar days, at the beginning of a quarter, all registration must be concluded, and that all changes of schedule of courses must be made in the same length of time. This provisions extends somewhat the time limit for registration and changing of schedules.

Betas To See Show

Beta Theta Pi fraternity will be entertained by the management of the Carolina theatre at the 7 o'clock show tonight, according to an announcement by Manager E. C. Smith.

The Betas are asked by Mr. Smith to be at the theatre promptly, with their president. Other fraternity and dormitory groups will be guests of the management of the theatre from time to time throughout the school year.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

One of the common causes of skepticism is the sight of Christian people saying one thing and doing another—Professor James Moffatt.

Locked Classrooms And Approaching Exams

Most of us are scurrying about the campus with harrassed expressions upon our countenances these days. Exams are no joke to procrastinators—and what college student does not procrastinate as far as writing term papers and preparing for examinations are concerned? Most of us postpone the inevitable as long as possible, stifling the persistent complaints of an outraged sense of duty with vague, half-formed and highly implausible excuses; and during the last two weeks before exams we discover that we are in a bind. In a few days of feverish activity we attempt to redeem the mediocrity of three months of lethargic indifference to academic duties.

But the "swivet" before exams is inevitable. It is human nature to procrastinate in the performance of unpleasant tasks; unfortunately most of us are inclined to regard classroom assignments as necessary evils, to be postponed until the last possible moment. And all the good resolutions and intentions in the world cannot materially change human nature.

There are no valid reasons why conditions should not be made as favorable as possible for last-minute preparations for exams, however. The procrastinator is under tremendous psychological and physical handicaps when he finally begins his frantic efforts to retrieve his fast-diminishing chances of satisfying the scholastic requirements. He should be given the opportunity of studying under conditions most favorable to concentration and application, And the average dormitory or fraternity room most assuredly does not provide these conditions.

It is true that the library reading rooms offer excellent facilities for private study. But frequently two or more students wish to engage in "bull-sessions" on their courses, in order that they may express to their mutual benefit whatever knowledge they may have gleaned from them. In addition, there are many persons who cannot concentrate except in absolute privacy.

During the afternoons and evenings practically all of the University class-rooms are not in use. These rooms provide the only suitable places for group "bull-sessions" on courses, and frequently offer privacy for the student who wishes to study alone. Yet the powers that be have evidently issued a dictum that all class-rooms are to be locked when not in actual use for classes.

Very little damage would be done to furniture and woodwork by those who wish to utilize the class-rooms for afternoon and evening sessions of studying, in our opinion. But evidently the buildings department and administrative officials do not see it that way.

Possibilities of trivial damages to class-rooms are not sufficient justification for barring students when they wish to study in them, however. Especially is this true during the week or two preceding final exams. Quite a few failures might be averted if the class-room buildings are opened at all times to students from now until after examinations.

The Police Suppress Communistic Parades

Communists throughout the world staged parades and celebrations Thursday as a protest against unemployment and in order to get more converts to communism. As was expected "red Thursday" was marked by many outbreaks of violence; there were riots in New York, Detroit, Washington, and several other larger cities of this country as well as more serious trouble in many of the cities of the state.

Trouble in Washington, New York, and Detroit was caused by the efforts of the police to stop the celebrations; this was a violation of President Hoover's declaration that the police should not interfere as long as things were peaceful and orderly. While very little serious damage was done by the skirmishes with the police, an untold amount of hard feeling and bitterness was aroused. If the parades had been allowed to go on peacefully and undisturbed, the effectiveness of the celebrations would have been diminished.

America can never successfully combat communism by violence and interference. Such tactics have been unsuccessful in fighting socialism in Germany and communism in Russia. Reactionary measures will do more to increase the communistic following than a quiet and passive non-interference. Communist agitators should have the right to organize and parade as much as they like; only when property is destroyed or violence done should the police step in. Suppression of any doctrine of belief is contrary to the basic principle of American liberty.

According to press reports many thousands of people followed the red flag Thursday, most of them ill-kept and poorly fed destitute men in the last straights of wretchedness, many of the unemployed joined the ranks in the blind hope of doing something for themselves. These people will follow any move that promises to bring relief. The demonstrations Thursday showed an enormous potential strength for the communists.

Much has been done to exaggerate the number of communists in America; the press has played every act of violence up in the light of communistic or bolsheviki influence. Even Secretary Kellogg once so lost his diginty and reason that he blamed the American trouble in Mexico on Russia and communism. All the talk and discussion over the strength of communism in this country is in part a press racket; the newspapers are overemphasizing the strength of the communists, and the authorities by their program of suppression are giving the small beginning an impetus for growth and development. —J. D. McN.

Readers' Opinions

ANENT THE DAILY TAR HEEL

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

That experiment known as the Daily Tar Heel has been in operation now a scant five months. Its local and intercollegiate acceptance, however, justify the writer in referring to it as a very successful experiment.

Several of the leading college papers of the country have of late reprinted a large number of editorials and news articles from this official organ of the Carolina student body. Among these are the University Daily Kansan, the McGill University Daily (Canada), The Parlez-Vous of Converse College, The Chronicle of Duke University, Michigan State News, and numerous others. One wall of the office in Alumni building is literally covered with clippings from college publications all over the nation. The greater part of these are editorials which have appeared in the Daily Tar Heel from time to time; a large number are news articles, however. In no spirit of boastfulness, we say that such popularity must be deserved. That the Daily Tar Heel is receiving much more recognition and comment than the old tri-weekly ever did is a factor which we cannot overlook when we consider the merits of the experiment in the field of daily collegiate publications, which the students of the University last Spring voted to launch.

Before the advent of the Daily Tar Heel there was not a daily paper published in Chapel Hill. The townspeople were, therefore, ill-informed concerning local news and local announcements. The daily student paper has alleviated this grievance to a very large degree, according to comments which the staff has received from citizens of the village and the surrounding neighborhood.

Numerous open forum letters and verbal discussions of the publication seem to indicate that the students of the University are, as a whole, deeply interested in it. To date the matter of the Daily Tar Heel has been discussed a number of times in the two campus literary societies. Both went on record recently as stating that the paper in its present form represented a successful undertaking in intercollegiate daily publications.

The change from the triweekly to the daily was merely a step commensurate with the great progressive strides of the University itself. We believe that the present attitude of the students toward the Daily Tar Heel is such as to assume its further development in future years.

INTERESTED OBSERVER.

Scientists now say that the human race is at least a million years old. If that is true, it is even more backward than we thought it was.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Arrow - Man

By J. C. (Red) Williams

Wandered we weary, silent, and quite alone by the site of old Memorial hall. One by one we thought of the pleasant memories associated with that venerable structure—the crumbled remnant of other days. But these thoughts we hastily dismissed. A new foundation we saw in process of hardening, a modern auditorium rose in our imagination—mute, stone testimony to the prowess of that arch enemy of tradition—Progress!

Old Timers on the Tar Heel staff would not recognize the neatly kept, comfortable office which we modern campus bull-slingers work in. The present quarters of this publication stand out in bold contrast to the dilapidated rendezvous of the campus literary artists of former years.

Typewriters that could not be very easily sold for junk once smeared pages of student literary effort. No tables, no desks, and no radiators, nothing but a time-worn cuspidor eased the eye from the utter barrenness and bleakness of the Tar Heel office of a decade ago.

The theory in vogue now is that of making the office so attractive that the members of the staff will be drawn to spend much of their time in it is the pursuit of pleasure and recreation. Now that the theory has been proven a good one by the wide recognition which has been accorded the Daily Tar Heel, we suggest that the same theory be applied to classroom situations.

We have of late noticed an ebb in the swirling eddies and trenchant tides of criticism that once poured in upon us, the student body, from all parts of the state. Time was when well-meaning religious leaders preached at, about, and to us—cleaiming that we were all agnostics or worse. Even this has calmed down a bit. It is distressingly monotonous—this unbroken cadence of peaceful, still, dull days. We, the student body, have been sublimated into conformity.

But 'twill not be ever thus. Campus politicians are now drinking the milk of human kindness through the same rye straw. Things are "getting right," in the political brogue. Yet the coming period of extreme campus activity, although it is certain to occur, will be brief. Sluggish tides of life, a standardized faculty, and a mechanical student body—these things train on, and on, and on.

THE REASON OF MAN

(By ourself)

Although our mental organ has never been known to penetrate very far into the realm of mystery, the only reason we have been able to find for man is—Woman. Let us elucidate a bit:

Be he the chief justice of the United States supreme court, or robber of the Twentieth Century mails, be he commander of the American army, or scavenger of his city's alleys, if a newspaper reporter questions man: "Why art thou whom thou art?" his answer will be "Woman."

The most constant, sensible, just, unjust, wise, fickle, foolish, incomparable,—the very acme of powerful weakness is man's "better half." A clinging vine that props the mighty oak and keeps it from falling! The weakness that is power! Woman; the inarticulate, and the voluble: Man, the spinxlike, if questioned, must reply with an enigma—"Woman."

We take great pleasure here in announcing that the next of our series of essays on pertinent topics, "The reason of woman," will appear in the next issue of this column.

The right honorable Atlanta Constitution made the startling discovery the other day that opera stars look somewhat like other human beings. The paper carried pictures of two of the sopranos that were performing in the city, and pointed out that they were very similar to the average housewife. There goes another illusion!

The biggest joke we've heard in a long time as that intercollegiate debating should be condemned because it is not amusing. Who is there among us that expects to get entertainment free on this campus? Debating was never intended to be a medium of gayety and frolic. The author of the above contention is a bit misinformed.

WARNER BAXTER'S ROLES ARE REFORMING HIM

Warner Baxter is improving by degrees. In "In Old Arizona" as the "Cisco Kid," he was a genuine bad man, in "Thru Different Eyes" he betrayed his best friend, but in "Such Men Are Dangerous," Fox Movietone all talking drama based on Elinor Glyn's intriguing story, he is bad only in the early sequences of the picture, which is Monday's feature at the Carolina.

In "Such Men Are Dangerous," Baxter portrays the role of Ludwig Kranz, a multi-millionaire manufacturer who, because of his ugly face is deserted by his bride. His plans for revenge miscarry when, after employing plastic surgery, he again succombs to her charms.

Catherine Dale Owen, described as the most beautiful blonde of the films, enacts the role of the wife and the supporting cast also includes such splendid artists as Hedda Hopper, Albert Conti, Claude Allister, Bela Lugosi and Lucy Lorraine.

FOR AUNTIE'S SAKE
By JOHN PATRIC

HOLLYHOCKS
By JOSEPH PHILIP COX

SUSPENDED ANIMATION
By KENT CREUSER

DEATH VALLEY SCOTTY
By MILTON WOOD

Four new playwrights and a host of new actors made their debut at the Carolina Playmaker theatre Thursday evening before a partially filled house. The playwrights have come to the University from four different sections of the Union, and for the first time the curtains parted on a Playmaker production which had neither a native author nor a local folk play on the bill.

For Auntie's Sake is a playlet by John Patric which deals with the successful attempt of a clever college student to over-awe a feminine newcomer to the campus by a display of his remarkable power of telepathy. Unfortunately, the author had previously used the plot as the basis for a story in the Tar Heel and it lacked novelty to the majority of the audience. Miss Lottie Frances Mays gives a charming portrayal of the naive and gullible girl, although she over-emphasized all of her lines which showed any degree of astonishment. The author, Mr. Patric, failed to give a convincing interpretation of a sophisticated college man. His opening telephone conversation was more in the nature of a soliloquy since he recated in no way to the ramarks coming from the other end of the line. However, he did in part redeem himself during the last few minutes of the play after the successful completion of his favorite trick had given him such advantage as to allow him to appear indifferent. This is the Playmakers' first attempt in the field of vaudeville, for the play is nothing more than a "skit," and the advisability of such a venture is strongly doubted.

It is to be regretted that the characters and underlying theme of Hollyhocks and Loretto Carroll Bailey's Job's Kinfolks are so basically similar. Mr. Fox has written a play dealing with the ideals and trials of a simple but honest New England family. It is oppressive in its tragic outlook, but sincere in its characterization of real people. It is not a great play, but it has the elements necessary for a great play. It is to be hoped that the author will not let the thought behind it die in its infancy, but that he will develop it into a long play worthy of such a situation and such conflict. The acting throughout was only mediocre, showing the lack of careful, detailed direction. Bobby Koch, however, proved himself a worthy offspring of a theatrically inclined father in part of the devoted little boy.

Suspended Animation presented an interesting insight into the actual job of playwriting. It is nothing more than an amusing incident in the life of three college boys. Among the followers of English 31 it will recall similar episodes when a play had to be written within a limited time. The play is unusual in that the stage characters are actually played by the same boys who served for the models of the written play. The impressionistic set was effective and the actors were very successful in appearing perfectly natural.

An appreciative applause was accorded Elmer Hall's set for Death Valley Scotty. Mr. Hall demonstrated his ability to overcome the limited space of the theatre's stage in designing a desert set which gave the effect of distance, although from the footlights to the back drop is scarcely over 15 feet. The play itself deals with a colorful character of Death Valley. Milton Wood, the author, played the title role with understanding, as well he might, since the character is well known to him. Eveland Davies and Robert Davis were very good as the "tenderfeet" who came in search of gold, although the latter overacted his part in the more dramatic situations. Kent Creuser and B. C. Wilson gave their two grunts and an "Ugh" each with much finesse, their make-ups as Hopi Indians being especially good.

This is undoubtedly one of the weakest bills which the Playmakers have produced in recent years, due, in part, to the fact that most of the production staff was away on tour during the majority of the rehearsals. It is to be hoped that the future will find more time spent on the bills which are to be given for the entertainment of the local patrons of the theatre.

Field All Set For Monogram Rookie Battle This Afternoon

Game Will Be Swan Song Of Eight Men; Captain Farris To Lead Last Time Today.

Two camps of Tar Heel gridders stacked arms last night and waited tensely for today's Monogram-Rookie game, annual closing feature of winter football, which will give fans their first real line on whether the 1930 Tar Heels will live up to the record of their predecessors of 1929.

The Monogram-Rookie feature is to be played in Kenan stadium at 2 o'clock, so that spectators can go directly from the grid features and catch the beginning of the preliminaries for the first Southern Conference indoor games.

Captain Ray Farris, all-southern guard, will lead the Monograms into the fray—Captain Farris' last at Carolina. With him will be eight other regulars from last fall's finest Tar Heel team of all-time.

Pete Wyrick, quarterback; Strud Nash and Phil Jackson, halves, and Yank Spaulding, fullback, will team together in the Monogram backfield, with such other Monogram stars as Johnny Branch, Jim Magner, Chuck Erickson and Henry House, held in reserve for the second charge.

With Don Holt, graduated at the close of last football season, leaving his job in Graham to come back for one more last game, the Monogram line will be the same fighting, charging line of '29, except for Tackle Adkins, who will be kept out by his track participation. Holt and Fenner will man the flanks; Bill Koenig and George Thompson will have the tackles; Captain Farris and Bud Eskew will be at guard; and Ned Lipscomb will hold down center.

The Rookies will present their own quota of power. A group of new-coming backs—Moore, Chandler, Houston, McNeil, Croom, McAlister, Suggs, Lassiter and others—have been showing with the best in the intensive six weeks of practice. Last year's freshman line was unusually strong. All in all, a great battle is expected.

Probable lineups, as announced by Coach Collins are as follows:

Monograms		Rookies
Holt	L. E.	Johnson
Koenig	L. T.	Smith
Farris	L. G.	Newcombe
Lipscomb	C.	Allen
Eskew	R. G.	Petrie
Thompson	R. T.	Underwood
Fenner	R. E.	Bridgers
Wyrick	Q. B.	Moore
Jackson	L. H.	Chandler
Nash	R. H.	Houston
Spaulding	F. B.	McNeil

TRACK AND FOOTBALL IN GALA PROGRAM AT U. N. C.

The fact that the Monogram-Rookie game closing Tar Heel winter grid work and the first Southern Conference indoor games are both to be held on one gala program this afternoon is putting a number of versatile athletes in a quandary.

Adkins, Slusser, Reid and Brown, star trackmen, are not to get to play in the final football classic, but will have to look on from the bench, to keep in shape for the big track meet.

CO-EDS WIN LAST GAME OF SEASON

Johnson Features A Last-Minute Rally To Win Over Fayetteville High School Sextet, 26-24.

Staging a brilliant rally during the last three minutes of play to overcome a four-point lead, the Tar Heelettes closed their season last night in Bynum gymnasium with a 26-24 win over the Fayetteville high school sextet.

Johnson of the co-eds caged two foul shots in the last two minutes to provide the winning margin. The game was hard-fought throughout, with Thacker, Johnson and Lee of the co-eds and Biggs of the visitors providing the features of the contest. Last night's game marked the close of a successful season for the local basketeers in their first year of competition with teams from other institutions.

At the end of the half the co-eds were leading 15-8, but the Fayetteville contingent had pulled up on even terms, 18-18, at the end of the third quarter.

Says Us

by
Browning Roach

Adherents of the division of the southern conference into two sectors, one comprising the northern institutions and the other the southern ones, should find some more supporters of their views around Chapel Hill now. After the University of Georgia knocked the Tar Heels out of the conference football title by administering to them the only defeat of the 1929 season and then, not yet satisfied, eliminated Carolina in the basketball tournament, Tar Heel fans are about ready to take any steps necessary to get rid of the Georgia jinx. A division of the conference into two sectors would clear the situation up satisfactorily for all concerned, just so Carolina and Georgia were placed in separate divisions. We don't mean to imply that we are afraid of Georgia, or any other Southern Conference team, but the Crackers were most certainly instrumental in messing up what was otherwise an untarnished gridiron record. Here's hoping we get it back on them next year.

The Tin Can having established itself as a practicing ground for almost every sport indulged in at Carolina, why not make it all-inclusive and add tennis to the roster of athletic events engaged in beneath its spacious roof? This colossal structure has, so far as we are able to ascertain, been utilized for basketball, track, boxing, wrestling, football, fencing, baseball, golf, handball, volleyball and "doug." The Tin Can contains ample floor space for marking off one doubles and two singles courts, and tennis candidates would be able to make use of these when occasional spring showers drive the men off the outdoor courts. As it is, with more than half the courts undergoing recontsruction while the drain systems are installed, the courts fit for use do not begin to accommodate the persons desiring to play. Almost any sunshiny afternoon between two and five o'clock you can go out to the tennis courts and find every available court in use and a number of players sitting on the sidelines waiting their turn.

We have heard from semi-authoritative sources that the co-eds are planning to put out a tennis team this spring. From the way some of them handled a basketball during this past cage season, we judge that they would be good at tennis. A smaller sphere and a racket with which to manipulate would seem more fitting to their athletic attainments. We have observed—from a distance—a few of them swinging a racket in the last week or two, and if many of them can handle a swift serve and back-hand drive as well as a couple we know of, the co-eds ought to be able to get up a good team.

Heavy Hurdlers Here

Harry Flippin and Calvert deColigny, who are doped to set the pace in the hurdles at the first southern conference indoor games here this evening, tip the scales at almost 200 apiece, a strange thing for such speedsters! Flippin has broken or tied three indoor world hurdle records in the last two years. DeColigny ran the outdoor high hurdles as a freshman last year in 15.3, a story which needs no comment.

Cobb Memorial Scores Win Over N. C. Co-Eds

In a game characterized by a scoring race between the opposing centers, Cobb Memorial won from the Co-ed sextet at Bynum gymnasium Wednesday night by 31 to 20. T. Gatewood, center for the visitors, dropped in nine field goals and a foul to lead the scoring. Thacker of Carolina, ranked a good second with 12 points. L. Gatewood of Cobb Memorial and Johnson for the Co-eds, showed up best at the forward positions, with the former registering 10 points and the latter 6.

The Co-eds wind up their court season with a contest with Fayetteville high school at 7 o'clock tonight at Bynum gym.

Tulane Star

Here is a picture of Ike Armstrong, Tulane halfback, who might look more familiar in football togs, but who, nevertheless, will be one of the outstanding sprinters at tonight's First Southern Conference Indoor Games in the Tin Can. Armstrong's running against such other football stars as Chandler of Georgia, Stout of State, Boineau of South Carolina and Slusser of Carolina should be a big feature.

WARNER BAXTER IN "SUCH MEN ARE DANGEROUS" AT THE CAROLINA THEATRE

Adapted from Elinor Glyn's sensational romantic story, with Warner Baxter and Catherine Dale Owen in the leading roles, "Such Men Are Dangerous" Fox Movietone production, will be Monday's feature at the Carolina Theatre.

"Such Men Are Dangerous" is heralded as one of the best pictures made since the screen began to talk and embraces all the required elements of solid entertainment, suspense, thrills, drama and comedy with more intriguing twists than Miss Glyn has heretofore offered.

Not since his splendid performance in "In Old Arizona" in which he portrayed the character of "The Cisco Kid," has Baxter been more delightfully cast. Catherine Dale Owen, acclaimed the most beautiful blonde of the films, recently supported John Gilbert in "His Glorious Night."

The cast includes such notables as Hedda Hopper, Albert Conti, Claude Allister and Bela Lugosi. It was directed by Kenneth Hawks.

Three Hundred Stars Here For Indoor Games such men as Barnhart of Georgia, Broderick of Washington and Lee, and Barkley, Carolina.

The long races will hold spot attention on the card due to the rivalry which exists between Simon of Duke and Young of Georgia, Lowery of Carolina, Ochs of Virginia, Heizer of Duke, Crisfield of Georgia Tech, Johnson of State, and Biddle of Washington and Lee complete a fine field.

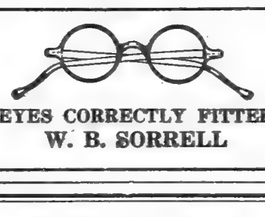
Day is the most popular entry in the shot-put and is a Virginia man. Competition will be forthcoming however from Patterson of State, Adkins and Brown of Carolina, Jones of Georgia, and McDonald of Maryland.

The indoor high jump has called out Bagby of Carolina, winner of the event at Virginia's meet, in addition to de Coligny of Tulane, Freeman of Duke, Kennedy of South Carolina, and Paxton of Virginia, and it looks like Bagby may lose his first position unless he exerts himself.

Ruble, Smith, Dry, and Arnold are being counted upon by Carolina fans to offer some pretty stiff competition to the field composed of Turner and Sharp of Duke, Cooke of Virginia, and Pomeroy of Washington and Lee.

Hamm, world champion in the event, and Graydon competing for Georgia Tech will lead the broad jumpers. Bostick of South Carolina, White of Maryland, Sandifer and Finklestein of Washington and Lee, and Neiman and Brown of Carolina will be pushing the Georgia Tech favorites.

Washington and Lee, present record holder in the mile relay, has sent Sandifer, Dickey, Broderick, and Shepard to uphold the honor of their institution, but the teams representing Georgia Tech and Carolina will make the Washington and Lee men step on it to come out first again. Farmer, Nims, Weil, and Hamer are scheduled to run for Carolina.



Freshman relay teams in the running will come from Elon, Georgia Tech, Presbyterian College, Virginia, Washington and Lee, Davidson, Duke, and North Carolina.

High schools and prep schools sending relay teams are Augusta Military Academy, Charlotte high, Georgia Military Academy, Asheville high, Hyattsville Height school in Maryland, Wilmington high school, High Point high, Greensboro high, Tech high of Atlanta, and Goldsboro high.

Delta Tau Delta announces the pledging of Frank W. Owens and Jimmy O. Moore of Charlotte.

WHAT YOUNGER COLLEGE MEN ARE DOING WITH WESTINGHOUSE

Special cars were needed . . .
railway tracks had to be lowered, to handle the transformers these men built

AT Conowingo, Maryland, is the second largest hydro-electric development in the world. Power generated there at 220,000 volts will be fed into lower voltage transmission lines of the Public Service Electric and Gas Company at Roseland, near Newark, New Jersey.

The transformers that will perform this transfer of energy are physically the largest ever built, for their capacity is sufficient to serve the home lighting needs of a city of a million people. Four in number, each is larger than a house, weighs when empty as much as a large locomotive and holds three tank cars of oil. Four specially built railway cars and fifty-two standard cars of various types were required to transport them from the factory to the job. At one point the railway tracks had to be lowered so the units would clear an overhead viaduct, so great was their size.

When spectacular jobs like this come up, it is natural that they go to an institution like Westinghouse. Pioneers in electrical development, Westinghouse engineers often know the thrill of achieving the "impossible" in seeing their work through from design to erection.

The ballot box in the lobby of the Y. M. C. A. will be open until 10 p. m. Students are urged to mark their choice on the ballot which appears on this page and place them in the ballot box. The result of the voting will be announced in Tuesday's issue of of the Daily Tar Heel.

Professors Graham and Connor are professors in the department of history and have distinguished themselves in their work for the University, both in the history department and in the affairs of the institution in general. Archibald Henderson, professor of mathematics and literary critic, has rendered much valuable service to the University on committee work and in the mathematics department.

R. B. House is executive secretary of the University, and has demonstrated that he is quite capable of performing the duties of the presidency.

Dr. Ben Lacy is president of Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., and is considered by many to be one of the leading educational figures in the south. He is a son of the late Ben Lacy, who was for many years treasurer of the state.

Justices Stacy and Brogden have been connected with the life of the University for many years and are both well acquainted with the affairs here. They have served as visiting professors in the University law school from time to time.

Professors William E. Dodd, of the history department of the University of Chicago, is one of the leading educators of the country and has been suggested for the presidency by a large group.

W4WE Communicates With 16 Foreign Stations During Contests

(By Beaumert Whitton)

During the two weeks of the international long-distance message handling contest, the University radio station, W4WE, carried on communication with 16 foreign stations on four continents, and amassed a total of 400 points in the contest, which is sponsored annually by the American Radio Relay League.

The farthest station with which contact was made was VK6FL in Perth, Australia, which is almost 12,000 miles from Chapel Hill, and which lacks only a few degrees of being on exactly the opposite side of the world. However, the station in Perth is not the only far distant station worked during the contest, for communication was also established with VK6SA at Victoria Park, Australia, and K6ALM, in Honolulu.

The operators of the station, Stanley Preston, Bill Adams, and Jack Houston, maintained watches at the station practically continuously during the contest period, and as a result of the early morning watches the station in Perth and the one in Victoria Park were picked up on consecutive days.

In Europe the station communicated with two French stations, one at Paris, F8KZ, and one in the southern part of the country, F8EX. Because of the fact that the European stations had to be worked during the late afternoon and a high frequency of electric current the machine was operated on the campus during most of the afternoons, no other European stations were contacted. Considering the fact that there was a great amount of local interference, the local operators were lucky to communicate with even these two French stations.

While amateurs generally consider South America a harder continent to communicate with than Europe, the operators were able to exchange messages with stations in four countries on that continent proper and on four islands in the Caribbean.

Brazil, Ecuador, Argentine, and Peru were the South American countries with which the University exchanged messages. Of the islands, Cuba, Jamaica, Porto Rico, and Virgin Islands were the ones with which contact was established.

For W4WE, probably the most rapid exchange of messages was with station NJ2PA, in Jamaica. The entire operation of calling the station, giving a message and taking one in return occupied slightly less than two minutes. In addition to being the most rapidly handled message during the contest this message was said by one of the operators to be one of the fastest transmitted by the station in quite some time.

In addition to the stations in South America and the Caribbean Sea, the station communicated with a station in New Foundland, the only one in North America which counted as a foreign station.

The results of the contest,

Washington And Lee Comes Off First In Conference Meet Here

Generals Nose Out Tar Heels 29-27; Georgia Tech and Maryland Tie for Third Place.

TWO THOUSAND ATTEND

(By Marion Alexander)

In a thrilling finish, that hinged on the outcome of the final relay run, Washington and Lee nosed out North Carolina and carried off honors in the varsity division of the first games in the Tin Can last night.

Washington and Lee, by virtue of a first in the relay, had 29, while North Carolina finished just two points behind, with 27. Other Conference teams finished as follows: Georgia Tech and Maryland, 13; Tulane, 11; Virginia and Georgia, 10; N. C. State, 6; South Carolina, 5½; Duke, 4½.

The North Carolina freshmen led their field with 21 points, followed by Duke with 8 and Washington and Lee with 7. Augusta Military Academy carried off honors in the scholastic division with 22 points, followed by Tech high of Atlanta with 8, and Raleigh with 7.

The final relays of the meet brought to a climax a great track meet that held 2,000 spectators rooted to their seats to the last minute, and drew a participation of 230 athletes from ten Southern Conference institutions, eight freshman teams and 12 high and prep schools.

The Tar Heels jumped into an early lead when Bagby tied for first in the high jump and Arnold took first in the pole vault. Charlie Farmer, sophomore sprinter, put five more points in the North Carolina larder with a first in the 60-yard dash in 6.4 seconds, time that equalled the best in this year's Millrose games.

Washington and Lee began forging ahead at this point by the great performance of its sprinters and hurdlers. Sandifer and Finkelstein accounted for four points in the 60-yard dash. Speer added five in the high hurdles, Sheppard five in the 440, Finklestein five and three on first and second in the low hurdles.

At that point the score stood North Carolina 25 to Washington and Lee 24, with the mile relay to settle the issue, and with Washington and Lee with a relay team that swept away all opposition in last year's Southern Conference, and boasted such a star as Williams, individual Conference 400 champion.

Weil, in the mile relay, ran Washington and Lee's leadoff man to a tie on the first lap, but Garrett, running second, fell on a curve and lost valuable yards that could never be regained, despite fine running by Captain Nims and Farmer. Washington and Lee took first, and thus nosed the Tar Heels out, 29-27.

Fast times and stellar performances featured the meet all along the route. Brodie Arnold, Tar Heel vaulter, approached the southern outdoor record and broke a University record with a 12 foot 7 inch vault that is believed to be the best indoor mark ever made in the south.

Farmer, Tar Heel sophomore phenom, equalled the Millrose games' time, 6.4 seconds, on the 60-yard dash. Young of Georgia, Southern Conference cross country champion, set the fast

PLAYMAKERS END BILL OF 4 PLAYS

Performance Last Night Closes Three-Day Run of One-Act Dramas.

Presenting their final performance last night, the Carolina Playmakers closed a three-day run of their new bill of one-act plays at the Playmaker theatre.

The plays presented were: For Auntie's Sake, a college comedy by John Patric; Hollyhocks, a New England folk play by Joe Fox; Suspended Animation, a comedy in playwriting by Kent Creuser; and Death Valley Scotty, a California folk play by Milton Wood.

Elmer Hall, technical director of the Playmakers, constructed an elaborate set for Death Valley Scotty, in which play the scene is laid in the California desert. All of the productions were first plays. In three of them the authors took a leading role. Suspended Animation, presenting the efforts of a young playwright to create his first play, was unusual in that the participants in the original "bull session" from which the idea came took part in the play.

Reverends Rozzelle And Godbold Change Pulpits For Today

Rev. C. E. Rozzelle, minister of the local Methodist church, and Rev. Albea Godbold, of the College Place Methodist church, will exchange pulpits for the usual Sunday morning services today.

Following his sermon in the Greensboro church, Rev. Rozzelle will journey to Charlotte where he will deliver the dedicatory address at the new Meyers Park church, which he organized five years ago. Rev. Rozzelle was first pastor of the Charlotte church before answering the call to the local church.

Like Rev. Rozzelle, Rev. Godbold also ministers to a college group. His church is located just off the campus of the North Carolina College for Women.

ORCHESTRA PLAYS THIS AFTERNOON

The University orchestra will present a program at 4 o'clock this afternoon in the Methodist church auditorium. The concert, which is free of charge, consists of the following numbers: Slavonic Dance by Dvorak, Haydn's Surprise Symphony, Ballet Music from the Bartered Bride by Smetana, Funeral March of a Marionette by Gounod, and March of the Boyards by Halborsen. An added feature will be Dvorak's String Quartet, Opus 96, to be played by T. S. McCorkle, first violin, Mrs. E. D. Strong, second violin, Mr. Hugo Giduz, viola, and Mr. Charles Pier, guest 'cellist.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

It is safer that a bad man should not be accused than he should be acquitted.—Livy.

Administrative Oppression And Faculty Censorship

College newspaper editors are frequently labeled as chronic gripers, referred to as baby radicals, adolescent communists, and described in all manner of approbrious terms. They are accused of being hyper-critical of administrations, campus conditions, state and national affairs, everything else except their own editorial efforts. And these accusations are not entirely without justification; editing a college paper is likely to convert the most cheerful of individuals into habitual pessimists.

But the average college or university can stand quite a bit of criticism. Indeed, the need for criticism is so apparent that the man who does not recognize it is blind indeed. The college editor who fails to call attention to undesirable conditions and abuses on his own campus, or anywhere else for that matter, is not worth his salt. And, after all, everyone has a right to express his own opinions, even a college newspaper editor.

Recently the student board of control, in charge of the Minnesota Daily, University of Minnesota campus newspaper, was dismissed by university authorities because "the paper was not a representative publication of the university administration." In our opinion, a student newspaper should be abolished when it becomes a "representative publication of the administration," rather than censured because it does not conform to administrative dictum. Student opinion and initiative are very effectually throttled when campus publications are brought under the thumb of faculty dominance.

A striking case in point is the Pitt Weekly of the University of Pittsburgh. This publication seems to furnish a perfect illustration of what a student paper should not be. Editorial comments in the Pittsburgh dailies refer to the student publication as the organ of the administration, and assert that it is controlled tooth and nail by the authorities. The following quotations from a recent editorial in the Weekly seem to justify the charges of the daily papers:

"As the stock market crash threatened the foundations of industry, the good name and reputation of the University is being threatened with a series of magazine and newspaper articles attacking the administration; the Carnegie Foundation athletic report accuses Pitt of undesirable athletic policies; the American Association of University Professors say the faculty is kept in submission through force; the football team is ridiculed for a crushing defeat, and Chancellor Bowman is widely criticized about the Cathedral by jealous contemporaries. . . .

"If everyone connected with Pitt retains his faith in the administration and stands behind his Alma Mater, all the criticisms will be wasted and the enemies of the University will soon forget their antagonism. Pitt policies are good and will eventually gain us our place in the sun. When our beautiful Cathedral of Learning is opened for the inspection and admiration of the world all discussions about alleged suppression of free speech, intimidated faculties and subsidized athletics will vanish. And newspapers and magazines will be printing stories of praise instead of scorn for the University of Pittsburgh and for its courageous chancellor.

"The silence method is a good one to pass on to those loyal to Pitt. When a pointless argument arises concerning the policies of the University, say nothing, but retain within yourself the faith that all will be well in the end."

The urge to silence in this editorial is in line with Chancellor Bowman's absolute refusal to discuss in the slightest the expulsion of two students for holding "radical opinions" the firing of the graduate assistant, the dissolution of the University Liberal Club by administrative order, and the A. A. U. P. and Carnegie reports. When a college newspaper not only refuses to criticise administrative policies which are obviously opposed to liberal thought and independent opinions, but actually attempts to stifle such criticism from other sources, something is radically wrong.

We do not mean, of course, that rabid fanaticism, criticising for the sake of criticism or attracting attention alone, should be encouraged. That is an entirely different matter. But liberal thought and independent opinion should be stimulated and encouraged by the college administration, rather than suppressed. The University of North Carolina administration has always encouraged these things; seldom, if ever, have student publications on this campus felt the iron hand of faculty censorship, although criticism of administrative policies and procedure has been not at all infrequent. We are fortunate indeed.

Progress Or Retrogression?

The University of North Carolina has, for a decade at least, been looked upon as a promulgator of liberal policies and progressive movements. But the tide has turned; no longer than three days ago the faculty voted to abolish the present system of optional class attendance for juniors and seniors, and in so doing made a distinctly retrogressive movement.

Owing largely to the efforts of Dean Addison Hibbard, optional class attendance for all juniors and seniors went into effect here in the spring quarter of 1927. The files of this publication show that the agitation for the abolition of compulsory attendance for upperclassmen dates back to the winter quarter of the collegiate year 1924-25. Why was the present system adopted? Simply because it had been proved a success in the largest and most progressive universities of the nation; to wit, Princeton, Chicago, and others equally high standing. This step was taken because it was commensurate with the progressive policies of the University. And yet those in power have seen fit (though not at all clearly) to return to the prep school idea of compulsory class attendance. Perhaps, the next movement will be to require all students to be in bed by nine o'clock. This is most certainly the next stopping place along the retrogressive road.

Let us elucidate a bit concerning the compulsory system of attendance which the faculty has returned to. Every student will feel that he has cheated himself out of something unless he takes his full quota of ten "cuts." Is there any reason to believe that these will be wisely or sparsely distributed?

When professors know that their students are obliged to attend their lectures there is little inducement for them to make a conscious effort to make their class work interesting to the student. At present there are very few professors here who try to make their lectures interesting, and yet they blame students for their lack of interest. If the student has to "sell" himself to the professor in order to pass, why not let the professor "sell" himself to the student by making his lectures interesting? If instructors know that their pupils are compelled to "catch" their lectures, then there is no incentive to make them care whether their hearers are listening to interesting discussions or not.

Having had courses under Professors Connor and Bagby, the writer knows that these members of the faculty have had no difficulty in getting students to attend their classes since the adoption of the optional attendance rule in the Spring of 1927. Why is this the case? Simply because they make their lectures interesting and have a definite interest in the members of their classes. (There are, no doubt, other teachers of junior and senior courses who fall in this category; but who have not fallen within the experience of the present writer.)

In adopting optional attendance for upperclassmen, we followed the example set by the educational leaders of the country; in returning to compulsory attendance we adhere to the principles of prep schools and small colleges. If we are men when we attain to the rank of junior or senior, why are we to be dealt with as children?

Ours is the spirit of the braggart; ours, the art of bluff. We claim to be progressive, but have suddenly become retrogressive. We claim to be a leader among leaders in the field of higher learning, but we have a faculty which thinks our leadership will be accelerated by catering to the disciplinary measures of prep schools and small colleges.

Many wonder why the progressive members of our faculty are gradually drifting away to other schools. Upon realizing that the conservative element in our teaching force has suddenly gained the supremacy, we can wonder no longer.

Such is the situation which confronts the student body of this university; such is the state of affairs to which we call attention. —J. C. W.

The Pre-Law Association

A new organization, the Pre-Law Association, has recently been added to the many on the campus. But this orgnization gives promise of filling a much needed function. There has long been a need of closer relationship between those students in the undergraduate school who contemplate entering certain schools such as those of law, medicine, and even the graduate school of other subjects, and the schools of their choice. Such a bridging-the-gap function the Pre-Law Association will endeavor to perform.

Those who have been most instrumental in the formation of the group state that no students will be either persuaded or dissuaded to enter the school of law. The organization will be concerned mainly with courses and extra-curriculum activities of most benefit to pre-law students and with association of those students with leaders of the bar and experts on legal subjects. Debates on certain questions also will probably be held from time to time although the organization is by no means merely a debating society. These aims, if carried out effectively, will result in better preparation of the student for the study of law.

Too often the complaint is made that students in their undergraduate work do not gain the proper background for specialized study. The average student, uninstructed as to the courses which will aid him most in later work, omits those courses which are essential to the broadest understanding of the subject he is to pursue. This is a situation which, of course, demands a remedy, and the effort of the Pre-Law Association in this connection should be fruitful. We heartily endorse the move of the pre-law students and hope that it will stimulate to similar action other students who plan to take up specific work in higher schools.—B. M.

Readers' Opinions

THE LITERARY ABILITIES OF RICHARD CHACE

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

In the past I have often taken part in heated debates concerning the literary abilities of that very much discussed young writer in our midst, Richard A. Chace. His prolific contributions to the Carolina Magazine have caught the attention not only of the whole student body, but also, I am told, of the faculty. The content of both his poems and his prose articles have been of such unusual quality as to attract comment and stir discussion. Their form has also aroused debate. Chace admirers, of which I am one, have been ardent in praise. Many have even gone so far as to label his poems the evidence of a budding genius. Strong praise for undergraduate writing! And yet—why not? Genius must bud somewhere. Why not on a college campus.

On the other hand, Chace devotees have met with emphatic contradictory opinion. "Too vague." "Too involved." "Too highbrow." "Pedantic." "Just tries to copy the classics." "Hasn't got his feet on the ground." "Who does he think he is anyhow? Keeps to himself with his head in a book all the time. The guy's got human-ink in his veins!" Such have been the contradictory opinions expressed.

I confess to having been one

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

The optional attendance dictum of the undergraduate faculty will hit some of us rather hard, becoming effective as it does in the spring quarter. Juniors and seniors, according to the recent vote, will now have to attend all classes all the time, unless their names have appeared on the honor roll the preceding quarter. There are times when the sunshine in Chapel Hill is entirely too alluring to permit staying in a classroom an entire morning and part of an afternoon.

Yet, as one whom the new ruling will particularly effect, we cannot doubt its wisdom. After all, professors cannot be expected to give of their best if faced by a class of two or three hardy souls, however eager and thirsty for knowledge they may be. And Sparrow's Pool in the spring is an undoubted menace.

There were those at the Southern Conference indoor games yesterday who envied the athletes. They were working hard, yet they were keeping warm. Sitting on a wooden bench in the air is not calculated to cause the discarding of overcoats at this season of the year. And as usual at these affairs, the officials at the games seemed to constitute half the crowd attending. It seems that it requires at least six able-boded grown men to do away with one little split second, when an athlete is trying to knock it off.

Restraint is a little word, yet it can accomplish much. For instance, if restraint were cast to the winds by Tar Heel reporters, we might expect some interesting results.

As the reporter writes the event now:

SINGER GIVES INTERESTING RECITAL

Before an enthusiastic audience last night at Swain hall, Mme. Touch Topnote presented the eighth of a series of entertainments for the student body. Mme. Topnote's program kept her audience interested all through, especially during the last group of folk songs. Her pitch in the top register was exact, while the third division of the tonal scale was not only pizzicata, but at times almost forte. Mme. Topnote is a thorough artist, and the students were fortunate in being able to hear her delightful presentations.

ORDER OF PAIL TO GIVE DANCE

A large crowd of girls is expected to attend the dance to be given Saturday night at 9 o'clock by the Order of the Pail. Unique and tasteful decorations will make the dance floor a veritable fairyland, while the music by Jack Dalton's internationally known and justly famous Carrboro Boys. The dance is expected to be one of the best of the season.

And as he would like to write it:

JUST ANOTHER RECITAL

Mme. Toucha Topnote gave another recital in the series given for the benefit of the student body, and ably succeeded in putting her audience to sleep. The program was completely over the heads of the listeners, especially the high notes. Fourteen sleepers were observed in one row toward the rear. The technique may have been good, but this reporter knows nothing about it, having been out in the Swain hall kitchen most of the time. The coffee was good.

PAIL TO THROW A BRAWL

The Order of the Pail is to give another dance Saturday night, and fondly expects to attract a few girls to it. They may. The announced time for the start is 9 o'clock. Gentlemen will arrive at 10:42. The usual streamers will be called "decorations," and the Carrboro Boys will rattle around under the impression that they are fulfilling a contract which calls for music. The effort of the Pail to put on dances here is praiseworthy, but the supply of skirts is limited. Bring your girl—and if necessary, bring a co-ed.

And lastly, a front-page spread many readers would like to see:

TAR HEEL COLUMNIST SHOT IN THE BACK, KILLED

Sartorial Sway

By Beau Gent

The six-day bicyclers are whooping it up again in New York. That is why Madison Square Garden, for the next few days at least, is as good a place as any in which to observe what the well-dressed man is favoring in the way of sartorial splendor. All day and night the place is frequented by a heterogeneous crowd that ranges from the habitual speakeasy drunk to the snootiest people in the country. And even a drunk may be well dressed. The most interesting reports, however, were concerned with hat styles.

The best bet for popularity is a St. Moritz type of hat, that is, it closely resembles the Swiss yodeler's headgear. It is narrow brimmed, with a raw edge, and is made to be snapped down in front only, while the sides and back turn up all the more, giving a still narrower effect.

The Homburg style of hat is popular with men who favor the more formal type of overcoat, with a snap brim is not appropriate and a derby is not desirable.

In derbies, the man who likes the flat set brims will find many models available, but the general derby tendency is toward the narrow brims, with a decided roll.

The pearl grey, being a staple color, is popular as usual because it harmonizes with most shades of grey and blue.

The collar-attached shirts are being given a break by the shirt makers and the result is many different collar cuts that were hitherto impossible to find except in the unattached collar. Among these there are four widely divergent cuts.

One is the increasingly popular soft collar practically without points, which is rounded in front, and which, correctly worn, has a short collar pin at the tips of what points there are.

Another shirt, eliminating the fault that is often found with button-down collars, is constructed with a three-inch spread separating the button points.

The third has rather generously pointed tips, leaves ample space for a large knot in the tie, and is worn with a collar pin.

Whatever you do—in the way of collars—don't wear stiff collars if they annoy you. It is an amazing thing to see a fellow trying to appear well dressed in a stiff collar and suffering all the torments of hell while doing it.

Monograms Defeat Rookies In Fiercely Fought Contest 45-6

Veterans Maintain Their Record Through Last Game; Magner's Passing Overcomes Defense of Rookies.

(By Sherman Shore)

The Monograms, playing their last game together in Kenan Stadium, presented a powerful passing attack to defeat the Rookies yesterday 45-6. Although handicapped with a muddy field and a strong wind, both teams did some good playing, especially in the line work.

The first score was made when Spaulding crashed through center during the early part of the first period after Jackson had placed the ball on the four-yard line. The remainder of the quarter was mostly an exchange of punts with neither side making any great gains. Several substitutions were made.

The second quarter began with the Monograms in posession of the ball on the Rookies' 19-yard line. After attempts to make a first-down failed, the ball went over on the Rookies' own 15-yard line. Another exchange of punts took place and then the Monograms began to loosen up with their overhead work. Magner threw a pass to Fenner which was good for 13 yards and a little later threw another to Jackson for 21 yards. At this point the Rookies began to tighten up on their defensive, and the ball went over. A fumble cost the Rookies several yards, and they punted up to mid-field. A pass, Jackson to Spaulding, made a good gain, and on the next play Magner flipped one to Erickson who ran the rest of the way for a touchdown. Magner passed to Harden for the extra point. Gilbreath intercepted a pass a few minutes later and brought the ball back to the Rookies' 25-yard line. The Monograms were penalized for holding, but on the next play, Magner threw a 26-yard pass to Jackson who went through for a touchdown. Harden made the extra point on a line plunge. The half ended with the score 20-0.

The third quarter was somewhat like the first with the ball staying near the center of the field. The Rookies presented a line defense that held the Monograms at bay. Magner fumbled and Underwood broke through to recover the ball. After Chandler had made two yards on a line play, he passed to Moore who went over for a touchdown. This was the only score the Rookies made during the game. The try for extra point failed.

During the remainder of the game, the playing was for the greater part in the Rookies' territory. Gilbreath secured the ball on a fumble, and after a successful fumble, and after a succession of line drives, Harden went over for the fourth touchdown. Attempt for extra point was no good.

The greatest gain was made on the first play after the next kick-off when Magner broke through right tackle and ran 45 yards across the goal. The Rookies were offside, the extra point going to the Monograms.

Another pass, Magner to Wyrick, was good for 18 yards. Strud Nash made 11 yards on a tackle play and a moment later went through to make the final score. Magner's place-kick was blocked, and the game ended with the score 45-6.

Croom, Underwood, Suggs, Moore, and McNeill did some excellent playing in the backfield for the Rookies, and nearly all the line players did consistently good work. Of the Monograms, Magner, Spaulding, Erickson, and Jackson accounted for most of the scoring.

FOUR TEAMS TIE IN FENCING RACE

Sigma Epsilon, Sea Hawks, Beta No. 1, and Zeta Psi Leading All Competitors.

With but two more weeks of intramural fencing remaining before completion of the schedule, the teams have reached a definite form of rating. Beta Theta Pi No. 1, Zeta Psi and the Sea-Hawks are heading the league, closely followed by Sigma Epsilon, Sigma Phi Sigma, Manly and Ruffin.

This is the last week of the regular schedule, the week of the return from holidays to be devoted to final eliminations among the leading teams.

At the end of the league race, there will be an invitation tourney to decide the all-campus team. Invitations will be extended to those ten men whom Director Hendlin considers having the best potentialities. Some of the fencers under consideration are: Whedbee of Sigma Nu, Furghott of the Sea-Hawks, Egan of Manly, Waugh, Fenker and Uzzell of Beta No. 1, Dike of Sigma Phi Sigma, Lowry of Old East and the members of the Zeta Psi team.

Standings of the teams:

Sea-Hawks	2	0	1.000
Beta No. 1.	2	0	1.000
Zeta Psi	2	0	1.000

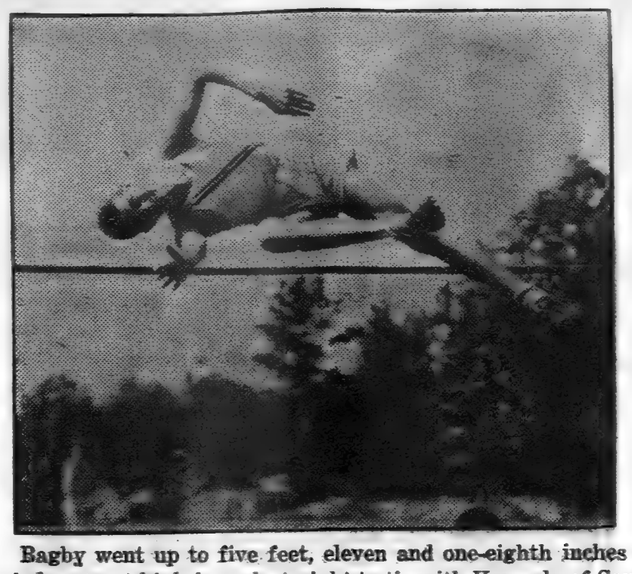
Hard-Surface Courts

Mr. Brown of Nashville Is Coming to Superintend Construction

A. D. Browne of Peabody College, Nashville, Tennessee, who originated the type of hard-surface tennis court to be used here, will come to Chapel Hill in two weeks to supervise the construction for the University. The University is to have five of these all-weather courts, and two or three more are to be built in the village.

The Browne type of court, which has proven so successful in Nashville, is built of crushed rock, covered with asphalt, into which sawdust is rolled. The process makes for smooth, fast courts and allows for play in winter and summer. The new courts are to be on the lower level of the University's series east of the campus.

Acorcding to Coach Kenfield, play on the new hard-surface courts will begin April 1, when he hopes to have his tennis and golf schedules completed.



While Mr. Browne is here he is to assist in the laying of one hard-surface court for P. C. Farrar near the Country Club and another for a faculty group in the grove back of the President's House.

BERRYHILL TO ADDRESS MITCHELL SOCIETY MEET

The regular monthly meeting of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society will be held Tuesday evening in Phillips hall at 7:30.

The program for the meeting will consist of a talk by Dr. W. R. Berryhill, of the medical school, on "The Effect of the Eating of Liver on Pernicious Aenemia," and a short discussion of "Some Thermodynamic Studies of the Nitrotoluenes" by Dr. H. D. Crockford, of the chemistry department.

Bagby Hits High Spot

Bagby went up to five feet, eleven and one-eighth inches in the indoor meet high jump last night to tie with Kennedy of South Carolina for first place.

S. I. C. SPORTS

(Jack Bessen)

An unfortunate accident deprived Carolina of prize honors in the first Southern Conference indoor games held in the Tin Can last night when Dick Garrett's baton struck a spectator. Up to the time of the relay, the score was 24-25 favor of Carolina with Washington and Lee second.

Hard luck seemed to stick to the Tar Heels throughout the games. In the 440, Nims, while rounding a turn, stumbled over the man in front of him and as a result, could not place. Lowery, in the 880 was the victim of a similar accident.

The games were featured by a new University record in the pole vault. Arnold of Carolina topped Vernon Cowper's mark of 12 feet, 5 inches with a jump of 12 feet, seven inches. Arnold then tried to top 13 feet but was unable to make it.

Charley Ochs, Virginia's lone representative in the two-mile run, provided one of the thrills of the evening. Charley ran most of the race in eighth position, but with three laps to go, spurted to third and remained there. Bob Young of Georgia, was first with Duke second.

Charley Farmer won the feature of the evening—the 60-yard sprint. Charley won his heat, the semi-final, and the final. Farmer also ran a beautiful race in Carolina's futile attempt to overtake Washington and Lee.

The fans wanted to see Ed Hamm, the holder of the world's broad jump mark, and they certainly got it. Ed was in the broad jump, sprints, and in the low and high hurdles. The other record holder, Harry Flippin of Virginia, was unable to make the trip on account of scholastic difficulties with the medical faculty, and as usual, the faculty won.

George Bagby went over his head in winning the high jump. George cleared 5 feet, eleven inches for the first time in his life.

The enthusiasm and the great number of the crowd practically assures the games as being an annual event. The games will probably be held in either the Virginia gym or the Tin Can, because of the facilities.

All the officials were attired in "tucks", but that didn't hinder them from capably handling the meet.

Among the notables were Governor Gardner, a Carolina alumnus, and most of his staff. Practically all of the faculty attended.

Such a galaxy of high school and prep stars were never brought together for one meet as were there last night. There were teams from Charlotte, Raleigh, Wilmington, High Point, Augusta Military Academy, Georgia Military Academy, and Greensboro.

Clarence Jensen, former Newark Prep star, seems like a sure bet for next year's varsity. The way Jensen walked off with the mile run was simply beautiful. Jensen immediately took the lead and stayed out in front all the way, never diminishing his speed.

Finklestein of Washington and Lee was the greatest factor in the General's triumph. Finklestein won the hurdles and also ran a good race in the mile relay.

It certainly is a pleasure to watch deColigny of Tulane to either high jump or run the hurdles. That boy is all form, and gave a good account of himself during the meet.

Gay Lothario Fails To Break Into Co-Ed Faculty Reception As Science Instructor

Spring has been here and in its wake it has left enamoured youths and maidens. One of the strongest of this type was the young sophomore who crashed the faculty reception given by the co-eds at Spencer hall last Friday night.

This young Romeo just had to be with his "girl friend and just had to be at the reception—and therein hangs a tale.

Two fertile brains thought as one for a while and the result was this plan.

The boy would be with the "girl friend." He would come to the reception and be introduced as one of her science instructors. To both that seemed a very good plan.

But came Friday night, as the movie subtitles would say, and the "boy friend" showed up at Spencer hall.

In the course of events everything ran smoothly and the gay young Lothario was in lover's heaven. He had managed to be with his Beloved and had incidentally done what very few undergraduates would attempt to do—crash the faculty reception. This also gave zest to the occasion.

But imagine his surprise when he was introduced to his science professor as one of his instructors. The crasher was stunned into speechlessness—Even if he had wanted to, he couldn't have said "Fancy seeing you here"—so he turned and ran in confusion to the nearest exit.

Needless to say that young man has lost all of his "One Eyed Conolly" ambitions.

JUDGES SELECT GRIDIRON STARS

Medals Awarded by Committee To Score of Tar Heel Players.

The University of North Carolina held its first winter football carnival contests today in connection with the Monogram-Rookie game, closing winter gridwork.

Twenty gold medals were were awarded outstanding stars of the spring squad on the basis of today's play and of field trials in the kicking events.

M. D. Whisnant, Dr. Foy Roberson, W. A. Blount, William Ferrell, Thomas Gresham, Garrett Morehead, Harry Schwartz, and Odell Sapp, all former Tar Heel stars, aided the Carolina coaches in selecting recipients of the awards.

The selections follow:

Best offensive end play, Bridgers; tackle play, Thompson; guard play, Fysal; center play, Lipscomb.

Best defensive end play, Walker; tackle play, Thompson; guard play, McIver; center play, Lipscomb.

Best offensive halfback, Chandler; fullback, McNeill; quarterback, Wyrick.

Best defensive halfback, Daniels; fullback, Suggs; quarterback, Moore.

Best ball carrier, Nash; best forward passer, Magner; best pess receiver, Moore.

Best punter, McNeill; best drop-kicker, Daniels; best place-kicker, Houston.

CANDIDATES FOR BASEBALL START OUTSIDE PRACTICE

Advent of Warm Weather Brings Aspirants Outdoors; Coaching Emphasis on Hitting And Catching.

With the advent of warm weather, the Tar Heel baseball candidates have resumed their regular outdoor practice. A backstop has been set up and the boys are whaling away at the ball in big league style. Three hour practices are being called daily by Coaches Hearn and Ashmore, and they are placing most emphasis on the hitting and pitching, at least two hours being given over for batting practice.

Carolina's baseball hopes were given a severe jolt when it was learned that Henry House, veteran outfielder and one of the team's strongest hitters, would be out for a part of the season on account of an injured arm sustained in a spring football match.

The batterymen are fast rounding into shape, and Coach Ashmore should have little trouble in finding a formidable mound corps. The pitching staff will probably be built around the two veterans, Fleming and Wright, while of the newcomers, Scarrboro and Longest are showing great form.

This year Carolina should have one of the most formidable catching staffs in the south. Built about Captain Maus, Bob Kushner and Petey Potter, this trio should have little trouble in holding the slants of the pitchers, and in addition to this, all these men are good batters.

In the outfield there will be two veterans, Phil Sher and Henry House, but a great many outfield candidates are out and Coach Ashmore will have little difficulty in finding his third gardener.

Carolina will see three veterans in the infield, Rand and Jackson will divide the second base assignment, Whitehead will cover short, while Lufty, a former first baseman, will guard the hot corner.

time of 9 minutes 57 seconds in the two-mile, and Linzey led a fast half-mile field through a great 2 minute 2 second race.

Ed Hamm, Georgia Tech's world champion, took the broad-jump with ease, on a 22 foot 7 inch leap, but didn't extend himself, perhaps due to being below top form on account of an automobile wreck last week-end. Harry Flippin, Virginia's world champion hurdler, was unavoidably kept away from the meet due to proximity of medical examinations, but Speer and Finkelstein of Washington and Lee set a pace in the hurdles that was distinctly stellar.

Hamm, at that, proved his versatility by winning high scoring honors for the meet, 9 points, on a first in the broad jump and thirds in the 60-yard dash and low hurdles. Speer of Washington and Lee was second with 8 points scored on a first place in the high hurdles and a second place in the low hurdles.

Hawkins Discusses Asphalt Highways

William Hawkins, chief construction engineer of the State Highway Commission, spoke Friday afternoon to the senior class in civil engineering on construction methods and laboratory practice of the commission.

Accompanying Mr. Hawkins to Chapel Hill were Mr. Carmichael and Mr. Fields, both of the highway commission.

In his talk Mr. Hawkins described methods used by the commission in mixing and laying concrete and asphalt highways, and told of the many tests that the commission runs on pavement to determine the most suitable material for highways in North Carolina.

W4WE Communicates With Sixteen Stations

which are to be published in QST, the radio amateurs magazine, will not be known for some time yet, for reports from all stations taking part in the contest must be forwarded to the Relay League headquarters for checking. Every station even those in the fartherest countries, must send their reports to be checked, because to count in the contest a message must be accounted for at both the sending and the receiving station.

The University station recently became eligible for membership in the W. A. C. club of the I. A. R. U. by having carried on two way communication with stations in every continent. The initials W. A. C. mean "Worked All Continents," which is quite an honor for a station.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the station became eligible for this honor only last fall although the final continent, Asia, was worked about 6 months previously. The intervening time was required for the Q. S. O. card to reach America from Iraq, where the station was located.

A "Q. S. O." card is a one bearing the call letters of the station from which it is sent. Amateurs all over the world exchange cards with each other after having been in contact. A large collection of these cards indicates that the station has been active in carrying on communication with other stations, and the foreign cards are among the prized possessions of the amateurs.

Station W4WE has a large number of such cards. On one wall of the radio room is a large board which is entirely covered with cards received from foreign countries, but these are by no means all. There are several stacks of them in the cupboards, and many others from foreign countries for which there are no places left on the board.

Now that the operators have had a period of rest since the contest ended a week ago, they are getting down to work again making W4WE and the University of North Carolina even still more well known on the air.

to utter some such comments. Yet at the same time I found that, after reading the first contributions of Mr. Chace to the Magazine, with each successive issue the first articles or poems to which I turned have been his. On first reading they have sometimes baffled me. This has been irritating. Yet always about them has been a strange intriguing quality that has lured me to go back to dig out their inner meaning.

His poems, I have always admitted, have seemed beyond my powers of criticism. Some I have never fully understood. I have heard others scoff at these. But, somehow, in them all, even in those I have been unable to analyze, there has seemed a strangely compelling beauty—intangible and illusive.

His prose articles, while sometimes too involved in sentence structure, have, however, been all, at least comprehensible. Their content has been challenging and aroused controversy all over the campus. His essay on "The Function of Art," for instance, stirred heated debate as to its matter. Many thought Chace had brought new light to the subject—that his analysis was both original and searching. Others again scoffed and sneered.

But no publication this year in the Magazine has aroused such intense interest and stimulated debate as has his prose article "James Joyce: An Estimate." It is provocative in the extreme. It is also illuminating and significant in more ways than one. For not only does Chace present to us a great new literary genius in a clarifying light, but, in this article, he has expressed his own personality more intimately than in any thing he has yet published—and reveoled a side of his nature some of us had doubted existed.

Richard A. Chace has his feet on the ground after all. And it is not ink in his veins, but warm red blood. To me this discovery is a surprise, and as I have formerly been publicly on the side of the doubters—and sometimes a scoffer—I feel I owe Mr. Chace a public apology.

In his analysis of Joyce, Mr. Chace has written with a poet's insight in an appreciation of another poet. His interpretations of Joyce's new forms—his ideal of fusing the arts of expression—that of music through word and language—has given to many a new and provocative comprehension. His interpretation of Joyce's "Ulysses"—his own warm understanding of its flaming human qualities—this has revealed Richard A. Chace, the so-called "recluse" and "esthete," as a warm-blooded man, quite human himself.

I, for one, confess to never having read a word of Joyce, but since reading Chace's article, I feel I am now acquainted with him, and the introduction has not only intrigued, but stimulated me so strongly that I shall not be able to rest till I have procured everything Joyce has written and become familiar with his startling genius.—W. BASEBALL MEETING 4 O'CLOCK EMERSON FIELD

VOLUME XXXVIII | CHAPEL HILL, N. C., TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 1930 | NUMBER 126

Daily Tar Heel Straw Vote Places Frank Graham First

Dean Hibbard Runs Second To Graham While Professor Connor Comes Out Third; 241 Ballots Cast.

The straw ballot conducted by the Daily Tar Heel in the hope that it would serve as an indication of the students' choice for University president resulted in a total of 241 votes cast, of which 71 were for Frank Graham, this being the largest number cast for any one man.

Addison Hibbard, dean of the school of Liberal Arts was second choice with 52 ballots. Professor R. D. W. Connor, who, with Frank Graham, has been most frequently mentioned for the presidency, polled 49 votes.

In addition to the ten names printed upon the ballots, the voters expressed themselves as wishing to see 13 unthought of, as yet, men as president. Messrs. Harrer and Henry received support in their proposal of former Governor Al Smith as president to the tune of 9 votes. Will Rogers received but two evidences of a Rogers-for-President movement.

The complete vote follows:

Frank Graham, 71; Addison Hibbard, 52; R. D. W. Connor, 49; H. G. Baity, 12; Al Smith, 9; Archibald Henderson, 7; Judge Stacy, 1; Judge Brogden, 7; President Lacy, 2; Dr. Dodd, 4; R. B. House, 3; Will Rogers, 2; W. W. Pierson, 1; Jeff Fordham, 3; Professor Bagby, 3; Dr. Greenlaw, 1; Edgar Knight, 1; Dr. S. Alderman, 1; Dean Walker, 1; Charles Collins, 1; Dr. Booker, 2; Dean Bradshaw, 1; Dean Carroll, 1; Dr. George Howe, 1; Bob Linker, 1.

Players To Present Show To Duke Profs

A group of Duke faculty members, some of whom attended the bill of new plays of the Carolina Playmakers last week, has invited the cast of "For Auntie's Sake," written by John Patric, to attend a formal dinner Thursday evening at the Hope Valley Country Club, and present the play before the Folio Club, a literary organization of Duke University.

Expressing themselves as having enjoyed the entire bill, representatives of the Folio Club were impressed by the ease of staging "For Auntie's Sake." Although its "cast" really has five characters, it has been written in such a manner that only the two actually appear on the stage, others being represented "at the other end" of "telepathic" and telephone conversations.

Miss Lottie Frances Mays, a niece of T. S. Woofter, plays the part of Penelope Brown, a co-ed from Virginia, and John Patric, a Carolina student, plays Fred Barrett, a college senior who tricks the charming Penelope into loving him.

BERRYHILL TO ADDRESS ELISHA MITCHELL CLUB

At the meeting of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society to be held this evening at 7:30 in Phillips hall, Dr. W. H. Crockford, of the chemistry department will present a paper, "Some Thermodynamic Studies of the Nitrotoluenes."

YEAR BOOK NEAR TO COMPLETION

Vanity Fair Section To Include Portraits Of Eight Beauties.

With the end of the quarter the Yackety Yack is fast nearing completion. Editor Travis Brown selected his staff early during the fall quarter, and the job of putting out a successful college annual has been going on since that time.

The last of the materials for the Yackety Yack will go to press immediately after the return from the holidays. Annuals will be given out to the students about the middle of May.

All class sections have been completed and sent in to the printers. The sport section remains to be completed in full, but is progressing rapidly. This section is one of the most difficult to complete due to the fact that the track, baseball, and tennis teams must be used from the year preceding. However, schedules and the like must be gotten for the present year. These are often delayed in forthcoming.

Of interest to many on the campus will be the Vanity Fair section. Boys are allowed to submit pictures of their girls for this section, and the eight voted the most beautiful by a committee chosen by the editor of the book compose this section. An unusual number of pictures have been submitted, but the eight to be published have not as yet been chosen. This will occur toward the latter part of the week and those pictures not accepted will be returned shortly afterward.

Library Notices

Graduate students and members of the faculty who wish to arrange for borrowing books from other libraries on interlibrary loan should do so before March 15. Owing to the spring recess, it will be impossible to arrange such loans between that date and March 22.

Members of the faculty are reminded that reserve book lists are now receivable at the library. If the reserve lists are in the hands of the library staff before or during the spring recess, the books can be reserved within the first few days of the new term.

City Foreclosing

The employes at the city hall are busy this week making foreclosures on 33 parcels of Chapel Hill real estate upon which certificates of sale were issued in 1928, involving taxes of 1927 and earlier which have as yet not been paid. No fraternity property is involved.

LARGE AUDIENCE ATTENDS READING "POTTER'S" FIELD

Paul Green Reads Latest Play Before Filled Playmakers Theatre.

Sunday evening in the Playmaker theatre before a packed house Paul Green read his new play "The Potter's Field." Many people unable to find seats were turned away. After Mr. Green's reading the Chapel Hill negro community chorus and the silver tongued quartet gave a number of selections; during the "play" as one of the leaders had styled it to Professor Koch, a collection was taken up to supplement the money being raised to continue the negro schools. The audience responded liberally and $72.60 was contributed.

Mr. Green's new play is in one long act; he calls it a symphonic drama, as he uses a number of characters and plays upon them as the musician plays upon the notes of his instrument. As each character is introduced the drama moves faster and comes to a climax, or crescendo as the musician calls it. While the play is in one act and will be produced continuously, it will take the time of a full-length play. Mr. Green did not read the complete text, but told the whole story and read passages here and there so that the audience could get a clear idea of the whole drama. Enthusiastic applause at the end indicated the approval of the listeners.

The program of the negro community chorus consisted of "The Negro National Anthem," "I Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray," "Swing Low Sweet Chariot" and "Steal Away." The silver quartet was well received and sang several encores in addition to the regular program consisting of "Chapel Hill Boys," "Ain't It a Shame," "Hush! Hush! Somebody Calling My Name," "Let the Church Roll On," "Ezekiel Saw the Wheel," "My Lord What a Morning," "Nobody Knows" and "Way Down South."

Fund Over $300

Funds received for the campus relief fund for Orange county poor yesterday, the last day for contributions to be received, brought the total well over $300. Contributors over the week-end were Professor W. E. Caldwell, B. C. Philpott, Ralph (Red) Greene, C. L. Wyrick, J. P. Harland, F. W. Jackson, Sarah Faulkner, and two anonymous donations. The amount of these donations was $38.30, making the total received for the fund during the ten days of its existence 322.48.

This total of over $300 should have a material effect upon the poverty situation in Orange county, and the committee feels that the response affords an excellent indication of the feelings of the campus and the townspeople about the matter. The relief fund was in no sense a "drive" or a community chest campaign. It was merely an opportunity the Tar Heel established, not only for the campus to become aware of the deplorable situation, but also for it to do its bit in helping matters.

Intensive State-Wide Search Being Conducted For University Freshman

REGISTRAR WARNS ABOUT TARDINESS

Thirty Days Probation For Each Day After March 22 Is Penalty.

The last day of registration for students enrolled during the winter quarter will be March 22. Juniors and seniors and professional students, as well as graduates, should register during the examination period, March 12-15. Freshmen and sophomores register March 22.

The registrar's office wishes to remind all students who return for the spring quarter that late registration, which means any time after March 22, carries a penalty of five dollars and thirty days probation for each day that one's registration may be late. It is to be borne in mind that one's registration is not considered complete until and unless it has been turned in properly at the registrar's office or to some person authorized to receive it elsewhere. Students turning in registration papers after March 22 will bear the penalty mentioned above.

Quite a number of local addresses are still needed in order to complete the matter of reports for the winter quarter. The office is extremely eager to place a report in the hands of every student before March 22; but this cannot be done unless local addresses are provided.

Garbage Can Covers Used As Protectors

The stirring drama began several weeks ago, when snow was on the ground, when boys were having snowball battles and cadaverous stray dogs worried over the food supply.

Complaints suddenly began to pour into the city hall, directed toward the "inefficient members of your garbage collection department."

"They forgot to return the cover of my garbage can," or "they took the cover with them and I want it back!" or "a lot of hungry dogs have been hanging around our back yard ever since your garbage men forgot the cover to our garbage can," or "what do I pay three dollars a year for, anyway? It's for service!"

City officials quizzed the garbage department. The garbage department had seen no covers, but reported that most of them had vanished. "Dat job gittin' right hahd, suh. Yessah, dey ain' no kivvers fo' dem cans no mo', and de dawgs come 'long an tip oveh 'em, and spill all dat gahbage on de groun' and we all gotta c'lec it up agin!"

Conditions in the public relations division of the refuse collection department of the city of Chapel Hill continued to be strained until a few days ago, when policemen found a large heap of covers to divers garbage cans piled up in the corner of a vacant lot near the schoolhouse. Boys, engaged in organized snowball warfare, had been using them as shields.

Meeting Postponed

The scheduled meeting of the music department of the Community Club for Wednesday afternoon has been indefinitely postponed.

Missing Student

Morgan P. Moorer of Asheville, a freshman here, disappeared from the campus ten days ago and University officials and members of his family have instituted a state-wide search for him.

HARLAND TO LEAVE FOR LECTURE TOUR

Leaving at the end of this term on a lecture tour for the Archaeological Institute of America, Dr. J. P. Harland, professor of archaeology and Greek, will talk at the Universities of Syracuse, Rochester, Toronto, Well's College, Auburn, and Cornell, on the subject "Prehistoric Greece."

Dr. Harland was asked to lecture in these places due to the fact that he spent three years in Greece at the American School of Archaeology at Athens, 1914, and 1920-21 as a Fellow of the Archaeological Institute, and 1927-28 as a Guggenheim Fellow. Dr. Harland was engaged in excavations with the American School and at one time with the British School. He conducted the excavations of the prehistoric site alone. He will be back at the University to conduct his regular classes next quarter.

Dr. Wilson In Florida

Dr. Louis R. Wilson, University librarian now on leave of absence, writes from Florida of his reluctance to leave the swimming, fishing and sightseeing there. Dr. Wilson is vacationing in Florida sailing for Europe where he will spend a major part of his leave of absence.

League Donates

Members of the Young People's Service League raised a collection of $2.61, which they have turned over to the relief fund for the purpose of aiding the Orange county poor.

Library Notice

The library will remain open during the holidays from 9 until 5 o'clock except March 15 when it closes at 2 o'clock and March 16 and 23 when it will be closed all day.

COMMISSION TO STUDY MALARIA IS HEADED BY THORNDIKE SAVILLE

Thorndike Saville, professor of hydraulic and sanitary engineering, has been appointed chairman of the research committee of the National Malaria Commission, an organization for the promotion of the study of the malaria problem in the southern states.

Morgan P, Moorer Of Asheville Has Been Missing For Ten Days.

OF ECCENTRIC NATURE

No Clues As To Cause Of Disappearance Discovered; Thought To Have Taken A Small Pistol With Him; Suicide Theory Advanced.

The strange disappearance of Morgan P. Moorer, freshman from Asheville, has caused the University and the student body to institute an intensive statewide search for the 17-year-old boy. R. B. House, executive secretary of the University, said yesterday that the University is extremely concerned and it doing everything in its power to help in the investigation that is now being carried on by Moorer's fraternity, Sigma Delta, Chapel Hill officials and others. Mrs. Eva Moorer, mother of the lad, Judge E. C. Dennis and F. A. Moorer, his uncles, arrived in town two days ago to help expedite the probe.

Morgan P. Moorer, or "M. P." as he was called by his intimates, was last seen in Chapel Hill by Mrs. Smith, mother of Le Roy Smith of the French department, with whom he lodged, on Friday afternoon, February 28, at 3 o'clock. At that time, he was dressed in his ordinary manner, wearing his every-day suit and light patent-leather shoes. Although a heavy blanket of his is missing, he did not carry it with him when he left the Smith home for the last time. The only incident that made that departure different from the many entrances and exits he made during the course of the day was that he locked the door to his room—something he had never done before.

This, coupled with the fact that he did not make an appearance over the week-end, led the Smiths to believe that he had gone to his home in Asheville. This belief was strengthened by the fact that no mail was received from Moorer's mother during the week. "M. P." had cut a full week of classes prior to his disappearance and had been dropped from his history course because of an excessive number of absences. It was to this that his abrupt departure had been laid. However, approximately a week after Moorer's strange leaving, a card was received from Mrs. Moorer, which was addressed to her son. This card was the first intimation the Smith's had of the peculiarity of the situation. The Sigma Delta fraternity, to which the young man was pledged, was informed and Mrs. Moorer was notified of the mysterious disappearance of M. P.

Although he is presumed to have left Chapel Hill on Friday, an individual closely resembling the missing boy was seen by an employee of the confectionery store adjacent to the Carolina theatre on Tuesday, March 4.

Several negroes reported seeing someone walking aimlessly along the Raleigh road on Wednesday, March 5. Their description of the boy tallied with that of young Moorer. Morgan's Creek figured in the boy's life several months previously, when "Boss" Hill, Chapel Hill tailor, rescued the son of the late J. Morgan Moorer, prominent

Abolition of Examinations

Back in the dark ages of education, some tutor with an experimental turn of mind decided that he would like to ascertain the number of dates, formulas and dry facts that his pupils had remembered from the stock-in-trade that he had displayed before them. Hence he drew up, for his own satisfaction, a list of questions and inflicted them upon his unlucky auditors.

When he received the answers, he went about among his fellow pedagogues, bragging of the forcefulness with which he had impressed his knowledge upon the minds of his pupils. Becoming envious, the other tutors prepared lists of questions for their own pupils to answer, in order to prove that they also were potent lecturers and forceful teachers.

Thus began the iniquitous examination system, which has degenerated into the modern blue-book final, a "yard-stick" method of measuring the length of each student's memory. The usual final examination is a painful ordeal for both student and professor, about as reliable a measure of a man's educational acquirements as the color of his eyes or the length of his nose. And it is entirely out of harmony with any intelligent view of the real purpose of education.

About the only valid excuse for examinations which we have heard advanced is that the review necessitated by them forces the student to organize and unify his knowledge; but the frantic scramble to memorize a few quickly forgotten facts, which most of us engage in during the last few days before examinations, can hardly be termed a scholarly organizing of knowledge. Cramming certainly benefits the student very little, as far as learning anything is concerned.

There is little doubt that the examination system is an evil. It defeats the real purpose of education, changes the process of learning to think originally and directly, of securing knowledge and discovering how to use it, of organizing available material, into a mad scramble for grades, mere empty symbols as they are.

But the professors must have some means of arriving at an estimate of what students have gained from their courses. In most cases the professor has discovered during the term how much each student has worked, what he has benefitted from the course, and can tell within a few points the grade he will make on the final. But this is not always the case, however. Unfortunately some professors are less interested in their students and less observant than they should be.

As a substitute "yard-stick," if one is necessary, we suggest that the students be required to write a summary paper at the end of the quarter. This paper would contain an intelligent, orderly unification of the quarter's work. By organizing his ideas in this manner, the student would learn and retain more real knowledge of the course than a thousand sessions of "cramming" and final examinations would produce. In addition, he would be stimulated to do some thinking upon the subject-matter he had covered, and to evolve original ideas of his own upon it. And such a paper would probably even offer a more reliable basis than final exams for estimating the grade that the student should receive.

With Pipe and Book—If Possible

(H. J. G.)

At the time the Library was being built, there was some agitation for the inclusion of a Smoking Room. That particular facility was not included with the many other modern and enlightened improvements which greet the eye of the student as he steps into the campus depository of knowledge.

An effort to find out specific reasons why such a room should not be provided for the campus smokers met with no success. We may therefore take it for granted that there are few or no really valid arguments against the idea.

A fireproof room with a number of easy chairs and numerous ash receivers is not a project of alarming proportions. For intensive study, the ordinary tables and chairs are probably better than a lounge in which the atmosphere is somewhat less restrained. But the Library should not be looked upon merely as a place in which to find books necessary for courses and prescribed work. It can, and should, be also a place where an acquaintance with books and the pleasure of reading can be made, and retained as one of the primary assets of life.

A cigarette or pipe adds much to the pleasure of reading for many. It also provides a welcome bit of relaxation after a period of concentration. The fact that smoking is not allowed in the Library does not prevent it—the smokers are merely driven outside. Why not give them a special place, if they annoy others, or will mess the various reading rooms with ashes and stubs?

The Library has been provided for the benefit of the student body and the University, for pleasure as well as for profit. The smokers, which means the greater number of students and faculty, can easily be made happy by the installation of a Smoking Room. The Tar Heel trusts they will get it, and in the very near future.

Readers' Opinions

IN ANSWER TO THE EDITORIAL "ADMINISTRATIVE OPPRESSION AND FACULTY CENSORSHIP"

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

It was with difficulty that I restrained myself on reading your editorial on the policies of the University of Pittsburgh quite a while ago, but your latest one is beyond all human endurance. Just what do you really know about a situation that you so glibly criticize? I doubt very much if you have ever been in Pittsburgh, let alone on the campus of the university. You say that "rabid fanaticism, criticising for the sake of critism or attracting attention alone should be discouraged," and yet that is exactly what you are doing. I have been a life-long resident of Pittsburgh, and have attended the university, as have my brothers. Perhaps I know a little more about affairs there than you do. You criticise the Weekly because it defends the school that supports it. You evidently think that it is the duty of a paper to blindly criticise a school that supports it, and cannot see any merit in a paper upholding the affairs at its own university which have been denounced by other school papers that depend for their knowledge of the whole thing upon prejudiced magazines.

Just what do you really know about The Liberal Club, that you should so vehemently accuse the University for dismissing two of its members? Very evidently you have been fascinated by the word "Liberal" and know nothing whatever about the real nature of the club. The club was organized during the time that I was a student at the university and I had a chance to join it. I had no desire to, and neither did the vast majority of Pitt men, for its main function was the bringing to Pitt of wild-haired, moronic sensationalists who cried down all existing institutions but had nothing in their cracked brains to substitute for the better. They were the class that criticises for the sake of attracting attention to themselves. The two students were of the same class that were dismissed from the university, and the Pittsburgh papers upheld their dismissal. They had no business at the university; all they were there for was to stir up trouble, not to get an education, which is the real function of a university.

It is very amusing to learn that the faculty is kept in submission by force. If the honored editor would only investigate for himself the truth of such reports, instead of talking about something that he knows nothing about, he would not expose himself to ridicule. The University of Pittsburgh is a very liberal institution, in comparison with which many other schools are back in the Middle Ages. Chancellor Bowman was brought from Iowa which has always been noted as a liberal state, for his liberal views. So also was the head of the English department and he has made Pitt's English department second to none in the country. So also was one of the history professors. This man is a liberal of the liberals. If what is said about Pitt were true, he wouldn't have lasted there one month. He talked about religion and evolution in a way that would make a Tennessean's hair stand on end. And as for his views on the present government and political affairs in general! His classes are shocked every day, but he is still there. Although a young man, he has rapidly been promoted from instructor to associate professor, and he is well on his way to a full professorship. This is in strong contrast to a certain young man who was recently dismissed from a certain college down in Alabama. He is only one example of the professors I had and met at Pitt, and they are a very liberal and progressive group. They are far from being the fear-ridden and boot-licking bunch that some ignoramuses have made them out to be.

If conditions at Pitt were in the state that you evidently think they are, do you think for a moment that a progressive city like Pittsbrugh would support it the way it does? Do you think it would attract over ten thousand students yearly as it does? Of course not! Do you think that Pitt could have raised ten millions of dollars in the short time it did for its new building? Assuredly not! The whole city is proud of it, and justly so. During the campaign for raising the money for the "Cathedral of Learning" even the children in the grade schools brought in money, so that they too could afterwards point with pride to the completed building and say that they had some part in building it. We need such fine spirit right here. Many empty-heads point with scorn to Pittsburgh because so many of the millionaires gave money to it for the building. Well, why shouldn't they? They made their money in Pittsburgh and they should give some of it back to the people. In "The New Republic" the honored editor, or whoever wrote the article on "Andy Mellon's University" referred to the new building as "which they have bombastically called the 'Cathedral of Learning.'" Such a plain case of "sour grapes" would make a horse laugh. And that is just exactly what is back of all this senseless criticism of the University of Pittsburgh. So please, Mr. Editor, talk, if you must, about something that you know a little about hereafter.

ASTRONOMY NEXT TERM

The physics department wishes to explain that the cultural course in astronomy which will be offered next quarter under the instruction of Dr. K. H. Fussler will count as a science major course for those students whose major professors will admit the course as fulfilling the requirements.

However, the course will not count as a required science course for those students who have to take two courses each of two sciences.

Dr. Fussler will give any other information desired.

FOX TROUPE TRAVELS 200,000 MILES WHILE FILMING "CITY GIRL"

Eight times around the world at the equator to make just part of a motion picture! That represents the collective mileage traveled by F. W. Murnau's cast and staff during the making of the wheat ranch sequences for "City Girl" at Pendleton, Ore.

Notwithstanding the fact that the location was so far removed from commercial activity, production moved along on schedule, which bespeaks efficiency when one considers that all food, water and equipment had to be trucked from two and a half to twenty-five miles.

"City Girl," Fox Movietone talking picture, which comes to the Carolina Theatre today co-features Charles Farrell and Mary Duncan, supported by David Torrence, Edith Yorke, Dawn O'Day and Guinn Williams.

Intramural Department To Stage Boxing Tournament

Ten Days Of Instructions To Be Given Next Quarter Preparatory To Tournament.

COACH ROWE TO ASSIST

Gold Medals Will Be Presented Individual Winners; Teams To Get Points For Most Entries.

The intramural department, assisted by Coach Crayton Rowe and members of the 1930 boxing squad, will stage a boxing tournament immediately after the holidays. All dormitories and fraternities are invited to participate, and they will be permitted to enter as many men as they wish; i.e., one or more men in each weight.

Entries will undergo a period of ten days instruction under Coach Rowe and the boxing squad, after which the tournament will be staged, similar to the southern conference boxing tournament.

Points will be awarded by the intramural department for individual winners, team having most entries, and team winners. Gold medals will also be presented to the individual winners.

This is an excellent chance for new men to avail themselves of expert boxing instruction. Coach Rowe is especially anxious to work with new men with the idea of developing men for the varsity squad next year. Everyone on the campus is eligible to enter the tournament with the exception of varsity and freshman boxers.

Captain-Elect

Artie Marpet, star guard on the 1929 and 1930 basketball teams, was elected captain for 1930 at a meeting of the varsity men yesterday afternoon. Marpet is from Yonkers, N. Y.

FENCING TITLE STILL IN DOUBT

Almost Every Team In The League Has a Chance To Win.

With the title still hanging in the balance the intramural fencing league enters into next to the last week of competition.)everal of the teams entered have maintained clean records to date, but many of the other entries are pushing the leaders hard for honors. Almost every team entered in the league still has a chance to pull through and win the title should the leaders forfeit or lose any of the meets scheduled for the next two weeks.

Intramural officials announced yesterday afternoon that the campus fencing title would no doubt be settled with these last two weeks of competition. Hinkey Hendlin, director of fencing, stated yesterday that any forfeits at this stage of the schedule would no doubt prove fatal to the chances of nearly any of those entered in the league. He also asks that the schedule below be clipped and posted by the fencers as this is the last issue of the Daily Tar Heel for the winter quarter.

Schedule for the remainder of the week:

TUESDAY

5:00 p. m.—Theta Chi vs. Everett.

WEDNESDAY

4:30 p. m.—Zeta Psi vs. Ruffin.
5:00 p. m.—Old East vs. Buccaneers.

THURSDAY

5:00 p. m.—Manly vs. Sea-Hawks.

FRIDAY

Tombstone Golf Will Be Played This Week

The "tombstone tournament," the second of a series of golf tournaments to be held this spring for members of the country club, will be held next Friday afternoon, the weather permitting. The tournament was originally scheduled for last Friday, but because of bad weather, it was postponed until this week.

In this tournament, each player will be given a number of strokes equal to his handicap plus par for two rounds on the course. Each contestant will play, going as far as possible on the allotted number of strokes. The resting place of the ball after the final stroke will be marked with the player's "tombstone." The person whose "tombstone" is the farthest down the course will be declared the winner of the tournament.

This will be the second of the series of tournaments that are held at the club every spring. Reports from the golf committee states that the course is in fine shape now, many improvements have been made recently.

Coach Bob Fetzer announces that there will be an important meeting of the entire track squad this afternoon at 5:30. At that time he will give out information concerning the holidays.

Looking Them Over

by
Browning Roach

Several interesting points arise in connection with the Southern Conference indoor meet held here Saturday afternoon and evening. No official southern indoor records are in existence at present, but sports writers concede that many of the marks set in this meet are as good as any previous performances in the south.

Charlie Farmer, in the 60-yard dash, showed his ability to get off to a good start and turned out wins in the preliminary trials, the semi-finals and the final runs. His time of 6 2-5 seconds equals the winning time at the Millrose games this year and lacks only one-fifth of a second of tying the world indoor record, held by five men, Jack Elder, Loren Murchison, A. Francisco, Chester Bowman and James Quinn.

Bagby turned in the best high jump of his career to tie with Bostick of South Carolina for first place in the varsity event Saturday afternoon at 5 feet 11 1-8 inches. Arnold set the Carolina pole vault record up to 12 feet, 7 inches in taking first place. Officials were of the opinion that this was a new southern record, but their statement has not been verified. The world record for the indoor pole vault is held by Leo Barnes, who set the mark at 14 feet 1 1-2 inches last year.

In the mile relays, the Carolina freshmen showed themselves to have more speed than any of the varsity teams. The freshmen ran the relay in 3 minutes 45 2-5 seconds, while Washington and Lee won the collegiate relay with a time of 3:47 3-5, or 2 1-5 seconds slower than the freshmen.

The flat turns on the Tin Can track slowed up the races to a considerable extent and several mishaps occurred to mar the smoothness of the runs, which would not have happened on a banked turn. In the varsity 440, after the runners completed the first straight-away at the start of the race and were taking the first turn, one of the Duke men slipped and fell, carrying two other sprinters down with him. Needless to say, these three men failed to place in the event. One of them was able to gain a few yards on the two laps and come in in sixth place, while the other two could not regain much of the lost distance. Coaches Bob Fetzer and Dale Ranson deserve the credit for the showing Carolina made in the meet. The Tar Heels are well able to take care of themselves against any conference opponent, and only the barest margin held them from the conference title this year. From their showing in the indoor meet later in etao the indoor meet, we don't hesitate to predict a victory in the outdoor meet later in the spring. The outdoor meet will be held this year in Birmingham about the first of May.

IT HAD TO BE GOOD TO GET WHERE IT IS

Intensive State-Wide Search Being Made For Morgan Moorer

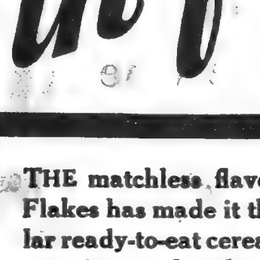
Asheville physician, from drowning. "Boss" Hill had met M. P. several times while walking through the woods. He was very fond of strolling through the woods, reciting poetry or humming snatches of classical musical compositions that he was extremely fond of.

Saturday, Sunday and Monday were spent in a thorough combing of adjoining woods by members of the Sigma Delta fraternity but nothing was learned of his presence.

It is believed by some that the youth had become mentally deranged and had succumbed to the eccentricities and fits of depressions to which he was subject. He was of an extremely emotional nature, and at times became prey to morbid and tragic thoughts. He had with him a small pearl-handled revolver which he often threatened to use upon himself. It is said that he had already dug his grave in a quiet, secluded portion of a near-by wood. This pistol, which was seen by several of his friends before his disappearance, could not be found among his possessions yesterday. His family feel that he has taken it with him. He worshipped the writings of Edgar Allan Poe and felt himself to be a close spirit of the author of "The Raven." He read all of Poe's works that he could lay his hands upon and would often wander about the campus, reciting verses of the young American genius. He had high hopes of becoming a literary figure and wrote frequently with this end in view.

However, in a letter that he left for his mother, he intimated that he wanted to relieve her of any financial burden that was caused by him and was leaving for a cabin in the woods in order to write the book that would bring him fame and fortune.



He was well-liked by his associates in the fraternity and was known as a prolific purchaser of phonograph records of classical music. Occasionally, he would forego a meal in order to obtain a record. He was an ardent admirer of John Barrymore and could recite by heart the famous actor's soliloquy of "Richard the Third."

The newspapers of the state and the Associated Press are cooperating with the family of Moorer in broadcasting the mysterious disappearance of the youth. The description as sent out of him was that he was of slender build, six feet in height, 130 pounds in weight and had dark hair and brown eyes. When he left here he wore a black coat and blue serge trousers and was without a hat.

SEARCH FOR BOY WHO DISAPPEARED STILL UNDERWAY

Morgan P. Moorer, University Student, Is Subject of Widespread Search.

Morgan P. Moorer, the University freshman whose strange disappearance on February 28 caused a nationwide search to be instituted by state and local authorities, has not as yet been found.

During the spring holidays, a group of students, fraternity brothers of the missing lad, scoured the surrounding countryside in a vain effort to discover some trace of him. A private detective agency was employed by Mrs. E. Moorer, mother of the boy, but it, too, found no conclusive clues. The head of the detective agency has contacts with police officers throughout the country and has written letters to various cities in an effort to bring into play every possible agency for determining the boy's location.

Mrs. Moorer leaves today for her home. She remained in Chapel Hill over the holidays cooperating with the various searching groups. It is now believed that M. P. is in some large city working or in some way leading an independent life. There have been various reports to the effect that he was seen in Florida, Pennsylvania and New York but they were proved to be fruitless clues.

DR. LOUIS WILSON IS SLATED TO BE LIBRARY LEADER

Has Been Nominated for Vice-President's Office in American Library Association.

Louis R. Wilson, librarian of the University of North Carolina, will be first vice-president of the Americal Library Association after the annual conference of the asssociation, at the Biltmore hotel, Los Angeles, June 23-28, if A. L. A. members approve the recommendations of the nominating committee, according to Carl H. Milan, secretary of the association. Only one name for first vice-president is submitted by the committee.

More than 12,000 librarians and trustees belong to the National Library Association which was founded in 1876 to foster the development of libraries, to raise professional standards, and to promote the use of books. Headquarters of the association are in Chicago.

Dr. Wilson was born in Lenoir and received his doctor's degree from the University of North Carolina. He has been librarian of the University since 1901 and Kenan professor of librarian administration since 1920. He was president of the southeastern library association from 1924 to 1926, and was elected president of the North Carolina Library association in 1929. He is a member of several American Library Association committees, as well as of the Advisory group on college libraries of the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

RHYNE IS AUTHOR OF NEW TREATISE

Has Studied Cotton Mill Villages For Social Science Institute.

With the issuance this week of Some Southern Cotton Mill Workers and Their Villages by Jennings J. Rhyne, a study made under the direction of the University institute of research in social science, the University Press has enlarged its list of books about North Carolina to eight titles. Two of these volumes, North Carolina: Economic and Social by Samuel H. Hobbs, Jr., and The Democratic Party in North Carolina by Clarence C. Norton, have not yet been released, but are scheduled for spring publication.

Previously issued Press books about the state were Welfare Work in Mill Villages by Harriet Herring, County Government in North Carolina by Paul W. Wager, Public Poor Relief in North Carolina by Roy M. Brown, The North Carolina Chain Gang by Steiner and Brown, and A State Movement in Railroad Development by Cecil K. Brown.

The author of the most recent of these books, concerning cotton mill workers and their villages, is a native of Gaston county and is now in the sociology department of the University of Oklahoma. An announcement from the Press concerning this volume reads in part as follows:

"This study of cotton mill workers and their villages, including preliminary inquiries and historical readings, has extended over several years. . . . The study is particularly appropriate at this time since it was made in Gaston County, the scene of recent labor difficulties which have engaged the attention of people all over the world. . . . Since the study was brought to a close before the development of labor troubles in Gastonia in 1929, it fortunately provides data gathered from an undisturbed setting. . . . Its essential picture will be found in simple figures rather than in literary description."

Debaters Selected For Boston Contest

Meeting in special session last night, the debate squad turned its attention to the selection of debaters for the coming debates with Boston University. The tryout, which was conducted on the usual competitive basis, resulted in the selection of J. C. Williams, J. A. Wilkinson, G. P. Carr, and J. M. Baley.

Wilkinson, Carr and Baley will meet Boston University's negative team here on April 1. Williams, Carr and Baley will journey to Boston early in May to engage the affirmative aggregation of the Massachusetts institution.

K. MACGOWAN, IN NEW BOOK, PAYS TRIBUTE TO KOCH

Noted Critic Claims North Carolina Leads Country In Local Drama.

"North Carolina has done more than any other state to justify a plea for local drama . . . . I am thinking of the life effort of one man which has fulfilled itself richly and strikingly through the people of North Carolina—Frederick Koch."

So writes Kenneth MacGowan in his book "Footlights Across America," which has just been published by Harcourt, Brace & Co.

MacGowan, who has himself written and produced 25 plays on Broadway, has been for 20 years actively connected with the theatre as dramatic critic for such newspapers as the Philadelphia Ledger and the New York Globe, has managed the Provincetown Playhouse for Eugene O'Neill, and has written authoritative books on stagecraft.

"The Thalian Association," says MacGowan, "flourishing in Wilmington, North Carolina, about 1800," is believed by some to have been the beginning of the Little Theatre movement which has so rapidly spread over the country during recent years with the decline of the road show.

Today, again, Carolina has the front, for does not Carolina claim "the man who began the work"; at least the folk-drama phase of it? "Native expressiveness," thinks MacGowan, "is the contribution of Frederick H. Koch, of the University of North

LOCAL CABINETS MEET HERE WITH STATE Y GROUP

Discuss Plans for Better Relationship Between North Carolina Institutions.

At the first meeting of the Y cabinets, held last night at the Y, another large step was taken in the bringing about of better relations between the universities and colleges in the state. Representatives from State College, as guests of the cabinets, talked on the opinions that the State student body had on this matter of better relations. All of the speakers, as representatives of State, pledged their wholehearted support of the cause.

The first speaker, Joe Moore, associate secretary of the Y at State, after being introduced by President Dungan, gave a short talk on the work that the Y was doing in an attempt to bring about better conditions within State College itself. Mr. Moore, speaking on the question of closer friendship between the schools, seemed very hopeful as to the outcome of these moves that had been made on the part of Carolina, Duke and State students.

Paul Choplin, president of the State student body, was also one of the guests at the meeting; he made a few suggestions that he thought might be of aid to this move that had been made for better feelings between the members of the Big Five. He made the suggestion that one of the schools be the host for a dance that would be given for the lettermen in each of the members of the Big Five.

Perspiring Reporter Discovers Old Book Museum In Y Building

At this time of the year—the beginning of another long quarter of work—various and sundry advertisements decorate the "campus bulletin board" in the entrance of the Y building. These announcements range anywhere from the announcing of the sale of a piano lesson to the advertising of a trip to Europe.

Between the lines of many of the book posters can be read the sad fates of their printers. Some of the ill-fated "poster-publishers" have been forced to leave the engineering school, others the commerce school, and still others the A. B., law and med schools.

Along towards the center of board may be seen an announcement advertising the sale of an auto. On lifting this "ad" there appears a card which advertises some sort of life insurance policy. It is apparent that the insurance agent, knowing in what condition the car was in, used his head in placing his poster.

At the top of the board there appears a very fascinating "ad" headed "Private." Immediately the interest is aroused, but as soon as the first part of the "ad" is read, the interest takes a decided drop. The announcement reads (between the lines) something to the effect that some poor musician, tired of continual practicing, has at last decided to sell his music lessons and take up some other sort of torture for his fellow students.

It seems that the entire student body has taken up the job of running book-stores, but not so many of the stores are securing business. If a student happens to find any sort of book in his room that has any printing on it whatsoever, or that he thinks should be used in some course, he immediately makes out a large poster, telling the public that if they will call at "such and such" a room they will receive the best values in the latest books. Some of the industrious book sellers have taken great pains to decorate very elaborately their advertisements with all sorts of crayons, inks, paper, and what-not.

One poor, ill-fated bookseller went to the trouble to type his "ad" with a red and black ribbon, making every other letter a different color. After probably hours of pains-taking in the manufacturing of this poster, the student found that the books he was trying to sell were long "out-of-date."

Some other book announcements show that trouble has been taken in their making, but on closer observation it will be noted that the enthusiastic book salesmen have forgotten to tell their prospective customers where they may procure these highly praised, and "in good condition" books.

Numerous other "ads" appear on the board, and it would be well worth anyone's time to take ten or fifteen minutes off and visit the "Book Ad Museum"—as it may well be called, because of its varied specimens.

Chapel Notice

Dean Bradshaw states that there will be no further chapel exercises until further announcement. In the meantime there may be a reassignment of chapel seats so that the whole class can be assembled at one time. The arrangement used since the abandonment of Memorial hall of having the halves of the class present on successive days has been difficult in regard to programs.

DANIEL L. GRANT FOR FRATERNITIES

Ex-Alumni Secretary of University Addresses National Delta Tau Delta.

The college fraternity is taking a place more vital than ever before in American academic life, Daniel L. Grant, executive secretary of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity and former alumni secretary of the University, declared at Providence, R. I., in an address before representatives of that fraternity from all sections of the state last week.

No longer is the fraternity regarded as a secret shrine for undergraduate reverence, or tolerated by college presidents only as a place providing beds for students, Mr. Grant said.

"However, to remain in this lofty niche in college life," he said, "the fraternity must build around its young members a condition of daily living, conducive to a high spiritual and cultural development, thus contributing directly to the richest academic experience.

"While Delta Tau Delta ever urges fine scholastic performance, it considers grades primarily a concern of the faculties.

"Today the fraternity requires a distinctly superior scholastic standing in order for one to gain admission to its membership.

"However, the peculiar opportunity of the fraternity lies in looking beyond grades to a personal culture and the achievement of a real life on an intellectual level.

"Delta Tau Delta is, therefore, definitely committing itself to build up in its chapters a condition of life and living conducive to the highest cultural and intellectual existence.

"The colleges and universities are adequately training their students to earn a livelihood, but all too infrequently do they develop the capacity to live that livelihood when attained.

"Yet there is no more ideal laboratory for social training and development than the fraternity house, if these opportunities are approached with understanding and from the broadest social standpoint."

Exam Notice

The annual examinations in French and German for candidates for doctors degrees will be given on March 29 and April 5. The French examination will be given in Murphey 314 at 10 o'clock on March 29. The German examination will take place in Saunders 109 at 9:30, April 5.

Dr. Louis R. Wilson, University librarian, is expected to return to Chapel Hill with his family from Florida Wednesday.

FUNERAL RITES DEAN ROYSTER ARE HELD HERE

University and Community Pay Last Respects to Dean of Graduate School at Burial Sunday.

Funeral services were held for Dr. James F. Royster, head of the University graduate school, here Sunday afternoon. Dr. Royster died Friday afternoon in a Richmond sanitarium as the result of self-inflicted burns.

The University community and the state at large manifested its respect and affection by an unusually large attendance at the services, which were held in Dr. Royster's home on East Franklin Street, and by a floral tribute of great size and beauty. Using the funeral ritual of the Episcopal church, Reverend Alfred S. Lawrence, rector of the Chapel of the Cross, conducted the ceremonies at the home and at the grave.

During the services in the living room of the Royster home a quartet composed of Urban T. Holmes, Howard Bailey, Mrs. Jefferson Bynum, and Mrs. R. H. Wettach, accompanied by Nelson O. Kennedy at the piano, sang "Lead Kindly Light" and "Crossing the Bar."

The pallbearers were Dr. Charles S. Mangum, Dr. William DeB. MacNider, Russell Potter, Howard Mumford Jones, Frank P. Graham, Louis Graves, George Coffin Taylor and W. F. Thrall. Honorary pallbearers were Harry W. Chase, Francis P. Venable, W. D. Toy, Major William Cain, Addison Hibbard, W. W. Pierson, M. E. Hogan, Clyde Eubanks and Dr. James K. Hall.

In the Chapel Hill cemetery, Dr. Royster was buried by the side of his wife, Carrie Belle Lake Royster, who died in June of 1928. Dr. Royster was 50 years old.

The circumstances surrounding the death of Dean Royster appeared in papers throughout the East on Saturday morning following his death on Friday. While on a leave of absence from the University, he was visiting England, but in December of the past year he was forced to return to the States on account of illness. Since that time he had been staying in the Richmond sanitarium, where it was believed by friends here that he was enjoying an improvement in health.

However, while on the sanitarium lawn Friday Dr. Royster walked, with apparent deliberation, into a trash fire, burning his body severely. It was also thought by physicians who examined him following the mishap that he had inhaled the flames. Death followed several hours later.

Dr. Royster was a graduate of Wake Forest College, receiving his final degree in 1914. After seven years spent in the University of Texas, he came to the University here in 1921 as Kenan professor of English philology.

Following the departure of Dr. Edwin Greenlaw in 1925, he was made dean of the graduate school, remaining at the same time head of the English department. Recognized as a foremost scholar on philology, his fame has extended over the entire nation and even to foreign

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

I fancy the only alternative to written examinations is the old Chinese custom: shut each candidate in a cell and let him write out all he knows. The strain itself must be a test of capacity.—Professor G. J. Urwick.

Tar Heel Topics

There's one thing sure about this move to combine Wake Forest and Meredith—the opposition isn't going to come from the Wake Forest undergrads.

If all the slumberers on 8:30 classes at Carolina were laid end to end on the Lincoln highway, there wouldn't be any more 8:30's and darn few students at Carolina.

The expected five-power treaty of the London Naval Conference is reported to have degenerated into a three-power treaty, but from this vantage point there doesn't seem to be any power at all in the blame thing.

Julius H. Barnes, chairman of President Hoover's business survey conference, reports that business has overcome its retarding factors. Now if somebody would agree with Mr. Barnes and apply a little acceleration, maybe we could outdistance old man bankruptcy after all.

The Death of Dean Royster

For the student, returning from the delectable freedom of the holidays to face the dreary necessity of reconciling himself once more to the scholastic routine, Chapel Hill is not a particularly cheerful place at the beginning of the quarter. And the tragic death of Dean Royster has caused the campus to assume an even more somber aspect than usual for the considerable number of upperclassmen and graduate students who were personally acquainted with him.

Dr. James F. Royster brought to his work as teacher and dean the rare combination of a vital, vibrant personality, unflagging enthusiasm for his work and interest in his students, and unusual scholarly attainments. An authority on Chaucer and Shakespeare, he occupied a prominent place in the scholastic world. In the field of philology he was nationally prominent, the author of several books and a frequent contributor to various periodicals.

Perhaps the most dominant characteristics of Jimmy Royster, as he was known to his friends and associates, were his boundless energy and the vitalizing forces of his personality. He possessed the spiritual warmth and sincerity which never fails to stimulate the intellect and inspire the imagination.

His intimates were aware that his magnificient energy was too strong for his physical endowments, and his break-down a year ago was not unexpected. His tragic death last Friday, however, was a shock to the entire state.

Another name has been added to the list of those who have devoted their lives to the University and the cause of intellectual advancement, and it will not be forgotten.

The President Chooses A Carolina Man

President Hoover's appointment of Judge Parker to the Supreme Court has met with great approval and enthusiasm throughout the country; the South, and especially North Carolina, has been gratified to receive recognition at last in the Hoover administration. This is one of the few times that a southerner has received a major Federal office since the days of President Wilson. Mr. Hoover has paid his political debt to the south for the support she gave him in his election, and at the same time he has put a man upon the highest tribunal who richly deserves the honor and is fully capable of discharging the duties of his high office with honor. Tributes from men of both parties have been paid to the ability, record, and personality of Judge Parker.

Carolina should feel proud that one of her sons has been chosen for membership on the Supreme court; it is a tribute to the character and type of leaders that this University has been turning out. Judge Parker, who will be the first North Carolinian on the Court since 1804, graduated from here in 1900, being president of Phi Beta Kappa in his senior year. He was recognized as one of the most capable student leaders and stood at the head of his class in the law school; he was revered and honored by all his fellow students. The same qualities of character and personality that made him a leader in his student days carried him to the top of his profession quickly; he was soon recognized as one of the foremost lawyers in the country. In political circles he achieved great prominence and made a notable run for governor of this state in 1920. His great ability was the determining factor that placed him on the bench in his early forties, an honor that has come to few men so young.

Carolina wishes Judge Parker a long and happy career on the highest court of the world and at the same time congratulates President Hoover on the wisdom of his choice.

State College Seeks Democracy

Restrictions limiting the choice of the president of the State College student body have been removed recently by authorities there to allow popular participation by all students in the choice. The old system required the selection of some member of the student council, which many alleged was faculty picked and faculty controlled. Now any student may seek the office.

State College students may well expect a clash between faculty and student body in the future. For some student will be elected who dislikes faculty supervision of student affairs. Here at Carolina there has been no clash, although quite often student presidents have insisted that certan matters were matters for the student council and the faculty has yielded, probably without regret. Almost without exception the actions of the student council have been satisfactory to both students and faculty. But there seems a disposition on the part of the faculty at State to do most of the investigating and punishing of student offenders.

If and when the State students elect one who strongly believes in the theory of self government then the clash will occur. But it will mark the establishment of such a system as we have here which applies both in practice and theory. Nor will State regret such action, for our student government gives the Carolina man greater independence of thought and action than a faculty supervised system would. Except in rare cases such independence has served Carolina well.

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

GENERAL THEME: "Coming to Terms With Life"

Tuesday, March 25—Topic of the Day: "Respect for Others' Opinions." (Scripture, John 8:31-40). Memory verse, "Be not wise in your own conceits." (Romans 12:16).

Meditation: "Reverence for others means respect for their opinions. The wise man knows that he does not know it all. He knows that God does not give all his truth to any one individual, even though it be he; for truth certainly cannot be less than the total that all men see. The wise man loves truth more than he does his own opinion of truth. The open-minded man is a catholic man. He believes that others see truth which he may not see. To get along helpfully and cooperatively with others one must value their opinions. Blessed is the man that sitteth not in the seat of the scornful."

Prayer: "Teach me, O Lord, how to have proper regard for all those around me. I would be true to my convictions, and yet kind; just, and yet generous; mindful of the truth, and yet ever merciful. For the spirit of Jesus I pray. Amen."

Meditation Column

There will appear in each issue of the Tar Heel from now until Easter a short daily meditation column on the editorial page. This column will be written by H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y.

Readers' Opinions

PANNING THE LAUNDRY

Editor of the Daily Tar Heel:

There appeared in your "Readers' Opinions" column a few days ago an article criticizing the present laundry charges and also the laundrying services. I agree with the New Student in all of his statements, but the only thing that was wrong with them was that they were not strong enough.

Having been here a little longer than this new student, I have had a better chance to see just how rotten the laundry service really is. Not a quarter has gone by since I came here without my having to make an extra five dollars deposit. Thus we see that every quarter that I have been here, my laundry has cost me $13.50, which is absolutely too high. It is true that some of this probably came back in the refund, but only a small amount. By having to pay the sum of $13.50 each quarter, I will have paid, and have paid, at the end of each year a total of $40.50 for only eight months of laundrying services.

This new student, to whom I previously refered, stated that the laundry mussed up his B. V. D.'s. That is true, and it applies to every student's laundry, but this new student failed to mention the main fault with the laundry—that fault of being able to so successfully take off every button on shirts, underwear, and everything else containing buttons. The buttons that remain are so mangled that they are absolutely useless. Sheets are ripped; holes are torn in sox; collars and cuffs are snatched from the shirts; in fact everything is almost totally destroyed.

Since we do have to pay such high rates, I think it nothing but just that the laundry department take the small trouble to not tear up everything that they get their hands on.

With many appreciations to you, Mr. Editor, for the use of this column, I will close (as the new student did) hoping that these matters will be looked into.

AN UPPERCLASSMAN.

THE MOST LOGICAL MAN FOR PRESIDENT

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Strange to say in all the talk about the next president of the University and the desirability of getting a man from the faculty, the most promising and easily the best fitted man for the position has been overlooked. We have reference to Mr. Bob House who is ably fitted to carry on the duties of president.

As executive secretary of the University Mr. House has been in the administrative business for a number of years; he knows intimately all the details of running the University and is in close contact with every branch and phase of University activity. He has had the experience of working under Dr. Chase for a number of years, and has a knowledge of the history of the University such as no other man possesses. Added to this Mr. House is a splendid speaker and a man of high intellectual qualifications and attainments. He knows the business of administering a University; it is an executive rather than a scholar, a good fellow, or a noted man that we need in the President's chair.

A number of the men mentioned for the position are eminently qualified for the job from the standpoint of the students, but would not be able to command the cooperation of the state and the legislature as a President should; others are qualified from the standpoint of the state and legislature, but would not be suitable from the faculty or students' viewpoint. Mr. House more than any other man thus far mentioned combines the two; from his long association with President Chase as executive secretary he knows well the state and the legislature. Among the students there is no man on the faculty better liked or more esteemed than he. As president he would have the cooperation of the state, the legislature, and the people at large, and at the same time he would be very popular with the students and faculty.

Local Business Men Support High School

The business men of Chapel Hill are very much in favor of the way things have turned out down the high school way this school year in an athletic way. Circular letters were sent out to the business men some time ago about baseball uniforms and, so far, they are hitting a thousand percent average—every business man yet approached has cheerfully bought the youngsters a uniform.

Thus far this year the local lads have played 36 contests in football and basketball and have dropped only six—two of which were football and the remainder basketball.

The business houses which have been instrumental in uniforming the baseball team this spring are: Carolina Theatre, Carolina Barber Shop, Students' Supply Co., Strowd Motor Co., University Barber Shop, Jack Lipman, Stetson "D" Tailors, Carolina Dry Cleaners, Sutton's Drug Store, Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Co., Kiwanis Club, Smoke Shop and Johnson-Prevost.

High School Girls End Court Season With Game Tonight

Chapel Hill high school girls' basketball team concludes its season tonight at eight o'clock with a game against the Blue Streaks of Durham in the high school tin can. The girls have played 17 contests thus far this season, winning thirteen games and losing four.

Golf And Tennis Meetings Notice

Coach Kenfield announces that there will be a meeting of all candidates for the freshman and varsity golf teams at 10:30 today at Emerson field stadium. The candidates are urged to be prompt.

He also announces that there will be a tennis tournament, starting Thursday, for all candidates for freshman and varsity tennis. All entries should be made promptly.

High School Plays

The Chapel Hill High School Players will give two one-act plays in the high school auditorium on Friday evening, March 28. "Confessional" by Percival Wilde has not been given in Chapel Hill before. It is directed by Mr. Farrar and the parts will be played by Tom Lawrence, Harold Ernst, George Koch, Betty Durham, Lyal Mae Reynolds, and Margaret Jordan. "Six Who Pass While the Lentils Boil" is directed by Miss Penny, and the players are Margaret Coward, Vivian Crawford, Benjamin Stearns, Juanita Talbert, Ledford Simmons, Annie Lee McAuley, Doris Lindsay, Howard Manning and Maria Strowd. The performance will begin at 8:30.

New Library Fixtures

The University library has recently installed some new equipment in the building. Eight new lights have been placed over the desks which contain the general catalogue files. Several new adjustable lights have also been installed over the files at the circulation desks.

Among the other equipment recently placed in the library is the new brass plates on the boxes of the general files. The plates are arranged so as to keep the boxes from being mixed up easily. Two sand jars of Greek style have been placed near the door.

Notice

Candidates for sub-assistant managerships of Baseball must report at Emerson field this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

CINDERMEN FACE DIFFICULT TESTS

Eleven Meets Scheduled For Track Team; Penn State Here.

The Tar Heel track team, state champions and southern runners-up last year, recently announced a 1930 schedule that is easily the most ambitious undertaken by a Tar Heel track team in years.

Headline events are home meets with Washington and Lee and Penn State; a foreign meet with Princeton; and participation in state and southern championship meets. Washington and Lee nosed out the Tar Heels in the first southern indoor championship, 29-27, while Penn State always puts out one of the country's best cinder outfits.

The card shows seven dual meets. Five are with Southern Conference foes, N. C. State, Georgia Tech, Duke, V. P. I., and Washington and Lee. The other four events are the state and southern title meets, the Penn relays, and the Georgia Tech relays.

The complete schedule follows: March 29, N. C. State (pending) here; April 5, Georgia Tech here; April 9, Duke here; April 12, Georgia Tech relays, Atlanta; April 19, Penn State here; April 21, V. P. I. at Blacksburg; April 26, Penn State relays there; April 28, W. & L. (date pending) here; May 3, state meet at Greensboro; May 10, Princeton at Princeton; May 16, Southern Conference meet.

CHORUS REHEARSES FOR NEXT CANTATA

Last evening in Gerrard hall the Community Chorus held its first rehearsal for the spring concert with an attendance of more than one hundred.

Invitations to attend had been sent out to all who had participated in the Messiah as well as to other singers residing in the community. Instead of being a cantata in full, the spring performance will consist of three groups of miscellaneous choral numbers, which will be alternated with groups to be sung by a professional soloist.

George Lawrence, president of the group, wishes it made clear that the organization is open to all students of the University without fee. The only conditions are that students like other members, must buy their own music and must maintain a good attendance record thru the time of the concert.

Dentists Hear Bagby On Human Efficiency

Dr. English Bagby of the University psychology department was the lecturer for the past week in the six class centers of the extension division postgraduate course in dentistry. Dr. Bagby's talk, "The Emotions and Human Efficiency," was the third in a series of six lectures and clinics to be offered to North Carolina dentists.

The next lecture series will be given during the week of April 21. Dr. T. W. Maves of Cleveland, Ohio, will be the speaker. Class centers are located in Greenville, Raleigh, Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Charlotte and Asheville.

SIDELIGHTS

by
Sports Editor

In summarizing the recent basketball season at Carolina we find that in at least one sport the Tar Heels did not show championship calibre.

Contrasted with Tar Heel basketball teams of the past two college generations, the 1930 University quint certainly cannot be termed successful. But the squad, tremendously handicapped because of graduations last June, made the most of mediocre prospects to finish the season with 10 wins and nine losses, prior to the S. I. C. basketball tourney in Atlanta. The Tar Heels exhibited a reversal of form in the last five games of the season—winning four of them by good margins immediately preceding the S. I. C. tourney.

The Tar Heels finished the season in a tie for second honors in the Big Five league, but were eliminated from the southern conference tournament in the opening round. The White Phantoms maintained a lead at the half, 10-8, but the Georgia Bulldogs rallied to finish with a 26-17 win.

Lacy Harper, elongated Tar Heel center from Pittsboro, was elected honorary captain for the 1930 season as it ended. Coach Jim Ashmore appointed a captain prior to each game as no captain was elected at the beginning of the season.

For the first time in several years the Tar Heels had no outstanding individual contenders for the mythical all-southern five, but Artie Marpet, captain-elect, was almost unanimously picked as a guard on the all-state quint. Marpet was hailed by many as one of the best guards at Carolina in recent years, and led the Tar Heels in scoring as well as the floor work in several of the games.

The only teams which decisively defeated Carolina in a series of games were Washington & Lee and Duke, while the Tar Heels evened up the series of games with Davidson and State, and decisively won over the V.P.I. quint in two engagements.

The second meeting with the Blue Devils proved the hardest fought and one of the closest games of the season for the White Phantoms, while their defeat by Loyola was also by a small margin. In the last minute of play in the Duke game a long shot by the Blue Devils placed them in the lead by one point. The Loyola outfit overcame a Tar Heel lead in the last few minutes of play to win 26-25.

Assembly To Discuss University President

G. P. Carr, speaker of the Philanthropic Assembly, announces that the regular meeting of the assembly will be held tonight. The assembly will discuss the naming of the president of the University for the purpose of making a recommendation to the board of trustees. Speaker Carr announces that the work for the quarter will be outlined at the meeting.

Fencing Results

Three fencing matches were held during exam week. Beta Theta Pi No. 1, with Brown and Waugh starring, defeated Sigma Phi Sigma by a score of 7-2. Sigma Epsilon, with Hewitt and Long showing up well, defeated Sigma Nu. In the third match the Buccaneers defeated Old East without losing a match. Urban and Poindexter performed excellently for the Buccaneers.

Spring Intramural Program To Begin In Next Few Days

Entrants Must Take 10-Day Period of Training: Boxing Tournament Opens First.

The spring intramural program will get under way in a few days with the opening of the boxing tournament. Letters have been sent out by the intramural department to the fraternities and dormitories announcing this tourney. A wrestling tournament will be run off immediately following the boxing, according to recent announcements by the Intramural officials, while another fencing tournament will take place in a few days. Two baseball leagues, fraternity and dormitory, will be run similar to the football leagues. Other intramural sports planned for the spring quarter are horseshoes and tennis.

In the boxing tournament each team may enter as many men as it desires, with points to be awarded to the team with the highest number of entries. According to announcements by the intramural department, the entrants must undergo a ten-day period of instruction under Coach Rowe, beginning today (March 25) at 4 o'clock in the Tin Can. The tournament will be held at the end of this training period.

The awards for the boxing and wrestling tournaments will be as follows: (1) team having most entries, 25 points; (2) team winner, 50 points; (3) individual winner of each class (points to be credited to the organization represented), 25 points and gold medal; (4) second place winner, 15 points.

The following weights will be contested, with an allowance of four pounds overweight: 115 pounds, 125 pounds, 135 pounds, 145 pounds, 160 pounds, 175 pounds and the unlimited class.

The intramural department plans to begin the baseball league next Monday or as soon after as possible. Cards have been sent out to team managers to be used as entry blanks, and as soon as these are returned the league schedule will be arranged. The intramural baseball diamonds have been put in good shape, and new equipment has been bought.

The scoring system to be used in baseball will be the same as in the football and basketball leagues. The winners of league titles get 50 points, and the winner of a campus title receives an additional 50. Each team entered in the league receives 50 points, but 10 points is deducted for every forfeit after the first one.

So far this year there has been a record number of entries in the major fall and winter sports—football and basketball leagues. In addition to this the number of forfeits has greatly decreased and a larger amount of interest has been aroused by the all-year competition record that is being kept.

A large silver loving cup is to be awarded to the team which leads the campus in the intramural events at the end of the year.

Freshman Baseball

Coach Cerney requests all candidates for the freshman baseball team to report this afternoon at the freshman field at 3 o'clock. Candidates are requested to bring as much equipment as possible as regular equipment will not be issued until the squad is selected.

New Supreme Court Justice Was Active In University Life

Judge John Johnston Parker, who was named last week by President Hoover to succeed the late Associate Justice Edward T. Sanford on the Supreme Court bench is another alumnus of the University who has achieved nation-wide renown.

After graduation from Monroe high school he entered the University of North Carolina in the fall of 1903. His college life was a series of triumphs. He received his A. B. degree in 1907, LL. B. in 1908. While in college he was president of the freshman class, senior class, athletic association and student council. He was president of Phi Beta Kappa during his senior year and was elected a member of Golden Fleece.

Mr. Parker represented the University in intercollegiate debates with the University of Georgia and the University of Virginia. He received the Alexander prize in Greek, the W. J. Bryan prize in law and the Mangum medal for oratory. In 1927 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from his alma mater.

In 1908 he began the practice of law in Greensboro, in partnership with the late David Stern. He moved to his native town of Monroe in 1909, and in 1910 formed a partnership with A. M. Stack, then State Solicitor, now a judge of the Supreme Court, under the firm name of Stack & Parker. Captain Gilliam Craig became a member of the law firm in 1919.

In 1922 Mr. Parker moved to Charlotte, becoming head of the law firm of Parker, McRae & Bobbitt. He continued to practice in Charlotte until appointed one of the United States circuit judges of the 4th Circuit by President Coolidge on October 3, 1925.

Mr. Parker was vice-president of the North Carolina Bar Association for one term and then a member of its executive committee. He is a former vice-president of the American Bar Association. He practiced regularly before the state and federal courts of North Carolina and appeared frequently in the state and federal courts of South Carolina. It was in the interest of the latter organization that he was visiting in London at the time when he was taken with his last illness.

Dr. Royster is survived by his children, Chauncey and Martha Royster, his father, Wisconsin I. Royster of Raleigh, and two brothers, Dr. Hubert Royster of Raleigh and Frank Royster of Cleveland, Ohio.

the University known throughout the country. He was instrumental in organizing the extension division and was for several years its director. He organized and secured financial support for the University Press from the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Foundation and still acts as director. At the dedication of the new library building in October, 1929, he announced that the Carnegie Corporation had given the University $100,000 for the establishment of a school of library administration. He has been mentioned as a possible successor to President H. W. Chase, who has resigned to accept the presidency of the University of Illinois.

K. MACGOWAN, IN NEW BOOK, PAYS TRIBUTE TO KOCH

Carolina," whom he calls "apostle of folk-drama and high priest of playmaking."

MacGowan devotes 11 of his high-grade illustrations to the work of Koch, chiefly photographs of the Carolina Playmakers theatre, the Playmakers on tour, sets of yesterday and of today. The Carolina Playbook is praised as being one of the most elaborate in the country. Some attention is given to the work of the Carolina Dramatic Association and of Miss Nettina Strobach with the schools of the state.

Professor Koch's methods of teaching, which began Paul Green's successful career as a playwright upon a certain day when the former read in class a newspaper clipping on the Lowrie band of outlaws, are praised. This inspired Green's first play, "The Last of the Lowries." MacGowan agrees with Koch that not enough credit is given by the nation's universities for real creative work.

MacGowan closes his book with a plea for a "national theatre" in which "the drama will be, first of all, an expression of local characters and local conditions — easily understood by their own people, easily attractive to them; if such local drama proves to have universal qualities, of truth or of art, it will live beyond the locality and will be seen all over the country." He concludes the story of the progress of playmaking by saying that "there is a vital need for extension all over the country—and I have travelled 14,000 miles to gather material for this book—of the kind of instruction North Carolina is now giving."

LOCAL CABINETS MET HERE WITH STATE Y GROUP

After a brief discussion, Johnnie Lang, who has already done work to bring about this closer contact between the schools, explained briefly the work that Carolina had done so far. He praised Ray Farris highly for the work that he had done and stated that although President Farris would not be able to complete his work, it was planned that it be carried out by his successor.

Elbert Overton, who is connected with the Y cabinets at State College, also made a short talk on what State had done so far on this matter of bettering conditions. He stated that State was fully behind any move of this sort and could be counted on for her share of the work.

This meeting last night resembled somewhat the meeting that was held last quarter by Duke and Carolina. This time, however, State was represented by only a few of its student leaders rather than a group of the student body, as was the case with Duke. "It is the plan that a North Carolina Student Confederation be organized which will help in a large way to carry out this idea of making the schools on friendlier terms," stated Lang. This confederation would be a part of the National Student Confederation and would be, according to Lang, a big factor in the forwarding of this move that has already started so enthusiastically in the state.

Taylor Society Will Hear Harry P. Kendall Tonight

President of the Kendall Company To Speak In Bingham Hall At 8 O'clock.

IS NATIONAL PRESIDENT

Will Speak on "Management Problems In The Textile Industry;" Under Auspices Of Local Society, North Carolina Club and Departmental Seminar.

Harry P. Kendall, president of the Kendall Company and president of the Taylor Society, will speak on "Management Problems in the Textile Industry" in Bingham Hall at 8:30 this evening. Mr. Kendall is appearing under the joint auspices of the University branch of the Taylor Society, the North Carolina Club, and the seminar of the department of economics and commerce.

The Kendall Company operates several textile plants in the south which have been under scientific management, and up to the present time has had no labor disturbances. In the present era of textile depression, the Kendall plants have been operating successfull, and a large portion of the credit for their successful operation is accredited to scientific management.

Because of the fact that the mills under the direction of Mr. Kendall have been operated at a profit during the period of depression, the remarks which Mr. Kendall will make this evening are expected to be of interest to those who follow the textile situation.

Mr. Kendall is well-known in the field of successful business management, for he has written many articles on business management. Articles by him have recently appeared in Factory and Industrial Management, The Textile World, and Barron's Weekly.

Plants operated by the Kendall Company in the south are located at Edgefield, S. C.; Newberry, S. C.; Paw Creek, N. C.; and Camden, S. C. In addition to these mills Bauer and Black, Inc., makers of hospital supplies and surgical dressings, and the Lewis Manufacturing Company of Walpole, Mass., are divisions of the company.

The Taylor Society, of which Mr. Kendall is president, is an international organization for the promotion of the science of administration and management. Through the application of the principles of scientific management, the society hopes to secure a better understanding of these principles and an improvement in all phases of industry, as related to the worker, the manager, and the employer.

In the early part of April the Taylor Society will present to the campus F. M. Craft, chief engineer of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, who will speak on the five year management plan of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Jones And Potter Leaving

Russell Potter and Howard Mumford Jones of the English department are leaving the University at the end of this academic year. Mr. Potter is to succeed George V. Denny as director of the Institute of Arts and Sciences of Columbia while Mr. Jones is to go to the University of Michigan.

PHI ASSEMBLY FAVORS CONNOR

University Professor Endorsed As Successor To Chase; Graham Second.

The Philanthropic Assembly, at its regular meeting last night, endorsed Professor Connor for the presidency of the University. The names of Professor Connor and Graham were presented for the consideration of the assembly by members.

Ex-speaker John A. Lang introduced the name of Dr. Connor. He stressed Dr. Connor's administrative and scholastic ability and his acquaintance with the people of North Carolina and the students in the University. Others speaking for Connor were Representatives William Speight, Billy Brown, and Edward Yarborough. Representative John Wilkinson proposed Professor Graham. Representatives Thomas Baldwin and Bert Haywood suggested that the names of all the desirable names be presented to the trustees.

Speaker G. P. Carr, at the opening of the meeting, delivered his inaugural address. He traced the work of the assembly for the past two quarters and gave his aims of the work to be done during the present quarter.

Music Faculty Goes To Raleigh Meeting

H. S. Dyer, T. Smith McCorkle and Nelson O. Kennedy, of the University music faculty, attended a meeting of the state music teachers association at Raleigh last Friday.

The University was represented on the program by Mr. Dyer, who spoke on the position which the University takes regarding credit for outside music study.

As a result of the meeting official action was taken to unify the code of credits throughout the state, and as a first step in this procedure, a state-wide survey is now being made.

Mrs. Grace Woodman, also of the music faculty, is now in Chicago attending a national convention of music supervisors. Mrs. Woodman is the president of the Southern Supervisors' Conference, which will hold a meeting at Memphis, Tenn., in the spring of 1931.

Student Notice

By a recent action of the faculty, no changes in registration may be made after the expiration of ten calendar days from registration day. April 1st will therefore be the last day on which changes may be made.

COMPLETE DEBATE SCHEDULE ISSUED

Six Contests Listed for Carolina Debaters; To Meet Maryland April 1.

The remaining intercollegiate debates on the Carolina schedule will make use of three questions: "Resolved: That the nations of the world should adopt some plan of complete disarmament of all forces, except those which are needed for police purposes." "Resolved: That the principle of the chain store is detrimental to the best interests of the American public." "Resolved: That the thirteen months calendar should be adopted."

The following is the complete list of forensic events for the remainder of the collegiate year:

1—March 27, 7:30 p. m. Second discussion of the chain store store questiion.

2—March 31, 7:30 p. m. Tryouts on the chain store question.

3— April 1, Carolina vs. Maryland on the Disarmament question (here).

4—April 11, Carolina vs. Maryland on the chain store question (there).

5—April 15, Carolina vs. Northwestern on the Chain store question (here).

6—April 19, Carolina vs. Boston on the Disarmament question (here).

7—April 25, Radio debate, Carolina vs. Virginia on the Thirteen Months Calendar question (Raleigh).

8—Early in May, Carolina vs. Boston on the Disarmament question (there).

In addition to the foregoing well-established schedule, there is a possibility of a debate with The University of the South at Chapel Hill. In all probability, the first discussion of the Thirteen Months Calendar question will take place on Thursday niight, April 3, this being the regular time of the squad's meeting. The date for the tryout on this query has not been set, but will probably occur on Thursday night, April 10.

The officials of the debate squad are still enrolling all eligible students who desire to participate in any of the tryouts which are to be held during the remainder of the quarter.

ROMEO AND JULIET IS NEXT REHEARSAL

All the amorous youths on the campus will probably focus their attention on Professor Koch's Playmaker tryouts scheduled for 4:30 Friday afternoon. The forthcoming production to be cast at that time will be Shakespeare's ever popular Romeo and Juliet.

Mr. Koch intends that the play shall serve as the final public attraction of the group for the current season, and that it shall be given in their forest theatre.

Rip Van Winkle and The Tempest were produced in the Playmakers' natural amphitheatre in 1929 and 1928 respectively.

Committee Appointed To Find New President Busy

Members Had Individual Conferences With More Than Sixty Full Carolina Professors Over The Week-End.

CONSIDERING MANY MEN

Several Out-Of-State Men Are Now Under Consideration; Dr. Ivey Lewis and Dr. Edward Greenlaw Head This Group.

The special committee appointed by the board of trustees to find a successor to President Chase is to continue its work by interviewing several out-of-state men whose names have been brought up before it.

During the past weekend, the committee, headed by A. H. Graham of Hillsboro and comprised of Mr. Graham, Judge John J. Parker, recently appointed as associate justice of the United States Supreme court, Charles Whedbee of Hertford and Leslie Weil of Goldsboro, had individual conferences with more than 60 of the 81 full professors of the University.

These private interviews were held in order that the committee might obtain the opinion of the faculty as to the qualifications of the next president as well as to receive suggestions for Dr. Chase's follower. A large group of student leaders were also questioned with the same view in mind.

In addition to the group of men who have been mentioned as probable successors to Harry W. Chase, there are two or three gentlemen, now residing outside of North Carolina who are being considered. Dr. Ivey F. Lewis of the faculty of the University of Virginia has been mentioned, as well as Dr. Edward Greenlaw, former dean of the Graduate School at the University of North Carolina and now at Johns-Hopkins University.

The committee plans to travel as far as New England and the Middle West and it may be able to report its findings to the board of trustees in April although it may not be till June that another meeting will be called.

LATEST BOOK BY U. N. C. PRESS IS PRAISED HIGHLY

"The Life of Miranda" by William Spence Robertson Destined To Become One of Outstanding Biographies of Year.

(By E. C. Daniel, Jr.)

The Life of Miranda by William Spence Robertson, a publication of the University Press, has, since its recent appearance, become one of the outstanding biographies of the year. And if one is to judge by the statements of numerous literary critics printed in the daily press, this popularity of the book is due almost wholly to the romantic circumstances surrounding career of the principal character, and, what is more interesting to those adventures of the author in seeking out the source material for his two volumes.

A series of seven reviews and critiques, appearing in newspapers from Hartford, Conn., to Galveston, Texas, have carried detailed accounts of the glamorous appeal of the book and of the valuable discovery of the personal papers of Francisco de Miranda. In addition, the Associated Press also sent out recently a despatch concerning The Life of Miranda that was printed in the book sections of its allied papers all over the nation.

Quoting from the Associated Press review: "Detective work of a high order in locating the lost archives of Miranda, famous South American patriot, after they had been missing a hundred years, has brought international fame to William Spence Robertson, professor of history at the University of Illinois." The archives are "of international importance as source material" since Miranda was the "only known participant in the American, French, and South American revolutions."

This last quotation is from the New York World, which publication used among its book reviews for the past Sunday a lavishly written article by Lawrence C. Woodman, with a two-column heading.

A reviewer for the Galveston (Texas) Daily News, while confessing that before he read Robertson's book he had never heard of Francisco de Miranda, declared it to be "difficult to name any historical figure who lived a more spectacular life" than he.

The Saturday Review of Literature also generously displays a criticism of the book written by L. S. Meyer of New York University. Mr. Meyer states in beginning his article the famous approximation of Miranda as made by Napoleon, "He is a Don Quixote—with this difference that he is not mad." Continuing with a brief sketch of the accomplishments of the hero of Dr. Robertson's book, he concludes: "In one respect the author differs from the majority of present-day biographers. He is far more concerned with his subject's role in history than with his private life. . . . It is also refreshing to find a biography in which no attempt is made to psychoanalyze the subject. . . . The picture of the Venezuelan patriot is historically accurate and the most complete yet presented. It will undoubtedly take its place among the best biographies produced

I find it difficult to understand how the Revolution ever could have succeeded.—Rupert Hughes.

Mountains of Red Tape

An interesting example of the intricate maze of red tape which must be unwound before the simplest action can be taken by the federal government is afforded by the attempts of Chapel Hill citizens to have the hour of closing the local postoffice lobby changed. At present the lobby is closed at exactly 9 o'clock every night, which has proven irksome to a considerable number of townspeople and students who wish to get at their lock-boxes after that hour.

Postmaster Herndon reports that he has applied several times to the authorities at Washington for permission to keep the doors open longer, but without avail. The later closing hour would place no extra work upon the employees of the postoffice; it would merely mean that the doors enclosing the lobby be left open until 11 o'clock so that the renters of lock-boxes might have access to them for two hours longer in the evening. As it is at present, hundreds of students and townspeople are obliged to wait until morning for important mail because they have been busy during the early part of the evening or have been out of town.

It is obviously a simple request that Chapel Hillians are making of the postal authorities, but they have encountered a vast amount of governmental red tape that must be unrolled before they can bring it to the attention of anyone with the power to issue the necessary order. Postmaster Herndon was appealed to, but he did not have even the authority to decide when the keys should be turned in the door locks or the flagpole painted. And his efforts to bring the request to the attention of the powers-that-be at Washington did not so much as dent the wall of petty formalities with which they are surrounded.

Mayor Council and other citizens have written the two North Carolina senators, Lee S. Overman and F. M. Simmons, asking them to intercede with the postoffice department. Possibly these two dignitaries may succeed in having the Chapel Hill postoffice lobby doors kept open two hours longer each evening by exerting their senatorial influence, but it doesn't seem at all certain.

The tedious procedures thru which local citizens have been forced to meander in their efforts to have their slight request acted upon is worthy of a movement for a million dollar federal structure or a major political appointment. This simple example lends some measure of support to the often-repeated statement that "the will of the people" is not quite as mighty a force in American governmental functions as it should be, and provides an illustration of the immense mass of useless red tape which has developed around even the most inconsequental of federal procedures.

Sunday Blue Laws

Nothing is more typical of the absurd inconsistency and hypocrisy in American lawmaking than the blue laws in effect in so many places. This obnoxious legal tendency assumes a particularly offensive proportion in North Carolina as a whole and in many communities of the state in particular.

Almost every town or village in the state furnishes examples of this Comstockian tendency to attempt to regulate the habits, the ethics, the very morals of its inhabitants by the statute books. In a few communities no drug stores are allowed to remain open on Sunday; in a number of others these businesses can open their doors only for a limited time on the Sabbath. There is state wide sentiment against Sunday motion pictures, baseball games, pool rooms or similar amusement halls; in one of the largest towns in this state the Sunday sale of gasoline was prohibited until very recently.

Chapel Hill is just as rigidly ridiculous in this phase of law making as any other . Here the drug stores may remain open, but the sale of tobacco and cocacolas during church hours is forbidden—that is unless one cares to take a dash of ammonia in his dope! One can easily imagine to be abroad the spirit of the same perverted busybody who allows illiterate customs inspectors to pass upon the "purity" of classics to prevent the morals of the good people from being soiled!

A discussion of the censorship of moving pictures, magazines, and books can be omitted, as can similar mention of the innumerable laws, ordinances, statutes, and what not put on the books of municipal, county, state, and national government to compel the American people to walk a chalk line. Such a discussion would be as futile as are these laws; besides, people are beginning to realize the lamentably ineffectual situation.

The most liberal thing this village has done in a long while is to allow the Tom Thumb golf course to remain open on Sundays from one to six. Even with this curtailment a step in the right direction has been taken, a step that might finally lead to the repeal of the laughable ordinances so characteristic of little towns in North Carolina, and an awakening to a reasonable sanity in the outlook on human nature under foolish restraint.

Voila! (pronounced: that's that), the vacations have come and been. Some twenty-five hundred jazz-mad, baby radicals have returned to a life of ease and evil at that well known center of license—dear old alma mater. The debauchery will consist of from fifteen to fifty hours of class work, and as many more in outside preparation, not counting, of course, the few extra things such as themes, term papers, outside reading, laboratories, etc.

During the vacation we were fortunate enough to witness an exhibition match between Ralph Greenleaf, world's champion pocket-billiardist, and Earl Seaback, New England champion. Greenleaf had tough luck—he could run off only forty-one balls at a trial. We don't believe that he has gotten over his misfortune yet. Talk about your kings of the ivories, this gent from Monmouth, Illinois, has certainly made the game pay. Aside from movie, stage, and vaudeville contracts M. Greenleaf draws a salary of $8,000 for his pushing, said salary being the contribution of Brunswick, Baulk, Collendar in the interest of the game.

How proud Milton would be to know that one of his stories—Paradise Lost—has served as a model for more histories of that well known battle between the forces of the Omnipotent and the Old Hairy than any other story in existence. Now comes Jonathan Daniels, a former editor of the Tar Heel, and talented son of Josephus Daniels, with a new version, The Clash of Angels.

These Carolinians of ours are rather running to angelic titles. Thomas Wolfe, another former editor of the Tar Heel, is the author of a best seller, Look Homeward, Angel, and is said to have earned close to $100,000 on his Asheville book.

Daniels and Wolfe are the recipients of Guggenheim fellowships which will carry them to Europe where they will do further literary work. Both are quite deserving.

Jonathan Daniels' famous father has proposed a hundred years' trial for the late lamented Prohibition Amendment. But the fault in this excellent suggestion is that by that time the trial will have been ended some seventy-five years, and the bootleggers will be renting the capitol building out to the government. Even if it did work what good would accrue to contemporary drinkers?—It wouldn't improve the quality of bootleg any whatsoever.

* * *

All these prohibition polls prove one thing only: people vote dry, but drink wet. And they will probably continue to do so.

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

General Theme: "Coming to Terms With Life"

Topic for the day: "Belief in the Goodness of Others." (Read Matthew 22:34-40). Key verse, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Meditation: "This means, in part: thou shalt trust thy neighbor—believe in him. The person who is to get along with others must believe in their goodness, especially in their good intentions. Faith begets ground for faith. It is the truest interpreter. The only safe creed is: I believe that my neighbor is as good as I am. This is not a difficult creed, except for the pharisee. Does not our personal experience convince us that there are not many people who are really cowardly, and who do not seem to be making some effort to find the right and to do it? Belief that they are thus striving to serve the good as they see it, will give us endless patience and consideration. This was Lincoln's way. If we can only believe that those who differ from us are as well intentioned as we are, we can always get along with them."

Prayer: "O Lord, we thank Thee for those who believe in us and trust us, and who by their generous faith and confidence are ever lifting us to higher levels of performance. May our gratitude for this teach us to show a like spirit as we move among the companions of this day. Amen."

Smith Entertains Ball Players Tues.

As an evidence of his interest in University athletics, Manager E. Carrington Smith of the local theatre has announced that he is entertaining the baseball team every Tuesday afternoon at the fiirst show.

In the event that the team is away from Chapel Hill on Tuesday afternoon on a playing date, Mr. Smith has arranged to have them see the show as his guests when they return.

Entertaining a University team is no novelty for Mr. Smith. Since he took over the management of the theatre, he has given shows in honor of one or another squad or team the year round. The Winter football squad was the last group of athletes to receive the hospitality of the Carolina Theatre through its manager.

In addition, Mr. Smith has made a practice of inviting dormitory and fraternity groups to visit the theatre at regular intervals, so that each group on the campus will be his guests at some time during the year.

Frosh And Varsity Tennis Contingents To Compete Against Davis Cup Players

Date of Match Has Not Been Settled But Will Be Played In Pinehurst.

HAVE SOUTHERN TRIP

Swing Through South Sends Tar Heels Against Strongest Collegiate Teams; Matches Pending With State, Duke and Wake Forest; To Enter Conference Tournament.

Definite arrangements have been made for a meeting of the combined Carolina varsity and freshman tennis teams with the Davis cup team at Pinehurst in the near future, according to an announcement yesterday by Coach J. F. Kenfield. The date for this match has not been settled.

At the same time the schedule for the team was released. Ten matches in addition to the state and conference tournaments have been arranged definitely and four matches are pending. In addition to the collegiate matches the team will meet the Charlotte and Pinehurst clubs.

The schedule opens with Alabama here April 14. Davidson follows two days later here with the state tournament beginning April 17 and continuing through the 19th on the Carolina courts. Johns Hopkins will be met here April 21 and a match with Duke is pending for April 23.

In May the team will swing through the south, meeting Davidson, Vanderbilt, Sewanee, Georgia, Alabama, Tulane, and L. S. U. before entering the conference tournament May 15 at New Orleans.

Pending matches are with Duke, State and Wake Forest.

The complete schedule is as follows: April 14, Alabama here; April 16, Davidson here; April 17, 18 and 19, state tournament here; April 21, Johns Hopkins here; April 23, Duke here (pending); May 7, Davidson there; May 8, Vanderbilt there; May 9, Sewanee there; May 10, Georgia there; May 12, Alabama there; May 13, Tulane there; May 14, Louisiana State there; May 15, 16 and 17, Southern Conference tournament at New Orleans; May 21, Duke there (pending).

Glee Club To Be Remade Completely

The spring quarter University glee club plans have been announced by Professor H. S. Dyer, director.

Rehearsals are now open to all underclassmen, whether they have had previous experience or not, and those who apply now will be given preference in being considered as members for next fall's tour. The club will practise each Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, at 4:45 o'clock.

Several new members have already signed up, among whom are those who formerly were engaged in work at the time of rehearsals, but whose schedules no longer conflict with the time of practise.

At present the club is working on a program for the spring tour which will be made the middle of April. This program will be considerably varied, and the work will be almost equivalent to forming a new club.

In addition to the tour, the club will give a home concert prior to its departure, in the Methodist church. It has also been invited to appear in Greensboro at the state convention of federated music clubs.

Suggestion of an appropriate name for a brand of bootleg whisky: "Caveat Emptor."—The Florence (Ala.) Herald.

Intramural Boxing

Approximately fifty men reported to the Tin Can yesterday for workouts under Coaches Rowe and Sapp preparatory to entering the Intramural boxing tournament. Any others desiring to enter may do so by reporting to the Tin Can this afternoon at 4 o'clock, and undergoing this short period of training prior to the tournament.

MAUS SHIFTED TO INFIELD POSITION

Star Catcher Gets Try At Initial Sack; Shows Up Well; Change May or May Not Be Permanent.

Shifting of Captain Jimmy Maus, star catcher, to first base, was the most important phase of baseball work here yesterday as the Tar Heels prepared for their opening game with Springfield here tomorrow.

The change may or may not be permanent. First base is the one infield post at which the Tar Heels lack a veteran. Maus plays first base almost as smoothly as the backstop post. The ultimate result will depend on the relative degree in which the rookie first basemen and catchers come through.

Potter and Kushner behind Maus at the backstop post are both good catchers and good hitters, although they lack Maus' finesse and ability to work pitchers. With these two looking slightly better than Jackson and Brown as new first base candidates, the change might work for the best. Still, the backstop post calls for one of the steadiest men on the team, and Coach Ashmore will hate to shift permanently such a valuable man as Maus.

The veterans Lufty, Whitehead and Rand are once more looking like fixtures at third, short, and second, with Wright, Edwards and Fleming likewise as pitchers, but Coach Ashmore will probably judge his outfielders considerably in early games.

The Tar Heel mentor has three leading right handed hitters and the same number of left handers there, and will probably shift his gardeners all season to meet different kinds of pitching.

The men most likely to get the outfield call against Springfield Thursday are Sher, McKinney, Branch and Crouch, right handers, and Blythe and Davis, left handers.

New Golf Schedule

Due to cold weather the last part of the winter quarter the Carolina golf team had to postpone the elimination tournament. It is being played off this week and the four best scorers will play on the Carolina team. Thirty-six holes will be played, the best scorer playing first on the Carolina ladder, and so on down.

At a meeting held yesterday the following schedule was announced: March 29, State College here; April 9, William and Mary here; April 11, Wake Forest here; April 12, Duke here; April 19, Georgia Tech in Atlanta; April 25 and 26, state tournament at Sedgefield; April 28, Vanderbilt, Nashville; May 1, 2 and 3, South Carolina, Birmingham; May 10, State College, Raleigh; May 17, Virginia, Charlottesville; tentative, Duke; return with Wake Forest.

COMPETITION FOR INTRA-MURAL CUP HEADED BY BETAS

Have Gained 242.5 Points For Past Two Quarters; Aycock Second With 211.0; D. K. E. Third With 190.0.

At the end of the second quarter, the Betas, due to their large lead during the fall quarter, held to first place in the standing of the all-year competition contest staged by the intramural department. However, their lead was cut considerably. Many changes are evident in the standings of the other teams, as shown in the standings below. Aycock, by winning the campus championship in basketball, was able to move from ninth to second place; the Dekes moved up to third place by their fine showing in the fraternity basketball league. New Dorms lost second place, but managed to stay up in the first five. The Zeta Psis also moved up a notch to take fifth place.

With the spring intramural program about to get under way, which will include boxing and wrestling tournaments, tennis, baseball and horseshoes, there is still time left for startling changes to take place in these standings. Teams that will place men in each of the above events will have an excellent chance of increasing their points and advancing in standing.

Fencing results were not included in this report, as a fencing tournament will be held among the teams now competing and the final standings published when this tournament is run off.

"Puny" Harper Overcame Lack Of Experience To Win Letters

(By Will Yarborough)

Entering the University in the fall of 1925 with no previous athletic experience, Lacy Harper, better known to the campus as "Puny," concluded his career in athletics here last quarter as the only University three-letter man. The story of his rise from just another student to captain of a major team doesn't read like Frank Merriwell's, for Merriwell was an athlete in the beginning while Puny became one only through hard and consistent work and patient coaching by Fetzer, Ashmore and Collins.

Before enrolling here Puny had never participated in athletics. No provisions were made for sports in his high school and although some effort was made his last year there to introduce basketball the lack of facilities prevented this. But the coaches here needed men of his size so he was recruited.

Coach Bob was the first to note the possibilities in the six and half feet of Harper. A long pair of arms indicated a potential discus heaver. Although he had never handled a discus before, Puny smashed the University record in the event his first year of competition and became southern champion in the meet the same year by winning first place. He smashed the state record and University record during his three years of competition here.

Needing a tall pivot man Coach Ashmore began tutoring Harper in basketball. Last year he profited, for Puny became a capable center. His height and reach made him valuable under the basket and enabled him to get the tip-off over many opponents. During the past season he again played the pivot position and at the conclusion of the season he was elected by the team as honorary captain of the 1930 team.

Football did not attract him until his senior year. Working at tackle he saw some service that year, but it was last fall that Harper earned his letter. Reserve work at tackle gave him opportunity to play in many games and at the annual banquet he gained his third monogram.

Under Southern Conference rules he concluded his career with the past basketball season. He leaves as a star in track, as a captain in basketball, and a monogram man in football. Not since Bill Dodderer ended his long and varied career here has Carolina boasted a three-letter man. They have become exceptionally scarce in recent years, and Harper's feat stands out all the more because of that.

by American scholars in recent years."

In a more informal manner another reviewer says, "Readers who relish biography will find this life of Miranda genuinely good stuff, refreshingly quiet in comparison with some of the literary firecrackers that we have had in the way of biographies during recent years."

A reviewer in the Boston Transcript is none the less enthusiastic in his opinion, but his statements are more conservative. To him the career of Miranda is apparently an interesting historical fact rather than a romantic adventure. However, he speaks of the author in terms equal in appreciation to those of more unreserved criticisms, "The task of writing this life was undertaken in his college days by Dr. Robertson and it is only through his growing interest and indefatigable research that its culmination in this final form is now made possible."

The Nashville Tennessean, the Hartford Courant and the New York Times Book Review are the other important publications carrying reviews of The Life of Miranda which have not been mentioned here. However, the review in the Times was condensed for local readers in a previous issue of this paper.

Officials Inspect Engineer Building

Stewart W. Anderson, head of the department of electrical engineering at V. M. I., and Colonel William Couper, business executive of the school, visited the University just before the spring holidays for the purpose of inspecting Phillips Hall, the home of the school of engineering, and other buildings on the campus to obtain ideas for the new engineering hall to be constructed at Lexington.

The new building will be six stories high and will cost about $180,000. The money to erect the building was appropriated by the last session of the Virginia legislature, and actual work is to be begun in the immediate future.

KENDALL SPEAKS ON CONDITION OF TEXTILE MILLS

Declares Here That Industry Asserting Constructive Leadership Within Own Ranks.

PRESIDENT KENDALL CO.

The American textile industry is beginning to assert the constructive leadership within its own ranks for the correction of the conditions which have provoked criticism, Henry P. Kendall, president of the Kendall Company, which has nine mills in six states, including five in the Carolinas, declared here last night in an address under the auspices of the school of commerce.

The address was one of a series that have been arranged by the school of commerce with the view to having all sides of the textile situation presented to the students.

Mr. Kendall pointed out that equilibrium between supply and demand must be reached. "It is shattered," he said, "by the chronic overproduction which has burdened the industry, but can be restored and maintained by planning and cooperation.

"The recent voluntary agreement of mills to limit hours of work to 55 weekly on the day shift and 50 on the night shift is a step in the right direction. Our problem of balancing production and consumption is simple compared with Great Britain's. British export comprises approximately 65 per cent of British production, while our export business is only around 7 per cent," Mr. Kendall said.

"Our recurring periods of overproduction causes unemployment, price demoralization and chaos, and benefits neither employer, employee, consumer, nor stockholder. There are encouraging signs that the industry is awakening to its economic and social responsibilities and that an enlightened leadership is beginning to take constructive steps toward lifting this great industry out of the long-hour low-wage class."

Mr. Kendall sketched the growth of the Kendall Company from a single mill in Massachusetts to the present organization comprising nine mills in six states, including five in the Carolinas, controlling its processes, distribution, as well as production, from raw material to finished product which is trademarked, packaged, merchandized and sold by the company, declaring that planning and better merchandising have proven essential factors in the company's growth.

The meeting last night was arranged by Professor G. T. Schwenning of the school of commerce. Members of the local branch of the Taylor Society, the international organization for the promotion of the science and art of management, of which Mr. Kendall is president, were special guests.

JONAS SAYS POST OFFICE LOBBY TO BE OPEN LONGER

Congressman Wires C. T. Woollen Assuring Longer Hours for Local Office.

ACTION EXPECTED SOON

According to a telegram received by Charles T. Woollen, business manager of the University, from Hon. Charles Jonas, U. S. Congressman, the local post office lobby will be authorized to remain open until eleven o'clock in the future. The telegram was in response to a letter written by Mr. Woollen requesting the North Carolina Congressman to seek such action.

The telegram received from Representative Jonas is as follows: "At the close of the personal interview I had today with Mr. Trotter, chief of the division of Post Office service, I was advised that the department would authorize post office lobby to remain open until 11 o'clock."

Agitation for having the local post office remain open later than the customary nine o'clock closing hour was begun some time ago by townspeople. The postmaster and several townspeople wrote the North Carolina senators requesting action thru the post office department.

Means To Interview Electrical Seniors

L. J. Means, factory representative of the General Electric Company, will be in Chapel Hill today to interview senior electrical engineering students regarding the training course offered by the company to graduates of technical schools. It was first announced that Mr. Means would be here Wednesday, which was an error.

Mr. Means is the last of a series of representatives who have made arrangements for interviews with the members of the senior class in electrical engineering. Several members have already accepted positions offered by the representatives who were here earlier in the year.

Shakespeare Players To Show Julius Caesar Here Saturday Under Auspices Of Playmakers

Performance Will Be Special Feature of Playmakers' Season Program.

The Shakespeare Players will present Julius Caesar in the Playmaker theatre here Saturday night at 8:30. The Shakespeare Players are under the direction of James Hendrickson and Claire Bruce. During the first two years the company was known as the Stratford Players. Julius Caesar and Macbeth have been the outstanding presentations of the company, which has appeared chiefly before school and college audiences.

The company is composed of seven experienced players, five men and two women. The services of fifteen other players, ten men and five women, to fill extra parts, will be required for the performance here Saturday night. Persons wishing to take part in the production should give their names to Hubert Heffner, assistant director of the Carolina Playmakers. Costumes will be provided by the company.

The regular admission price for the performance will be one dollar. School children and holders of season tickets to the Playmaker performances will be admitted for 50 cents. All seats must be reserved at the Student Supply Store.

Episcopal Students Asked To Contribute

Over 30,000 college students in the United States are members of the Episcopal church. This Lent, for the third time, they are raising a special student Lenten offering. Their objective is some much needed assistance for St. John's Medical School, Shanghai, and they hope to secure $5,000. Medical schools in China are now sending into the field only about a hundred doctors a year while literally thousands are needed. In eastern China, St. John's is now the only Christian school giving men medical training, and its teaching staff is inaedquate. If American Church students secure $2,000, it means a teacher in chemistry or anatomy; $4,000 means both; each added $300 means a scholarship to make possible another well trained doctor. Martin Firth, Hobart College, Geneva, New York, is chairman of the offering committee.

Episcopal students at Carolina are now being asked to contribute to this offering. The local treasurer is Peter Browne Ruffin, S. A. E. House.

Scout Notice

All students who are ex-scouts and are interested in forming a local chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, national collegiate scouting fraternity, are requested to meet on the second floor of the Y at 7 o'clock tonight. There will be no expense for the local, and very little for national membership. Any one who is unable to attend the meeting may obtain information from Charlie Powell, 209 F.

Chapel Hillians Entertain

Tuesday night at a meeting of the Durham music club in the home of Mrs. T. E. Atwood, three musicians of Chapel Hill were represented on the program.

Harold S. Dyer, head of the department of music here, spoke on the possible functions of a federated music club. T. Smith McCorkle also of the music faculty, gave two groups of violin numbers accompanied also by his wife, while Mrs. McCorkle gave in addition two piano groups.

State Student Federation Proposed For Carolinians

Farris, Lang, and Greene Fostering Movement to Bring Colleges Into Closer Relationship.

FIRST MEETING APRIL 28

Duke, State, and Carolina Will Be Joint Hosts Here to Other Institutions.

Under the particular guidance of a group of three prominent campus leaders, a movement is underway here for the organization of a North Carolina federation of college students at an early date, tentatively set for April 28. As yet no definite official action has been taken in this or any other institution of the state, but recent statements from the presidents of the student bodies of Duke University and State College indicate that these schools are willing to endorse and to inaugurate a federation, under the direction of President Ray Farris of the Carolina student body who has been the leader thus far.

This matter and its relative campus issues were carefully considered during an informal "bull session" Tuesday night in which President Farris, John A. Lang, one of the original instigators of the federation effort, and "Red" Greene, president of the senior class, participated.

President Farris, who has a sincere interest in the solution of numerous problems relating to student activities, is of the opinion that "the whole idea is a splendid one," since it will afford an opportunity to meet and discuss affairs which are common to all, and of which he believes there are an innumerable group. What is more, he is unusually concerned that the affects of the proposed organization shall be widespread enough to reach the average college student in every major school in the state. In this way it is hoped that much of the intercollegiate animosity, which is usually felt most among the masses of students, will be reduced to a minimum.

It was agreed, first of all, that letters be sent to all the college presidents in the state to determine their sentiments on the subject, and to come to an agreement upon the date for a conference here. As has been stated, President Savage of the Duke students announced his pledge of support at a meeting of Duke and Carolina students last quarter. While, President Choplin of Duke stated here Monday night before the Y. M. C. A. cabinets that he too was interested in a student federation. Both of these officials have agreed to the tentative date of April 28. So it remains only to secure the approval and support of the other schools in order to assure a successful convention.

Since President Farris is at present involved with a number of pressing issues of local importance, he has intrusted the issuance of invitations and the drawing up of preliminary plans to John Lang, as an unofficial but greatly interested representative of the student body, and to "Red" Greene, who is a former student council member. During his administration as president of the Phi society Lang was active in the organization of the federation movement.

Greene has said that he be-

P. G. Browning Speaks To Civil Engineers

P. Getty Browning, principal locating and claim engineer of the State Highway Commission, spoke before the senior class in civil engineering Monday afternoon on the problems encountered in highway location.

Mr. Browning, who is one of the foremost highway locating engineers in the country, has done much to advance the science of efficient highway locating.

In his talk Mr. Browning presented ten points of locating among which is usually found the controlling condition in route selection. He illustrated his talk with an imaginary location project, a hypothetical highway joining a coastal area with the mountains.

Mr. Browning is the second engineer from the State Highway Commission to speak before the senior engineers. Before the spring vacation, Wm. Hawkins, chief construction engineer of the commission addressed the group on construction methods employed by the commission and testing procedure used on the state highway work.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

There is too much "mule" in the majority of Americans to stand for Prohibition.—Col. E. H. R. Green.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

They used to keep cool with Coolidge, and now they are getting hot with Hoover.—Macon Telegraph.

If Cal had known what hard work it is to write for a living, he might have chosen to run in 1928.—Arizona Producer.

The Literary Digest prints a long article explaining how a gas-meter works, but it fails to disclose how it can run up a bill of $18.75 when the gas is turned off.—Southern Lumberman.

Tar Heel Topics

Have learned from the S. L. D. C. that "Committee Appointed to Find New President Busy." Figure it out for yourself.

Another evidence that spring is in our midst is that the baseball season officially opens today—but evidently the weather man hasn't been notified yet.

Cotton is the best cash crop in the world, according to John M. Jackson, prominent Southern banker. Like to see Mr. Jackson essay the job of convincing the cotton farmers to that effect.

High Point is sorta het up over the exploits of a negro bandit named Jesse James, but Chapel Hill is still more het up over the exploitings of certain bandits of another color who should have been named Jesse James.

Our N. C. C. W. correspondent (we mean the Tar Heel's) informs us that the gal politicians did their stuff in unprecedented fashion in the student body elections Tuesday. Always did think that the wimmin are better equipped, linguistically and otherwise, for politics than the trousered sex.

The Textbook Problem

One of the most expensive items in the college student's budget is that of textbooks. Most of the courses in the curriculum, especially the more advanced ones, require several costly books, usually of a technical nature. Purchase of these books places a decided financial burden upon the students, who is, on most cases, already in impecunious circumstances. Hence it is not strange that the practice of re-selling these books as soon as the courses are completed has developed extensively among undergraduates.

One of the most valuable possessions which any man may have is a personal library. This is especially true in the case of the college graduate. His text books form an excellent nucleus for a personal library, since their value for reference is further increased by the fact that they represent the most tangible associational objects which he retains from his undergraduate days. The notes and names jotted on the margins and covers of the books are a graphic commentary upon the entire college life of their owner. Very few posesssions will be more treasured in after years than the books which represent many profitable hours of work in college. They have been granted an intimacy of thought greater than that accorded any other material things, and they have contributed far more to the intellectual development of their owner than all of his other possessions combined.

If the undergraduate has the least semblance of serious purpose in attending college, he will wish to retain his textbooks after he has completed the courses for which they are required. But in all probability he has financial limitations within which he must confine his expenditures. The cost of the books must be at a minimum. And this means that he must be able to obtain them direct from the publishers or through an intermediate agency which does not make a profit from their sale.

A book agency plan is in operation at McGill University which enables every student there to purchase his books at the lowest possible price. This agency is conducted by the administration, and issues coupons with each purchase. If there are any profits at the end of the year's operation, they are returned to the holders of these coupons on a pro-rata basis.

This plan could be installed here with great benefit to the students. It would assist materially in solving the vexing textbook problem.

By Their Paths Ye Shall Know Them

The student-cut path from New Dorms diagonally across to Old East was long a thorn in the flesh of the Campus Beautiful. Lazy feet on their tardy way to class made the path an unsightly streak across the main part of the campus, and an eyesore to the observer. After several months of faculty and student agitation, the customary trespassers were reduced in number and the path was regrassed. Now the old streak is almost entirely hidden beneath a mat of grass. But even now there is always some part of the campus which is being shorn of its grass by student trespassers.

All over the campus are "Please Keep Off the Grass" signs, which mutely plead to each potential path-maker that he give the grass a chance. Dr. Coker and his ground hands always do their share, but we must admit that they could be favored by a bit more student cooperation. Unsightly streaks here and there on the campus grass-lots attest the prevalence of student carelessness.

The plea that just one person's walking on the grass does not make a path is sound in theory, but no good in practice because we all use the same short-cuts. The cumulative walking of such theorists is the thing which ultimately makes the marring path.

Of course, this is a free campus. Each student can walk where he pleases without being ostracized in any particular. But let a man be judged by the path he treads! Let the man who has an interest in preserving the beauty of the University's grounds use the regular gravel walks—of which there is an abundant supply. And let him who insists that he must assert his individuality stick to the illegitimate walks, whereon he feels at home.—J. C. W.

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

General Theme: "Coming to Terms With Life"

Thursday, March 27.—Topic of the day: "Charity for others' weaknesses." (Read Galatians 6:1-10.) Key verse: "Guard thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

Meditation: "Self-knowledge should give one charity. With all one's good resolutions one blunders and fails and thrusts his fingers oftimes into the heart strings of a friend. But no man wishes to be judged by chance mis-plays. He wants to be interpreted in the light of his best. We all crave the magnanimous judgments of others. Portia speaks for us all:

'We do pray for mercy,
And this same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy.'

Men, frail and faulty, may by the Grace of God become wise and gentle. In the closing sentence of a book of stories of abnormal men and women the author, a detective, says: 'As in a dream I hear a soft, far-away murmur—Let him that is without sin among you cast the first stone.' "

Prayer: "O Thou, to whom we look for mercy in the hour of our short-comings, teach us to show the mercy that we seek, and to practice the gentle judgments that we crave. Out of our need for charity, we would bring the mind of charity to our fellow men. Amen."

Daily Prayer

Grant, O God, that we may recall that our Lord Jesus Christ was a non-conformist, that he healed on the Sabbath and that he was a friend to the publicans and sinners. Grant that we may realize that conformity is cowardice and that all concessions are made to the devil. Grant that we may prefer to die in isolation, knowing that we have been true to ourselves than to rot away inch by inch in the dull alleys of the commonplace. Grant that we may consider it better to go our way among men defiant of our scorn than to go men's ways and scorn ourselves. Furthur grant, O God, that we may be ourselves and think for ourselves; and that we may realize that while our conclusions may not be infallible, they will be nearer right than the conclusions forced upon us by those who have a personal interest in keeping us in ignorance and grant that we may realize that we only grow throughout the exercise of our faculties, and that if we don't reason now we never will advance. Finally grant, O God, that realizing that we are all thy sons we may claim our heritage.

This we beg in Christ Jesus' name. Amen.

SONGS OLD AND NEW IN "NO, NO, NANETTE"

The screen production of "No, No, Nanette," showing at the Carolina theatre tomorrow, will contain song hits from the original stage show as well as many new numbers which have already attained great popularity since the recent release of this colorful First National picture.

"Tea for Two" and "I Want to Be Happy" from the footlight production will be heard in the Vitaphone edition, sung by a chorus of 150 and the two featured leads, Bernice Claire and Alexander Gray. These two songs were among the country's best sellers when "No, No, Nanette" was having its sensational success on Broadway.

The big number of the picture, however, is "King of the Air," by Eddie Ward and Al Bryan, one of Hollywood's most harmonious song-writing teams. Three other numbers based on lavish scenes in the film are "Dancing on Mars" by Michael H. Cleary, Ned Washington and Herb Magidson; "The Japanese Ballet," by M. Jerome and Herman Ruby; and "The Dance of the Wooden Shoes," by Cleary, Washington and Magidson.

And also there are "Pretending," by Ruby and Jerome and "As Long As I'm With You," by Harry K. Akst and Grant Clarke.

"No, No, Nanette" is one of the most lavish pictures ever produced at the First National Studios. Four of the big sequences—the Holland, Japan, New York and Mars episodes—each cost more than the entire original stage production.

The cast of noted players includes Lucien Littlefield, Louise Fazenda, Lilyan Tashman, Bert Roach, Zasu Pitts, Mildred Harris, Henry Stockbridge and Jocelyn Lee.

"Meinholtz, the Times Wants You---"

FRED E. MEINHOLTZ of the New York Times sat in his home on Long Island, listening-in on a radio press dispatch from the Byrd expedition. Someone on the Times staff wanted to reach Meinholtz on his home phone. And quickly! But the receiver there happened to be off the hook.

Radio science was equal to the occasion. The Times radio operator sent a request to the fur-clad operator at the other end of the world. And Meinholtz was quickly made aware of the situation by a radio message from Antarctica saying: "Meinholtz, the Times wants you to hang up your receiver so that they can call you on the telephone."

Baseball Season Opens Today With Tar Heels Facing Springfield Men

Carolina Will Send Six Veterans Against Massachusetts Y. M. C. A. College.

GAME ON EMERSON FIELD

Captain Maus, Lufty, Whitehead, Rand, Sher Will Be In Old Positions; Wright or Fleming Likely to Start on Mound.

Springfield College will open Carolina's 1930 baseball season this afternoon at 4 o'clock on Emerson Field. Springfield has been playing North Carolina teams recently with Elon and Lenoir Rhyne already played.

Following the contest with the Tar Heels the Massachusetts nine will meet Wake Forest and Duke Friday and Saturday, respectively.

This will be the opening game for the Tar Heels. Coach Ashmore's strength is unknown other than that veterans will fill six of the positions. First base, left and right fields will be filled by newcomers. However, with the tremendous hitters from last year's team back in togs and with two veteran hurlers working the Tar Heels are rated well.

Captain Jim Maus will likely start as catcher, although Coach Ashmore may send him to first base in the event either Jackson or Brown fail to deliver. The veterans Rand, Whitehead and Lufty will complete the infield. Rand played second until injured last season and proved a smooth working companion for the speedy Whitehead around the keystone sack. Former captain Lufty has returned to third after a year at first. Nap completes a hard hitting infield.

Phil Sher is the only veteran ready for duty in the outfield. However, there are numerous hard hitters ready to fill the right and left field positions. Either Paxton or Davis will fill the left field; while McKinney, long hitting freshman star two years ago, has the edge for right garden. Wright, Fleming or Longest will compose the squad of pitchers from which Coach Ashmore will make his selection.

The Springfield line-up is likely to show all veterans. Donofire, c; Woods or Funn, 1b; Becker, 2b; Miller, ss; Captain Bigsbee, 3b; Davidson, lf; Graham cf; Blesh, rf; and either Lipp, Johnson or Thompson, pitcher.

Branch Shifted To Outfield Position

Johnny Branch moved from infield to outfield yesterday as the second major shift in Tar Heel baseball plans prior to North Carolina's opening game with Springfield here today.

Branch, of broken-field fame, looks as great in the gardens, is clever on the sacks, and a better than average hitter and should stick. His addition to the corps of outfielders gives the Tar Heels four right-hand batters and three left-handers for garden posts, and probably means Coach Ashmore is intending to juggle his outfielders to meet different pitching.

Otherwise a first baseman will probably be taken from the pair of Brown and Jackson. Brown is a senior but a new man, who is not so fast but a good fielder, improving steadily, and a fair hitter. Jackson, a veteran and converted second baseman, is a better fielder perhaps, but hasn't been hitting up to par.

Among other persons who ignored the injunction "Do Not Open Until Christmas" was Old Man Winter.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Jimmie Maus

Jimmie Maus, varsity catcher, leads the Carolina varsity baseball team against Springfield College this afternoon in the first of 28 games the Tar Heels will play this season.

Tech Leads With 4 Southern Records

The fifteen Southern Conference track and field records are scattered among eleven schools. Georgia, due to the labors of Ed Hamm, holds three of them and leads the field. In 1928 Hamm tied the record for the 100 yard dash and broke the records for the 220 and the broad jump. He is the only holder of more than one record. North Carolina, Clemson, and Auburn with two records each are the only other schools holding more than one record.

Ten of the records were established in 1928, four in 1926, and one each in 1925 and 1929.

The twelve indoor records were all established at the recent indoor meet held here. Four of them went to Washington and Lee. Carolina followed with two and Maryland with two. Georgia, Tulane, and Georgia Tech each have claims on one each and South Carolina shares high jump honors with North Carolina.

The official records follow:

OUTDOOR

100-yard dash, 9.8 seconds, made by Foster, V. M. I., in 1925, and Hamm, Georgia Tech, in 1928; 220-yard dash, 21.2 seconds, Hamm, Georgia Tech, 1928; 440-yard dash, 49.2 seconds, Roy, Clemson, 1926; 880-yard run, 1:55.8, Gess, Kentucky, 1928; one mile run, 4:21.2, Elliott, N. C., 1926; two-mile run, 9:47, Pritchett, N. Tennis Notice

Entries in the tennis tournament opening today for freshmen and upperclassmen will not be closed until 3 o'clock, states J. F. Kenfield, coach of tennis. All entries who have not reported by 3 o'clock today will be forfeited. Reports should be made to the tennis courts.

LAST CALL FOR FROSH BASEBALL CANDIDATES

Coach Cerney requests that all candidates for freshman baseball report to Emerson field not later than 3:30 o'clock this afternoon. Equipment will be issued and practice will start at 4:00. All who expect to go out for the team are urged to be present on time.

A Correction

Through a mistake, it was stated that the girl's basketball team of Chapel Hill high school had won 17 games and lost 4. In checking the scores it is found that the local lassies got off to a rather slow start this year and won 10 of their games and lost 10. They also played one team to a deadlock.

The girls finished their season by defeating the fast Durham Blue Streaks, an independent team, Tuesday evening by a score of 17-16.

Trackmen Open Tomorrow On Home Track Against N. C. State

Captain Nims Will Lead Team Of Veterans Against Wolfpack Cindermen Friday.

STAFFORD, PHOENIX BACK

Veteran Outfit Will Be Pushed Hard By Youngsters on Tar Heel Track Team for Honors; Farmer, Arnold and Brown Add Strength.

Carolina, eight times state champions in track, will begin another campaign tomorrow afternoon with the opening meet here against State College at 4 o'clock.

The meet will find Carolina represented by 12 lettermen and several stars from the freshman team. Almost every event will have a veteran entered, the javelin being the only one without a letterman. However, the performances of several of the men not yet wearing monograms will likely overshadow the work of the veterans. Charlie Farmer, sprinter extraordinary, Theron Brown, star weight man, and Brodie Arnold, southern indoor pole vault champion are the new men likely to star.

State will show its greatest strength in the distance runs. Ottinger and Floyd beat the Tar Heels in the indoor quarter mile while McGinn and Ricks are stars in their events. McGinn won the half in the State meet last spring.

The return of Stafford and Phoenix, varsity and freshman stars of last year, will strengthen the Tar Heels considerably. Stafford will pair with Perry in the hurdle events to present the same line-up as last year. However, the sprints show Carolina its greatest strength with Charlie Farmer performing. Ken Gay, veteran sprinter, will add to the Tar Heel stock here. Captain David Nims, Hamer and Garrett will handle the quarter mile run. Nims and Garrett are veterans.

Minor Barkley, Baucom, Lowry, Wrenn, and Phoenix will constitute the distance men to represent the Tar Heels.

Bagby, Shulenberger and Owens will handle the high jump, while Arnold, Neiman, Dry, Ruble and Smith give Carolina an edge in the pole vault. Theron Brown who won third in the indoor meet, Neiman, Bullard, and Arnold will perform in the broad jump.

Only two veterans remain in the field events, Adkins and Dameron. Adkins supplemented by Brown will hold the shot put hopes of the Tar Heels. Dameron, Brown, and Thompson are working with the discus. In the javelin the Tar Heels will show a lack of veterants. Brown, Cleland, Dry, and Ruble will represent Carolina in this event.

Track Notice

On account of the baseball game at 4:00 o'clock this afternoon all freshman and varsity track candidates are asked to work out as near to 3:00 o'clock as possible. There will be a meeting of the entire squad in Emerson stadium at 5:30 p. m.

Basketball Notice

All men interested in spring basketball practice are asked to meet with Captain Artie Marpet in Gerrard hall this afternoon at 3:30. Plans will be talked over for conducting this practice. The meeting will be over in plenty of time for the baseball game.

Intramural Notice

Entries for the two intramural baseball leagues have been coming in steadily. However, quite a few dormitories and fraternities have not as yet been heard from. As schedules for these two leagues will be made over the week-end, it is necessary for all entries to be in by Saturday morning. Actual play will begin the first part of the coming week.

Electrical Engineers To Attend Meeting In Raleigh Wednesday

This afternoon and evening, the members of the senior class in electrical engineering will attend the regular spring meeting of the North Carolina section of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers in Raleigh. This is the second meeting of the North Carolina section that the class has attended, as they attended the regular fall meeting of the group in Charlotte last October.

The program of the spring meeting will consist of three parts of which the class will attend two. Wednesday afternoon they will attend the meeting at which the speakers will be Dr. J. Slepian, of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, J. B. MacNeill, also connected with the Westinghouse Company; and Professor Harold B. Smith, president of the A.I.E.E.

The evening meeting, which will be held as a banquet meeting, will be addressed by Professor Smith, president of the national organization of electrical engineers, who will give an illustrated talk on his 35 years' work with high voltage electric currents.

The local engineering students will not take part in the third part of the meeting which will consist of an inspection trip to the new campus of Duke University Thursday morning.

When the University engineers went to the fall meeting at Charlotte, they made an inspection of several hydro-electric plants and also the new Riverbend steam plant of the Duke Power Company, near Charlotte.

At the Carolina

The announcement of pictures to be shown next week at the Carolina Theatre has just been released by Manager E. Carrington Smith. An unusually fine run of pictures is on the program.

Pictures which will be shown in Chapel Hill soon include among others "Only the Brave" with Gary Cooper; Douglas Fairbanks in "Party Girl"; William Haines, the boy who doesn't care, in "The Girl Said No"; Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell, the popular team in "High Society," a repetition of the success of "Sunny Side Up"; William Powell as Philo Vance in "The Benson Murder Case"; John Boles in "Song of the West;" Lupe Velez, in "Hell Harbour"; Winnie Lightner in "Hold Everything"; Al Jolson returning to the screen in "Mammy"; Lawrence Tibbett in one of the finest pictures of the year, "The Rogue Song"; Maurice Chevalier in "The Big Pond"; Helen McKane in "Dangerous Nan McGrue"; Dennis King in "The Vagabond King" and Sue Carol in "The Golden Calf."

University Prof To Make Motion Study

G. T. Schwenning, associate professor of business administration, will spend the coming summer doing time study and piece rate setting with Western Electric Company at its Kearny, N. J., plant.

Mr. Schwenning, who has previously done work in time and motion study, is being released from teaching in the University summer school to work in the Western Electric Company's plant so that he may become acquainted with the most modern methods of doing this work. He will instruct a class in time and motion study during the fall quarter of the next school year.

Student Federation Proposed For State

lieves that "state students will jump at the opportunity to meet and discuss their common problems," and because of his belief in the value and possibilities of the "future" federation he intends to give it his present support as president of the senior class.

Although there have been no definite arrangements made for the meeting, Farris and his assistants intend to have the convention take the form of an institute on state student problems. In order that the accomplishments of the delegates might reach every member of every student body concerned, it is intended that visiting delegations shall include not only prominent campus leaders, but also a large group of students-at-large.

It is thought by Farris that at least two days, including speechmaking and entertainment for the visitors, would be necessary to dispose of the business of the convention. Some sessions of the meeting will, of course, be devoted to the permanent organization of the federation. It had been suggested that some out-of-state federation officials be called in to supervise this phase of the meeting, but local leaders are of the opinion that this would be unnecessary, since the state institutions are so intimately concerned with each other, and are thus in a position to perfect their own organization.

However, a suggestion made by Lang will be doubtless adopted in regards to the matter of creating an organization for the federation. That is, that a constitutional committee be appointed to draw up a document to be presented to the convention in its final sessions.

Realizing that they will be unable to finish this work, Farris and the student council will recommend the continuance of the move to the incoming administration, following spring elections.

SOCIAL SERVICE CONFERENCE FOR N. C. APRIL 13-15

Annual Meeting of Organization Scheduled for Charlotte; Local Men on Program.

The annual meeting of the North Carolina Conference for Social Service will be held in Charlotte on April 13, 14, and 15. At this meeting a student section of the conference is to be organized for the first time.

The conference was started some 18 years ago by a small group of prominent men on the state for the purpose of studying some of the human problems of the commonwealth and to do all possible to remedy them. Many remedies have been brought about by these men. Some of the things that this group has done is to help child life, create the State Board of Charities and Public Welfare, establish the juvenile courts in North Carolina, abolish flogging in the state prison, establish tubercular prison camps, and do numerous other such things that have been beneficial to the general public. At present this small group of men is a large, thriving organization composed of committees, on which are men well-suited for the type of work that has been assigned to them.

On Sunday, April 13, the annual meeting of the conference opens with a session at 8:00 p. m. in the Baptist church, at which time Dr. W. L. Poteat will be the speaker. Monday morning at 10:00 a business meeting and a discussion will be led by Frank Graham and H. F. Comer. Other meetings will be held throughout the day with such speakers as Dr. Elbert Russell, of Duke University, and Prof. Wiley Sanders of the University. At 8:30 that night the annual address of the president of the conference will be delivered by President Frank Graham.

Tuesday morning at 9:45 a forum will be conducted by Dr. C. C. Taylor of State College; a business meeting will be held at 11:30, and a luncheon meeting will be given at 1:00, at which time Kemp Battle of Rocky Mount will speak. That afternoon at 2:30, Clarence Poe will make an address on the subject of "Live at Home." A final mass meeting at 8:30 p.m. will conclude the program. Governor O. Max Gardner and Mr. David Coker of South Carolina will be the speakers at this occasion.

Royall States Chain Stores Menace To Country Lawyers

President North Carolina Bar Association Addresses University Law School.

INDIVIDUALITY HAMPERED

Routine Tasks Develop and Take Away Independence of Country Lawyer.

"The chief danger to the country lawyer is the influence of the chain system," Kenneth C. Royall, president of the North Carolina Bar Association, said here yesterday in an address before the law school of the University.

"The earnings of the country lawyer are not made by clerical work," he said, "for what pays in law and business is judgment, intelligence, and the use of the brain. As routine tasks develop, independence is threatened. This is the problem of the country and small town lawyer."

The rise of the chain stores, groceries, banks, service stations, and now even chain barbers, was pointed out. The coming of the chain barber shop, Mr. Royall declared, tends to destroy one of the fundamental institutions of the country, curbing as it does the free and time-honored expressions of opinion of the barber.

Public meetings protesting against the chain store will get nowhere, for they are merely gestures. The only solution is to develop a better economic means. As a result of the influence of the chains, Mr. Royall pointed out, lawyer's clients are becoming more and more non-residents of the state. The work is becoming routine. Corporations and big businesses tell the lawyer how and where to gather evidence, what points to investigate, and even supply blanks in title-searching, so that the country lawyer need merely fill it in and do no original work of his own.

In stating the advantages of the country lawyer as against those of the city lawyer, Mr. Royall said that the city lawyer had more chances of obtaining large fees, and a better chance of obtaining prominence, in addition to the advantages of city life.

On the other hand, the country lawyer is able to start practising immediately, without a period of clerkship, he is in a position of independence, has a far more diversified law practice, and may easily become a man of prominence and position in his home town.

The country lawyer, Mr. Royall stated further, gets a general training. A man who specializes so that he knows only one side of the law, is not a good lawyer, he said. Through the variety and volume of his business, the country lawyer obtains a good knowledge of human nature, and acquires a readiness, ability and wit to meet unexpected situations. Because of his more general experience, a trial lawyer of North Carolina, according to the speaker, will be a star in New York or any other part of the country.

"The North Carolina lawyer relies on his wits too much," Mr. Royall said. "He must be better prepared, and he must have an organized bar association to back him up. Such an association can fix a minimum schedule of fees, prevent lay practice of law by corporations and big

Dr. Baity Withdraws Name for Presidency

Dr. Herman G. Baity, head of the department of civil engineering, who has been prominently mentioned as a possible successor to President Harry W. Chase yesterday issued a statement declaring that he is not a candidate "either active or receptive" for the University presidency.

Dr. Baity's statement in full follows:

"I find upon my return to the state, after an absence of two weeks, that some of my friends have been actively interesting themselves in my behalf for the presidency of the University of North Carolina.

"I need not state that I shall be forever grateful for this manifestation of confidence and esteem. The presidency of the University of North Carolina offers such unique and appealing avenues of service to the state that no right-spirited citizen could be indifferent to its great opportunities.

"I am not, however, a candidate, either active or receptive, for the place and under these circumstances I feel that, in fairness to my friends who have so generously interested themselves in my behalf, this public declaration should be made now."

RECORDER'S COURT HAS BUSY SESSION

Henry "Step-on-it" Brown, local negro, made an unusual request of Judge C. P. Hinshaw in the regular session of recorder's court held Monday morning. When sentenced to one month on the roads for being drunk and disorderly, he asked to be permitted to make an appeal to the audience. The judge assented, whereupon Brown proceeded to ask if there wasn't some good fraternity brother in the crowd to help him out. When his appeal met with silence he shouted, "You all sounds like a bunch of tombstones."

Besides Brown's case, there were six others tried at the session, five decisions being rendered and one case being nol prossed. The cases tried were as follows:

James Shelby and Joe Brown, local negro youths, were found guilty of trespass and affray. They were fined one-half the costs.

R. H. Long, white, was bound over to superior court charged with passing a worthless check.

George Hargraves, local negro, was tried on three charges, possessing intoxicating liquor for sale, aiding and abetting in the manufacture of intoxicating liquor, and having in his possession material and equipment for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor. He was found guilty on all charges and was sentenced to eight months on the roads.

The case against E. P. Cates and W. L. Tankersley, charged with maintaining a fire hazard, was nol prossed.

Albert Saylor, negro youth, charged and found guilty of stealing 50 pounds of hog meat, was ordered by the court to pay $15 damages.

A meeting of the army troop school was held in Davie hall last night.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Every idea changes in accordance with geography.—Andre Maurois.

An Optimistic Textile Manufacturer

During the past several months a number of speakers, representing every viewpoint upon the textile industry situation, have made addresses at the University under the auspices of the school of commerce. President William Green of the American Federation of Labor presented the viewpoint of organized labor, while members of the University faculty and other expert economists outlined the established economic principles which they believe should be applied to improve the situation, and several of the South's leading textile manufacturers have stated the attitude of the mill owners. Altogether, the series of addresses constitutes an important contribution to the cause of assisting the industry in the crisis which it is facing.

Henry P. Kendall, president of the Kendall Company, expressed the most optimistic and encouraging views that have yet been presented here, in his address Wednesday night. His company owns nine mills in six states, including five in the Carolinas, and his statements are of especial significance.

Mr. Kendall pointed out that "there are encouraging signs that the industry is awakening to its economic and social responsibilities and that an enlightened leadership is beginning to take constructive steps toward lifting this great industry out of the long-hour low-wage class. He cited the recent voluntary agreement of mills to limit hours of work to 55 weekly on the day shift and 50 on the night shift as a step in the right direction.

The attitude of Mr. Kendall is in decided contrast to that of another mill owner who stated in an address here recently that "the thing (overproduction, with its attendant evils) will have to work itself out like an epidemic of influenza or the aftermath of a stock market debacle or a tidal wave." But it is highly encouraging that Mr. Kendall, and other far-sighted manufacturers of his type, have gone beyond the narrow attitude of this man and have recognized the need of immediate and concerted efforts to remedy the situation.

It is a frequently demonstrated principle that if an industry cannot manage itself to the well-being of itself and society, steps must be taken to remedy the situation; for in the social field the way such things "work themselves out" is through revolution, if not previously cured.

Mr. Kendall stressed the necessity of reaching an equilibrium between supply and demand. "It is shattered," he declared, "by the chronic over-production which has burdened the industry, but it can be restored and maintained by planning and cooperation." And he and his fellow-manufacturers, with the assistance and advice of experts on management and labor problems, should carefully inquire into the causes of overproduction and build their remedies on the more basic causes—the speculative character of the textile business due to the rapid changes in styles and prices (of raw cotton as well as the finished product), marketing wastes and inefficient management.

For it is inevitable that other forces — governmental interference and social legislation, or the strength of a large group of workers who are even now organizing to safeguard interests which have not been given consideration—will be applied to bring about the needed remedies unless the manufacturers themselves are willing to cooperate in formulating and utilizing them. And it will be far more pleasant for everyone concerned — the manufacturers most of all—if these necessary reforms are brought about through the voluntary cooperation and initiative of the mill owners.

A Leer, A Jeer, And A Jug of Rum

The only gospel of the younger generation of today, according to a Philadelphia rector, is "a leer, a jeer, and a jug of rum." In elaborating on the subject the rector says that atheism is becoming the fashion among our young intellectuals, that our books and magazines are encouraging it, and that young people everywhere are affecting a flippant atheism. Then he closes with the statement that the creed of the younger generation is a leer, a jeer, and a jug of rum.

All of which is rather caustic. And it would make us feel pretty discouraged if we didn't suspect that the reverend gentleman is talking through his hat. He probably doesn't know a great deal about his subject, for it is certain that young people aren't going to throng the church of a man who talks like that.

But it is foolish to dismiss the rector merely as a man with a grouch. For some time we have been hearing these voices raised against the youngsters. Perhaps it would be well to pause and consider them.

It is obvious that the younger generation is what the older generation has made it. These youngsters coming up out of their teens into their early twenties are not so dumb as some might suppose them to be. They have been scrutinizing the ways and conduct of their elders with young, shrewd eyes that are quick to perceive falsities and affectation, and they have not hesitated to begin new modes of thought and conduct to replace old ones that appear to be past their days of usefulness.

The world of thought and affairs these young people find themselves coming into isn't such a perfect one after all. Hardly more than a decade ago we were in the midst of a cataclasmic and idiotic world war, and there is no apparent reason why we shan't some day be in another. And when it comes these irreverent youngsters will, at the bidding of their elders, go out and get themselves killed, just as did the flippant youths of 1917. And the youngsters know it.

It is poor business for the older generation to criticize the younger, for in so doing they are criticizing themselves.—J. J.

The Chain Store Controversy

At present prohibition and the chain store system seem to be occupying the limelight of public criticism. The prohibition issue, though receiving nation-wide comment, is being attacked for the most part in large cities and governmental centers. The chain store agitation, however, is about as hot in one place as another. Right here in Chapel Hill the system is being vigorously attacked by local merchants and their supporters among the townspeople.

In recognition of the pertinence of the chain store issue, numerous colleges and universities throughout the nation have scheduled intercollegiate debates on "Resolved, that the principle of the chain store is detrimental to the best interests of the American public." The Carolina-Northwestern debate here April 15 on this question should be of great interest to the student body, the faculty, and the townspeople. Gerrard hall will be the scene of the encounter—the debate lasting for about an hour and a half. Both teams will attempt to lay bare the whole chain store system in an effort to determine its merits as an institution of public service.

The fact that numerous radio programs of late have contained discussions of the chain store institution attests the firm grip which it has on the thoughts of the American people at present. We feel that the debate between Carolina and Northwestern in Gerrard hall on the night of April 15 will be highly reflective of the general concensus of opinion about the issue, and that as such it deserves a large attendance.—J. C. W.

Daily Prayer

Grant, O God, that we may keep our words, that we may be true to every trust, that if we firm that employs us, that if we are in college, we may be loyal to those who are maintaining us there, by studying hard. Grant that we may not imagine that we are being wronged, that someone has it in for us, and that the whole world is down on us. Grant that we may not listen for insults nor look for slights, that we may not cry for the moon nor over spilt milk. And furthur grant, O God, that we may carry civil tongues in our heads, be polite to strangers without being fresh, be considerate towards servants, modcrate in eating and drinking, willing to learn, cautious and yet courageous. And finally grant, O God, that we may realize that in the judgment we will not be looked over for medals or diplomas but for scars. Grant this, O God, for the honor of our advocate and mediator Jesus Christ. Amen.

The more widely read public may have noticed that the American Tobacco Company's cigar, Cremo, has been the subject of a nation-wide advertising campaign which features the phrase "Spit—it's an ugly word," etc. The point that is made is that Cremo cigars are manufactured scientifically and with proper regard for sanitation. However, one bright-eyed contributor told us he noticed that the Cremo salesman, while entering the sales-car with Cremo signs painted on all sides of it, took a careful bite of a fat stick of chewing tobacco and after a few moments gracefully expectorated a largish wad, narrowly missing the running-board of the Cremo "Spit—it's an ugly word—" car.

As March draws to its close, it will prove interesting to notice that the month has seen the publication of (1) D. H. Lawrence's essay on obscenity and pornography and its rapid and wide sale and (2) the report of the House of Delegates at Richmond which completely defeated the attempts at making the University of Virginia at Charlottesville a coeducational institution and which established a college for women "not less than thirty miles from Charlottesville." We dread to think so but it is too true that the dear statesmen of the Old Dominion are guilty of that very "mental itch" against which the late anti-vice in its most insidious form, crusader fought. Had the honorable gentlemen merely looked a bit to the southward, they would have seen that the name of fair womanhood retains its unsullied purity, in spite of coeducation, at the University of North Carolina.

There has been quite a bit of speculation recently as to the Tar Heel's stand in the nation-wide straw vote that is being conducted by the Literary Digest for a repeal of the 18th amendment. On all probability, if this paper falls in line with the Digest and such college newspapers as the Yale Daily News, the results would show that a majority of the voting and interested undergraduates would like to see the Prohibition amendment repealed, or at least modified. But it would, indeed, go badly with many of those mothers and fathers of this state who still feel that by sending their sons to a university which teaches the young to feel that there might be quite a bit of truth in evolution and schemes for social improvement, they are almost overstepping the bounds of good sense and decency, not to mention faith and piety.

Will some erudite and kind gentleman (or lady) please decide for an agitated group whether or not the iced drink, a result of the juice of two oranges and one lemon with an equal measure of gin, some soda water an dice, is called John Collins or Tom Collins? THE GAS FILLED INCANDESCENT LAMP

A PRODUCT OF CONTINUED SEARCH FOR HIGHER EFFICIENCY

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is one of a series of popular Research Narratives, which includes tales of discovery, invention and research. They are published in the Daily Tar Heel through the courtesy of the Engineering Foundation and the Williams and Wilkins Company.

Since 1879, when Edison gave the world the incandescent lamp, men have been working to improve this carbon filament vacuum light. A better filament was desired. Research produced tungsten filaments, and the name of a metal so rare as to be almost a curiosity became a household word.

The use of tungsten as a filament did not solve all the lamp manufacturers' problems, although some electrical men held that with the development of wrought tungsten by Dr. W. D. Coolidge, of the General Electric Company, lamp development had gone its limit. However, the lamp was far from perfect. A further reduction in the consumption of current was still desired and bulb blaskening, which began as soon as the current was turned on, impaired the lamp's lighting power. All sorts of remedies were tried with little success.

Scientists in the research laboratory at Schenectady undertook a number of fundamental investigations and it was not until three-fourths of the preliminary work had been done on a purely scientific basis that the real commercial usefulness of the results became apparent.

Brittleness of the filament having been overcome by the development of wrought tungsten, the necessity for preventing bulb blackening still remained.

Investigations along the lines of better vacua in lamps showed it was impracticable to determine whether variations in method or amount of exhaustion caused improvement. So studies were made along two lines: 1. The sources of gas within a lamp; 2. The effects produced in lamps by various gases.

Research showed that the small amounts of water vapor present in the bulb greatly hastened blackening. The vapor oxidized the tungsten, freeing hydrogen in the atomic state. The oxide went to the bulb and was there reduced to metallic tungsten by the active hydrogen to form water. Thus the vicious cycle recurred until the lamp's life was ended.

Early experimenters, Edison among them, had made numerous trials of a gas-filled bulb but in every case the experimental gas-filled lamp was decidedly inferior to the vacuum carbon lamp then in use. However, experiments showed that if a tungsten filament were heated close to its melting point in a gas-filled bulb entirely freed from water vapor, the filament lasted much longer than when heated in a vacuum, and the heavier the gas used, the more the evaporation of the metal was retarded. But the addition of the gas to increase the life of the filament meant an additional heat loss.

It was found, however, that the presence of a dense gas, such as nitrogen or the hitherto unused argon, in the bulb, reduced the rate of filament evaporation to about one per cent of what it was in vacuum at the same temperature. The convection currents in the gas carried the deposit of tungsten nitride to the top of the lamp, where it interfered little with the lamp's lighting powers.

By use of a large filament, or a coil of small filament, the heat loss was overcome by the higher temperature, and better, whiter light was produced.

Thus, through careful and exhaustive research we have today a lamp whose gleam far outshines the rather feeble glow of the early incandescent light, and the old lamp is a thing of the past.

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

General Theme: "Coming to Terms With Life"

Friday, March 28.—Topic: "Assuming Responsibility for Peace." (Read Romans 12:9-21.) Key verse: "If it be possible, as much as in you lieth, be at peace with all men."

Meditation: "Living with others is the finest of arts. To get along with our fellow men we must assume the responsibility for good relations. Paul does not lay the entire responsibility on the individual, but leaves no loophole for the escape of the individual—". . . as much as in you lieth . . ." Peaceable people are not colorless people. They may have very profound ideas and principles. It is not ideas that cause trouble, but attitudes. A common mistake is to seek peace by reforming others. The only promising way to bring about readjustment is to begin by readjusting our own attitudes. It is we who are often in need of reformation. To be 'good to live with' is a certificate of self-discipline and genuine religion."

Prayer: "Bestow upon us, eternal God, the fine gifts of friendliness. Forgive us for our angers, hatreds, grudges and vindictiveness. Below all our differences teach us our brotherhood. Beyond all our varieties teach us our common goal. In the name of Christ. Amen."

Varsity Nine Wins; Trackmen Open With State Today

Ashmore Uses Twenty-one Men In Scoring 18-7 Win

Tar Heels Make Fifteen Runs in First Three Innings; Paxton Gets Initial Tally.

CAPTAIN MAUS STARS

Getting off on a scoring spree in the first three innings Carolina swamped Springfield "Y" College 18-7 in the opening baseball game of the season on Emerson field here yesterday afternoon. Taking advantage of their opponents' bungles and bunching their hits so as to make them count, the Tar Heels made a well beaten track down the home plate line in the second and third periods and scored six and eight runs respectively in these two innings.

The Springfield men went down in one-two-three order in the first inning, while the first batsman for Carolina crossed the plate for a tally. Paxton led off with a clean single over short, went to second when Whitehead beat out a throw to first, took third on a fielder's choice and came in when Beaugardus made a wild throw from the box.

Springfield fared no better in the second, Wright putting down three men in order again. McKinney for Carolina got his arm in the way of a pitched ball and took his base, Sher walked, Jackson reached first when the catcher failed to field a bunt, and then threw the ball away at first, letting McKinney and Sher reach the plate while Jackson took third. Wright singled and scored Jackson. Paxton went to third when the second baseman missed the catcher's throw and Whitehead walked. Maus singled and brought them both in. Lufty handed a base knock and was caught in a double play retiring the side when Rand hit to third. Score 7-0.

The visitors took a hitch at their belts and took a shot at scoring in the next inning. Owl walked and went to second on a sacrifice hit by Phillips. Beaugardus flied out to first, Graham walked and Pecker brought two across the plate with a long drive to left field. Bigsbee dropped a long one into the hands of the center fielder to retire to the side.

Carolina, not content with the five-run lead, pepped things up in her chance at the bat and every man in the lineup scored except Whitehead. McKinney and Sher took base on balls. Jackson singled, putting McKinney on third and Sher on second; Wright was hit by pitcher, forcing McKinney in at home; Paxton walked, bringing Sher in, Whitehead sacrificed and scored Jackson; Maus brought Paxton in with a single and went to third on Lufty's double. Rand drove a hard one to left field that got by the fielder for four bases and the sacks were cleared. McKinney fanned on his second trip to the plate of the inning and Sher's double was wasted as Jackson popped up to second base and retired the side.

Except for a double by Paxton in the fourth the next two innings were uneventful. The Tar Heels took a scoring notion again in the sixth and a double by Branch, singles by Longest and Davis, and a triple by Whitehead added three more runs to bring the total to 18. Springfield added three in the seventh and two in the eighth to raise her score to seven and

The opening of the sports program for the spring quarter indicates a busy season for the followers of Carolina's athletic teams. Twenty-five events will take place on home grounds this season and the majority of these will be baseball games, both freshman and varsity. The track team will hold several meets at home, while the Racqueteers will be hosts on several occasions. In addition to these events the intramural department has planned a number of intramural events. The baseball league heads the list in importance, but the boxing tournament, quickly followed by a wrestling tourney, opens the intramural campaign for the spring. Horseshoe, tennis and fencing will account for the remainder of the intramural program.

The tennis managers have planned an ambitious program for the Tar Heel netmen this year. The most outstanding competition that will be furnished the Racqueteers is a meet with the United States Davis Cup team. No foolish expectation of winning this meet have been voiced yet, but competition against such outstanding netmen will undoubtedly furnish experience for the Tar Heels. Both the varsity and freshmen will compete in this match. The freshmen seem to be walking away with the tennis honors on the Hill and several of them will probably furnish some strong competition to the Davis Cup team.

The 1930 Tar Heel cinderpathmen have planned an ambitious schedule for the coming season, but they have good prospects of coming through a successful season. There are two departments of the track and field teams that are outstanding. In the field events the pole vaulters are the outstanding point winners, and will probably vie with the sprinters for event honors. The vaulters are composed mainly of somewhat inexperienced men, but all four of them will be strong contenders for points in almost any meet of the year. Arnold is the leader of the "four-pole men" with his indoor record of 12 feet 7 inches, while Smith and Ruble follow closely. Bill Dry, who placed in several meets last year, will furnish the fourth vaulter. Both Smith and Ruble tied for third in the indoor meet, and accounted for three of the vaulters 8 points in the meet. The sprinters, with Ken Gay, Charlie Farmer and Rip Slusser, will probably lead the track men in gathering points. Gay placed second in the Southern Conference outdoor meet last year in Birmingham, while Farmer and Slusser are prominent sophomore flashes. In addition to the sprints, the hurdles are another one of Slusser's track events. He is also a prominent member of Collins' "hundred backs."

Freshman Track

Time trials will be run for all freshman track candidates this afternoon at the stadium at 3:45. All varsity track candidates who are not entered in the meet will run time trials at 3:45 p.m.

Listed As Pitcher Odell Sapp Gains Glory As Football End

(By Will Yarborough)

Although classed as a baseball player when a freshman, Odell Sapp gained fame as a football and boxing star during his four years of competition here. He won letters in football, baseball and boxing, beginning in 1926 under "Duke" Duncan, baseball coach, ending his career as a competitor in 1929 as a boxer.

Odell was a pitcher when he first enrolled here and it was as a pitcher that he won his first monogram. Playing on the team with Captain Jones, Bill Dodderer, "Hat" Hatley, Bill Poyner, Bill Sharpe, Bob Sides, "Moose" Tenney, L. D. Webb, Joe Bob Westmoreland and Tom Young he made an auspicious entrance to the sport field. However, he turned his attention to football in reality in 1927 to become a star end. His touchdown against Virginia that fall was one of the highlights of the game. He was rewarded with a berth on the all-state team following that season.

When the call for boxers was issued Sapp was again wearing Carolina colors. He gained his letter that year to become a three-letter man.

Again in 1928 he answered the football call and began another season of service. His work that fall helped bring the Tar Heels the state championship. Although not competing in boxing he was drafted just before the Conference bouts for a position on the team. Even with such short preparation he smashed his way to second place and gave Carolina its margin over Florida for the southern championship. That fight ended his competitive days here.

But the athletic council, of which he was a member in 1928-29 as president of the athletic association, was not to lose his services. Early last fall it was announced that he would continue here as freshman coach of boxing and assistant freshman coach of football and baseball.

Thus the sophomore pitching star becomes the all-state football end and runner-up to the southern champion in boxing. When his days as a competitor end he turns to developing new stars for the University. Altogether a career one may well envy as well as admire.

Tar Heel Cindermen Face State On Emerson Field

Carolina To Send Full Strength Into Opening Track Test Against West Raleigh Team.

UNIVERSITY IS FAVORED

Veterans Will Face Strong Competition From Youngsters for Honors in Meet; Stafford Returns to Add to Hurdle Strength.

Bolstered by the return of Johnnie Stafford and Clarence Phoenix, the Tar Heel trackmen are all set for this afternoon's exhibition meet with N. C. State to begin on Emerson field here at 4 o'clock and open the outdoor season for the Carolina cindermen. Stafford, letter man who did the hurdles and broad jump, scoring many points for the Tar Heels last year, and Phoenix, sophomore cross-country star and good distance prospect, were the outstanding gains during the winter quarter. With the return of these men the team that has ruled the state cinder roost for eight consecutive years should this season be one of the best balanced Tar Heel teams of history.

Coaches Fetzer and Ranson have been grooming the squad intensively for today's opening test with the Wolfpack, and will be able to use practically full strength. There are eleven letter men on the squad, covering every event but the javelin, and including Captain Nims, Gay, Garrett, Barkley, Baucom, Stafford, Perry, Bagby, Neiman, Adkins and Dameron, and a number of outstanding youngsters headed by such men as Farmer Arnold, and Brown.

The time schedule with the entries in each event follows:

TRACK EVENTS

4:00 p. m., 100-yard dash, Farmer, Gay and Slusser; 4:00 p. m., mile run, Lowry, Phoenix and Simpson; 4:20 p. m., 220-yard dash, Farmer, Gay and Case; 4:30 p. m., high hurdles, Perry, Stafford and Goodwin; 4:40 p. m., 440-yard run, Nims, Weil and Garrett; 4:50 p. m., two-mile run, Baucom, Wrenn, Farris and Rhodes; 5:00 p. m., low hurdles, Stafford, Perry, Slusser and Johnson; 5:20 p. m., 880-yard run, Barkley, Hamer and Medford.

Baseball Has Full Schedule for Week

There will be plenty of action for baseball fans near Chapel Hill during the coming week with twelve games scheduled to be played in Raleigh, Durham and Chapel Hill. Carolina plays three games next week, meeting Cornell twice and Washington and Lee once.

Ira Thomas, scout for the Philadelphia Athletics, is visiting Coach Jack Coombs, Blue Devil coach, in Durham. It is likely that other scouts will be on this section with Springfield, Cornell, Davidson, Duke, State, Washington and Lee and Carolina in action in this immediate section.

The play opened yesterday with Carolina playing Springfield College. Today Springfield moves over to Wake Forest while Saturday Springfield plays Duke and Davidson meets State in Raleigh.

Next week Carolina opens Monday with Cornell. The next day Cornell again plays the Tar Heels while Washington and Lee invades Durham for a game with Duke. Cornell moves over to Durham while Washington and Lee plays its second tri-state league in North Carolina meeting State in Raleigh. The Generals move over to the Hill Thursday while Cornell continues with Duke. Only one contest is scheduled for Saturday with Navy meeting Duke in Durham.

Intramural Boxers Prepare for Meet

With two days of practice behind them, the intramural boxing contenders are rapidly getting in shape for the tournament which will take place in the Tin Can on April 7. The tournament is being held by the intramural athletics department, under the leadership of Bo Shepard. Individual winners in each weight will receive gold medals, and much interest has been manifested.

Around 50 men have reported to Coach Crayton Rowe for training, and he and Coach Sapp along with Sheffield and Goodridge, lettermen of last year's team, are teaching them the fundamentals of the sport.

All of the weights are well represented except the unlimited and the bantam weight, and Coach Rowe has made it known that he would like to see a number of men out for these weights. The welter and middle weights are well represented. Workouts are held every afternoon in the Tin Can at 4 o'clock.

Former Playmaker Writes for Wayne Community Players

William Royall of Goldsboro, former student at the University and at one time a member of the Carolina Playmakers, has had his play "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder" accepted for production in the National Little Theatre Tournament of 1930 to be held in New York City. The play will be produced by the Wayne Community Players of Goldsboro.

Royall was with the Playmakers in 1920 and 1921. He was the author of one of their early plays "The Vamp," in which production he took a leading role. His play "The Ghost of Lombray" was produced here at the state dramatic festival of 1927 by the Wayne Community Players.

The judges to select the plays competing in the Little Theatre Tournament and the David Belasco Cup Match said of Royall's play, "It is a singularly good short play. . . . It is dramatic, the characters are sympathetic, and they say the kind of things you would expect of them." Walter Hartwig, general manager of the Manhattan Little Theatre Club, says of the author, "If Mr. Royall is not already an experienced play writer he soon will be."

In producing "When the Role Is Called Up Yonder" the Wayne Community Players are aiding in bringing North Carolina into further prominence in the development of Little Theatre activities. Frederick Koch, director of the Carolina Playmakers, says regarding the Goldsboro players, "The Goldsboro group is to be commended on its initiative in producing plays written by its own members. In the state tournament at Chapel Hill the players gave one of the most finished productions ever produced by a Little Theatre group in any tournament held by the Carolina Dramatic Association."

Modern Inventions Need World Language

Cleveland, O.—(IP) —Within two generations the airplane, plus the radio and the talking picture, will make a world language an absolute necessity, William B. Stout, head of the Sout Airplane Division of the Ford Motor Co. said here in an address before 300 purchasing agents and business executives.

"The airplane is shrinking distance even more than did the automobile," Stout said, "Mexico City, for example, is 43 hours from Tampico, on the Atlantic Coast, by the fastest means of ground transport, but regularly operating air lines will carry you between the two cities in four hours. Air lines are doing and will continue to do wonders in the development of the backward countries of Central and South America and of the rest of the world and will do much to bring about the world brotherhood we all desire."

OHIO CO-EDS TO RUN SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN

Athens, O.—(IP)—Ohio University co-eds are going to learn what bottle to grab when baby has the colic, and what to say when Willie takes pleasure in chopping the piano with a hatchet.

A nursery school for children of pre-school age is to be opened in the practice house of the department of home economics. Athens children have been registered to attend the school daily. Co-eds will supervise the play.

Florence Justin of the University of Minnesota has been named director of the nursery school, with Helen Humphrey, a graduate student, as teacher.

NIGHT CLUB TALKIE AT THE CAROLINA TODAY

"The Woman Racket," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's all-talking picture of New York night life, with Tom Moore and Blanche Sweet in the featured roles, is the attraction Tuesday at the Carolina theatre.

Adapted from the story by Philip Dunning, celebrated author of "Broadway," and Frances Dunning, the new play is a drama of night clubs and gangster life, with Moore as a policeman and Miss Sweet as a night club hostess. Glittering ballets in spectacular night club scenes, and lilting song numbers, are contrasted with the gangster world ruling the night clubs from the background.

The play revolves around the love of the night club girl and the officer. Police raids, gangster battles, and other incidents make up the exciting story.

Robert Ober, noted as an actor as well as a director, and Albert Kelley directed the new picture, which was adapted to the screen by Albert Shelby Le Vino.

The cast is a notable one, including Sally Starr, new M-G-M "discovery," and Robert Agnew as youthful cabaret entertainers; John Miljan, of "Unholy Night" and "Speedway," as the gangster chief; Tenen Holtz, Tom London, Wilbur Mack, Clinton Lyle, Nita Martan, and Richard Travers.

Miss Sweet, who incidentally started her career as a dancer with Gertrude Hoffman, sings several song hits during the cabaret sequences, and Miss Starr and Agnew present an entertaining act with a ballet trained by Sammy Lee.

Preacher Opposed To Arming of Citizens

Evanston, Ill.—(IP)—That it is now a part of good citizenship to refuse to bear arms is the opinion of Rev. Charles Clayton Morrison, of Chicago, editor of the Christian Century, who spoke here recently before a round table discussion of the third national study conference of the nation committee on churches and world peace.

"We are behind the times in talking about conscientious objectors," Dr. Morrison said. "The thing to talk about now is loyalty to the United States government. The government has signed the Paris peace pact by which it has outlawed war. Therefore it is good citizenship and the highest patriotism on the part of every individual to refuse to bear arms.

"The unpatriotic citizen is he who, in spite of the government's action, continues to stir up war feelings."

After a lengthy debate, the round table group adopted a resolution calling on the conference to stand for amendment of the nationalization law to permit conscientious objectors to become citizens.

The discussion group also urged that American marines be recalled from Haiti and China, in keeping, it asserted, with President Hoover's statement that he has no desire to have the American government represented abroad by our military forces.

Shakespearean Players Will Give Presentation Of Julius Caesar Tonight On Campus

Carolina Playmakers Presenting Well-Known Troupe As Part Of Regular Season Program.

SHOW BEGINS AT 8:30

Organization Specializes In Showing Before College and School Audiences; University Students To Take Small Parts.

As a particular feature on the regular program of the Carolina Playmakers, the Shakespeare Players will offer their production of Julius Caesar in the theatre Saturday night at 8:30 o'clock.

Known originally as the Stratford Players, this troupe, which is a traveling organization, is in the third year of its existence. Appearing chiefly before school and college audiences, these players have had as their outstanding productions Julius Caesar and Macbeth

Composed of seven experienced players, the group is under the direction of James Hendrickson and Claire Bruce. Although they give all due credit to the dramatic genius of the Stratford bard for the success of their productions, the Players have reason to be proud of the personnel of their troupe.

Mr. Hendrickson has had ten years of varied experience, including two years with Mr. Fritz Leiber's Shakespearean company. More recently he had the honor of appearing with Mr. Robert B. Mantell in his last two seasons. Mr. Hendrickson played the part of Brutus during Mr. Mantell's illness.

Miss Bruce, also for two seasons in the Mantell company, has appeared in many New York companies, notably those of John Cort, Maurice Gest, and a season with the far-famed Theatre Guild.

Other of the players are Webster Patterson, who has appeared with prominent companies in New York and San Francisco; Miss Mary Glover, another artist from the Mantell company; Stanley Cobley, who is in his second season with the players; Emmet Shields, a former member of the Barbizin Players of

SIX ENGINEERING SENIORS OFFERED ELECTRICAL JOBS

Through L. H. Means, a factory representative who was in Chapel Hill Thursday, the General Electric company has offered positions to six members of the senior class in electrical engineering. If the students accept the offered positions, they will enter the one-year training course which the company gives to graduates of technical schools. In the training school the students, all of whom will graduate this spring, will take advanced training in electrical engineering, specializing in so far as is possible in the field of their special interest.

During a period of approximately five years 26 graduates of the electrical engineering department have accepted positions with the General Electrical company. Last spring the company offered positions to nine men, and of these several accepted and are now taking the advanced instruction offered in the training course.

Bingham Debate Query Is Being Considered

At present the Bingham debate committees of the Di and Phi are considering the following queries: "Resolved, that the United States should recognize the present government of Russia," "Resolved, that the Prohibition Act should be repealed," and "Resolved, that modern science tends to destroy theistic faith." Immediately after the meetings of the Di and Phi Tuesday night the committees will meet jointly and decide upon one of these queries, and the side which each will uphold.

The Bingham Debate is always held during the commencement week. The contestants are representatives of the Di and Phi literary societies and are limited to the junior class.

The Bingham medal was first awarded in 1899, being given by the late Colonel Bingham. Since that date it has been awarded annually at commencement. Relatives of the original donor now sponsor the contest. The medal was won last year by J. C. Williams, of the Di.

Carolina Magazine To Appear April 6

The next issue of the Carolina Magazine which will appear April 6 will feature a one-act play, "The Mask: A Fantasy," by Richard A. Chace, and an article, "Rupert Brook: The Great Lover," by Jay Curtis. Arthur Riding also has a story, "Prometheus" in this issue.

Other features to appear will be "Psaltery," a sonnet sequence by Margaret Beaufort Miller; "The Ending of a Letter Written Between Midnight and Dawn," by N. C. B.; and verse by Lewis Alexander, Dorothy Mumford and others.

Following this issue will appear the annual Negro Number, edited with the help of Lewis Alexander, who in preceding years has secured the material for this particular issue. The editors have received this year numerous requests for copies of the Negro Numbers of 1928 and 1929 from libraries and colleges over the entire country.

Sometime in May will be published an issue to which former contributors and University alumni now successfully engaged in writing have promised to submit material.

DeGrouchy Visiting Wilbur Daniel Steele

Mr. DeGrouchy, one of the editors of the Curtis Publishing Company in Philadelphia, is here on a visit to Wilbur Daniel Steele. He is a distant relative of the celebrated French general of the same name who defeated part of Blucher's army at Wavre June 18, 1815, and whom Napoleon would have been glad to welcome at Waterloo.

Mr. Steele has embarked upon the writing of a series of stories for the Curtis company, and Mr. DeGrouchy came to Chapel Hill to confer with him about them. They commune through the day and far into the night upon literature and philosophy, sometimes calling in O. J. Coffin and Paul Green to pass upon disputed points.

MOVEMENT BEGINS TO START SCOUT FRATERNITY HERE

Meeting of Former Scouts To Be Held Next Thursday Evening.

A meeting of students who were boy scouts prior to their coming to the University was held Thursday evening at the Y. M. C. A. to make plans for incorporating on the campus a chapter of the Alpha Phi Omega fraternity. It was decided that on the next Thursday evening a meeting should be held again at the "Y" for all those students who desire to join the local chapter and those who have already designated that they have decided to join.

The object of the coming meeting, which will be presided over by R. B. Hubbard, temporary chairman, will be to elect the officers of the local chapter, to appoint a committee to draft a constitution, and to discuss further plans for the development and progress of the local chapter.

Alpha Phi Omega is not a social fraternity, but an honorary-professional national college fraternity. There are no local or national dues which might limit the membership, but only a membership fee of ten dollars after the local chapter has received its charter from the national organization.

The purpose and nature of this organization are incorporated in the following quotation: "The honor of membership in this fraternity is granted only to those who at some time have come under the scout oath and law as a registered scout of the rank of Tenderfoot or higher, or a scout leader. The purpose of the fraternity is to assemble those who have experience and training under the scout oath and law, to develop friendship, leadership, character building, citizenship, good college spirit, and strong manhood in general."

The following students have already become members of the local organization: A. D. Kornegay, Charlie Powell, Harold Smith, Henry Weiland, Welland, Wellard Hayes, J. G. Zaglin, D. C. McClue, J. W. Long, Donald Sewell, R. H. Hubbard, and H. F. Beam.

SCHOOL DEBATES SET FOR FIRST WEEK IN APRIL

Annual Triangle Affairs Will Be Held Next Thursday States Rankin.

FINALS TO BE HELD HERE

The triangular debates in the contest of the High School Debating Union of North Carolina will be held in participating high schools throughout the state on April 4, it was announced yesterday by E. R. Rankin, secretary of the High School Debating Union.

The high schools which win both sides in their triangular debates on April 4 will send their teams to the University to compete on April 17 and 18 in the final contest for the Aycock Memorial Cup, the trophy provided by the intercollegiate debaters of the University of North Carolina.

The query which will be discussed by all schools in the state-wide contest this year is: "Resolved, that North Carolina should adopt the proposed constitutional amendment, authorizing the classification of property for taxation."

It is expected that the annual debating contest on the question as to whether North Carolina should adopt the proposed constitutional amendment, which comes up for decision on the part of the voters next fall and which would authorize the General Assembly to classify property for purposes of taxation, will be one of unusual interest.

The high school debates on Friday evening will bring to a culmination several months of steady effort which has been put forth by the representatives of the various high schools which are entering the contest. The youthful debaters have engaged in a careful study of all available material bearing on the subject of the classification of property for purposes of taxation. For the use of the debaters the University Extension Division has published a 93-page debate handbook, Volume 9, No. 4, of the University of North Carolina Extension Bulletin, entitled "The Classification of Property for Taxation." This handbook contains a brief history of the High School Debating Union, a statement of the query with explanations and limitations, selected articles on the

Chapel Hillians Should Go To Bed Early Says U. S. Executive

The belief of the Post Office Department that all good Chapel Hillians should be in bed by nine o'clock is the interesting discovery of John A. Livingston, Washington correspondent of the News and Observer. In response to a letter from Louis Graves, Charles Woollen, Mayor Council, and other notables of Chapel Hill relative to obtaining longer hours for the remaining open for the local post-office, the executive assistant to Postmaster-General Brown advanced the belief that the closing of the lobby two and a half hours after the last distribution of mail allowed sufficient time for the citizens of the village to swap gossip and obtain their mail. Quite plain was the inference that there is no reason for anyone to remain up in Chapel Hill long after the chickens go to roost.

Upon receipt of this informing missive, Senator Simmons immediately forwarded to the post-office department the information that the aforesaid gentlemen are citizens of some consequence in the state, and not to be lightly considered in their requests, nor was the language employed liable to be misinterpreted.

Honorary Scientific Society Will Hold Special Meeting

Four University Professors Will Feature Call Meeting of Sigma Xi.

TO MEET TUESDAY NIGHT

Cards Mailed To All Local and State Members of Organization; Special Program Is Arranged.

The Sigma Xi, national honorary scientific fraternity, will hold a special meeting next Tuesday night, April 1, at 6:15 o'clock. Cards are being mailed to all local members and members throughout the state.

A special program has been arranged and four of the most noted Geologists at the University will give talks. The principal speakers are Drs. Collier Cobb, W. F. Prouty, J. H. Schwartz, and G. I. MacCarthy.

Dr. Cobb will speak on the Dome Structures in the Coastal plains of North Carolina, and Deflections of Streams toward the right. Dr. Prouty will discuss the Structure and Characteristics of the Triassic Deposits of this state, and Occurance, and Origin of Certain Serpentine Deposits in Maryland and Pennsylvania. Dr. Swartz will talk on the methods of determining Geological structures with Geo-Physical instrument. The last speech will be given by Dr. MacCarthy, who will discuss the Beach sands of the Atlantic coastal plains in respect to their Origin and relation to shore currents.

All of the speeches of this occasion pertain to problems which the members of the Geological departments have spent much time in research. Dr. Prouty has worked several years doing research work on the Triassic deposits in North Carolina and the other states between here and the New England states. He is said to have a more thorough understanding of thiis subject than any other one man.

The local chapter of the Sigma Xi is the only one in this state, and its members are scattered throughout the state and in the south. This scientific society functions in the field of Geology as the Phi Beta Kappa does in the scholastic field. Meeting are held regularly every month, but this is to be the largest meeting yet held. Plates for the occasion are seventy-five cents.

Boy Scout Activities

The Boy Scout troop of Chapel Hill held a meeting last Friday evening. A contest in first-aid splints and slings was on the schedule. Dr. R. B. Lawson, the judge, was unable to attend, but this (Friday) evening he will pass decision on the performance.

In the inter-patrol contest the standings are as follows: Eagle, 710; Fox, 676; Panther, 617; Wildcat, 578. The patrols are judged for attendance, for behavior, for the wearing of uniforms, for the payment of dues, and for skill in various kinds of tests.

The purpose of the association is to acquaint the prospective law students with the law school and the study of law, and to aid them in planning courses of study in preparation. The first meeting was held during the winter quarter, at which time Professor Connor, of the history department, inaugurated the series of talks, and officers of the organization were chosen. Much interest has been shown in the activity of the group, and it is hoped that the membership of all interested members of the student body may be gained.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

I have often felt that it is not quite so difficult to march in the uniform of a hero when bands are playing and drums are beating and admiring crowds are applauding as to be loyal to the duties of honest citizenship in the everyday humdrum of ordinary life.—Rev. Michael M. Mulcaire, vice-president of Notre Dame University.

The University's Most Illustrious Alumnus Vindicated

Few days ago we were considerably enthused upon running across a recent book which attempts to prove that James K. Polk, the only President of the United States to whom North Carolina has a clear title as a native son (it is a point of dispute whether Jackson and Johnson were born in North Carolina), should be listed among the greatest of American statesmen.

In the annals of American history the name of James K. Polk has seldom been mentioned in the past. Even at the University of North Carolina, his alma mater, students of history know very little about his life and political career, and regard his administration as president of the United States as comparatively unimportant. And the average student here will be astonished to learn that a graduate of the University by the name of Polk conducted one of the most successful and eventful of American presidential administrations.

In view of his political achievements and personal attributes, the obscurity attached to Polk's name is rather difficult to understand. For seldom in our history has such an ambitious and so varied a program as that undertaken by Polk while he was president, from 1845 to 1849, been carried into effect in the brief space of four years. Much of the renown of Thomas Jefferson's administration may be attributed to the acquisition of the Louisiana territory; yet Polk was directly responsible for the annexation of Texas, the ceding of Oregon to the United States by Great Britain, and the purchase of California and New Mexico, and he has never received credit for an expansion policy which had more important results than that of Jefferson.

Although the "Polk Doctrine" is not well known even among historians, many authorities hold it to be of far more importance than the famous Monroe Doctrine. The term is applied to Polk's declarations concerning European interference in American affairs. It was Polk who first declared that the United States would not permit any interference, solicited or otherwise, in American affairs by European nations. His declarations have superseded the Monroe Doctrine, which has long since ceased to have any practical application.

Polk's tariff policy led to prosperity; his "constitutional treasury" has proved to be successful; his highly important "Polk Doctrine" has been approved and extended; and his expansion policy added over five hundred thousand square miles of territory and gave the United States free access to the Pacific. In addition, the Mexican War, one of the most successful from an American standpoint in which the country has ever engaged, was waged during his administration, and his careful avoidance of the slavery question probably postponed the Civil War for a decade or more.

Notwithstanding all these things, Polk has probably occupied a less prominent place in American historical writings than any other president. This is probably due to the fact that considerable odium was attached to his policy of compromise on the slavery question and he was extensively caricatured as the pliable instrument of the slave power. Sectional contention and strife developed immediately after his administration ended, and his beneficial acts were immediately forgotten in the national excitement over the crucial events leading up to the Civil War. Von Holst and other historians who were prejudiced against Polk have done much to detract from the fame that should be his, and have materially assisted in causing his name to have been practically forgotten.

Little attention has been given to the constructive and fruitful policies of Polk's administration and his entire public life until recent years, when the work of Eugene Irving McCormac and others has revealed unquestionably that Polk was neither a conspirator nor a weakling, as his enemies depicted him, but that he was a constructive statesman, an able executive, and a sound patriot.

In our opinion few presidents have done more to increase the power and prestige of the nation than James K. Polk. We believe it likely that within the next few years the name of the only president to whom North Carolina has a clear title, and the University's most illustrious alumnus, will take its rightful place in history wiith those of America's most able and devoted statesmen.

At Least A Good Show

In the approaching campus elections there has been and is sure to be a strong fight; two major political parties have lined up their candidates and have girded their loins for a fight, and a fight until the last ballot is cast and the results announced. Ambitious politicians on both sides are forecasting startling successes, and many observers think a larger vote will be cast this year than ever before. Indeed pre-election interest has reached a pitch unheard of before on this typically lackadaisical campus The fraternities are split about evenly and the non-fraternity group seems destined to swing the election and put some of its members in.

The tumult this year is in sharp contrast to the quiet steam-roller that was put over last year. Already more racket has been kicked up than the whole election precipitated last spring. But as the fight seems to approach bitter ends, many observers are saying that an indifferent, stupid, lackadaisicical attitude is far better than bitterness. Two parties are healthy for any political group; a fight certainly makes things more interesting for the spectator. For our part we had rather see a bitter, knock-down-and-drag-out fight than to see the stupid indifference shown here last year. It is far better to have participation and have a furor than to have quietness and peace and have no interest and no participation.

Whatever the outcome of the election next week, it will certainly furnish a good show for the average student who is alert enough to observe. The man to man work has been going on for many weeks, and the fire works will soon begin. Whatever the costs may be, let us at least have a good show for our money; the more fight, the more enthusiasm, the more interest shown by the students, then the better.

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

Saturday, March 29th—Topic of the day: "The Meaning of Life." (Read James 4:13-17). Key verse: "What is your life?"

Meditation: "This is the question of questions, that will engage us during this Lenten Season. The answer we give to this question will determine the answers we give to all our other questions. James does not answer it. To be sure he gives a sort of answer. He says that it is a very transient thing, like a morning mist that the sun carries away. But this does not tell us what it is. Precious things are often little things in space and time. Jewels are not large. The Bible no where defines life, but it uses many symbols of life. Revelations calls it 'a river of water.' It springs from hidden depths, is replenished from the sky, and flows down its winding course making the valley green, quenching men's thirst and giving them life. The question for today is: What is your life?"

Prayer: "O thou, from whom life comes and to whom it returns, we thank thee for our lives. Grant us to know better than we now do, life's divine meaning and highest purposes, to the end that we may not live in vain. Amen."

College Education—A Drama

The curtain has fallen on Act II of the year's show. Act III is a week under way. For better, or for worse? In this quarterly three-act drama of the educational process the individual actor, the student, hardly counts at all. If he misses a cue, he is hissed; if he drops through the trap-door and out of the whole show, another puppet is ready to take his place. Tryout performances . . . three months in length. In this drama is the equipment, however, which educates us.

Friendship Frailties

Evanescent as the wind, and resistless as the waves, is public sentiment. Campus sentiment is the same—only worse! A scant six weeks ago we called our associates friends. Now they are The Opposition, and as such fall into the category of liars, rascals, rebels, crooks, rats, etc. Quoting from the scriptures, "These things ought not so to be."

Aiding the Human Eye

Every year astronomers invent more delicate instruments for observing the movements of the stars and other heavenly bodies. They tell us that the courses of all the heavenly bodies are cyclical—a fact which makes possible the formulation of accurate predictions regarding their future courses. But for the observation and ensuing study of the Youth Movement of the last decade, which has been confined largely to the Blackbottom, there seems to be no better instrument than the naked eye, and no better predicting device than the unaided human imagination.

1. Fraternity pins will become heavy and fall from many vests.

2. Freshmen will wonder what to do with old high school flames who come up for the high school debate tournament.

3. Several people will wonder how much it costs to get married.

4. Resultant of hosiery fashions, some legs will look bluish, some legs will look rosy, some legs will look pretty nice; and all men will look.

5. The sun will rise in the east.

Ye Intellectuals!

There is little virtue in falling into the easy habit of belittling the world about us by feeling that it's not good enough. Herein lies the chief fault of the intellectual. Utterly unmindful of the fact that the world was a going concern before he showed up, he "gets all hot and bothered" over the prospects of reforming the whole works. Or else, he allows the hollow laugh of the cynic to echo the philosophy of life which he has created for himself. Adoring the vainglory of our own words, the pomp argument, and the vanity of ideas, we soon lose respect for the simple life which is better today than yesterday, and which tomorrow will be better than today.

DEFENDING THE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

That branch of the University which is known as the School of Education has been the recipient in recent years of very severe criticism at the hands of other branches of this institution. Some of these criticisms are just, some are unjust. The opinion of the writer is that most of them have been of the latter variety. The purpose of this writing, therefore, is to present the School of Education in the light of its real function as an integral part of the University of North Carolina, in the light of its service to the people of the state.

The dignity of age, although it cannot be grasped or measured, is one of the strongest possessions of any institution. The School of Education is younger than some of the colleges of the University and older than others. This being the case, we can eliminate the date of its establishment as an object of criticism.

The purpose of the School of Education is that of training students to teach, and teach well. That such a purpose is a good one cannot be denied. But there are those who say that this business of teaching people how to teach is all "bunk." A common statement in this connection is, "They'll teach like they want to regardless of what you tell them about how to teach." For the moment let us examine this statement. One would be foolish beyond words to attempt to erect a building without a plan. In the teaching world this plan corresponds to the teacher's philosophy of the teaching process. Architecturally speaking, the house which is built without a plan is a "flop." Pedagogically speaking, the teacher who teaches by the dictates of conscience and the rules of the moment is also a "flop." The plan is to the house as the teaching theory is to the teacher. The days when people believed that "teachers are born" is gone for good.

Those who graduate from the School of Education usually become high school teachers somewhere in the state. Theirs is the task of preparing the youth of our state for college; theirs is the task of fitting them to carry the academic burden of the University's curricular requirements. Such a task demands teachers who know how to teach, who have learned the theories underlying their profession, and who have practiced such theories in the practice teaching courses which are given in conjunction with the work of the Chapel Hill high school. There is no need for the teacher who thinks that "any fool can teach." It is the belief of the faculty of the School of Education that our North Carolina youth must be safeguarded from haphazard instruction.

Now let us examine the calibre of the instruction which the School of Education offers. We find that the faculty is an excellent one, containing several authors of nation-wide distinction. Knight's Education in the United States has received extraordinarily favorable comment. Jordan's Educational Psychology is the accepted textbook in sixty colleges and universities of the United States. Several of Trabue's works have been placed in the libraries of America's leading institutions of higher learning. The School of Education has given the University two presidents in the course of its existence. No other branch of the institution has accomplished a like feat in the same length of time. This fact reflects the high quality of the faculty.

Turning to another phase of the work of the School of Education, we find that its faculty is training large numbers of North Carolina teachers who are scattered throughout the state. This is made possible through the Extension division. This is a distinct service to the state, for teachers are enabled to raise their certificates. Thus the school is improving the quality of the instruction which North Carolina youth is receiving—a very valuable service to the state.

If it is advisable to build a house acording to some definite plan, then it is advisable to teach according to the teaching philosophy which has been formulated in lieu of the experience of the nation's foremost teachers.

Tar Heel Trackmen Swamp State Runners 82½ To 43½

Good Records Features First Track Meet Held This Year

Gurneau for State Tosses Discus 137 Feet to Feature Meet.

BROWN HIGH POINT MAN

Carolina Weight Man Scores Eleven Points; Clean Sweep Made In Low Hurdles; Arnold Wins Pole Vault With Over 11 Feet.

Although no official score of the meet was kept the University track team triumphed over the State College cindermen here yesterday afternoon by the unofficial score of 82 1-2 to 43 1-2 in the first test of the outdoor season. Carolina placed first in ten of the 14 events, second in eight events, and third in six of the events. Ties for second in the high jump and third in the pole vault accounted for the other 2 1-2 points.

Despite the fact that the weather was not exactly ideal for a track meet the times did not suffer appreciably. Theron Brown, with a first in the javelin, and seconds in the discus and shot, was high scorer of the meet, with eleven points followed by Farmer with firsts in the 100 and 220-yard dashes for ten points.

Probably the outstanding individual performance of the meet was the discus hurling of Gurneau, ineligible entry for State. This boy gets credit for the distance of 137 feet 10 1-2 inches to overshadow the work of the other entries in the event and better the University record. Practically the entire squads of both institutions saw action in the meet, which was more or less of a practice affair by agreement. Time trials for the freshmen were run concurrently with the events in the meet.

The summaries of the varsity and freshman events follow:

100-yard dash: Farmer (Carolina), Stout (State), Ketchie (State). Time 10.1..

220-yard dash: Farmer (C), Stout (S), Ketchie (S). Time 21.6.

440-yard run: Ottinger (S), Floyd (S), Weil (C). Time 51.4.

Wardlaw School Team Is Practicing Here

The Wardlaw School baseball team of Plainfield, N. J., the only prep school ball team in the north to make a southern training trip, has been on the Hill since last Sunday. This is the third successive year that these youngsters have been the guests of the University; and, without an exception, they all vow to make Carolina someday their Alma Mater. The boys play a snappy brand of baseball and in three practice games have taken the Betas and the freshmen over the ropes. There are four little chaps with the team, and it is amusing to see them handle a ball. Two of them have midget on their uniforms, and two of them are juniors. They have been brought along evidently as a reward for scholarship or good behavior. On the way south the team played the William and Mary freshmen and held them to goose eggs for six innings.

The school combines education with baseball on this trip, and the boys are taken to many points of historical interest. This year they visited Washington, Alexandria, Fredericksburg, Richmond, Williamsburg, and Petersburg. On the return trip they stop at Staunton, the Luray Caverns, Harper's Ferry, Gettysburg, and Valley Forge.

Mr. Wardlaw, founder of the school and an alumnus of the University, was accompanied this year by his brother, Mr. Norman Wardlaw, who also attended classes here a quarter of a century ago.

Frank Spotts is the coach of the team, and Newton Smalley, manager. The playing of young Walley Bruns, the plucky center fielder and captain came in for much praise, as did that of George Baner and Michael Roscoe, two of the best young pitchers we've seen in some time. Following in order were James Haller, Paul Brakelery, Edward Stallings, Ralph DeForest, Jack Maloney, George Walck, brother of Claude Walck, a freshman. George played left field for the boys while they were here and duplicated his feat of last year by knocking out a home run at an appropriate time. The other boys on the trip were the diminutives, Barlow, Madsden, Stearns, and Perkina.

Many Reporting For Intramural Boxing

This year's intramural boxing tournament promises to be one of the most closely contested ever held here. A large number of candidates are working out in the Tin Can daily, and at present all indications point to some red hot scraps on April 7, the date when the tournament will be held. All classes are quite well represented except the 115 pound and unlimited classes, in which there are but few entries. Coach Rowe would like to have several more entries in these weights and entries are by no means closed for the other weights. Coach Rowe points out that the tournament will be a fine opportunity for those interested in trying out for next year's squad and the squads in the years following to break in. Several of the varsity's stars of the past never boxed before they entered the intramural tournament and broke in that way. There are probably several undiscovered Allens, Browns, and Warrens on the campus, and it is hoped that all such will enter the intramural tournament and discover their latent talent.

Sluggard In School Now Gets Attention

Atlantic City—(IP) — The Sluggard now gets some consideration in the public school, according to William John Cooper, United States Commissioner of Education, who delivered an address here before the department of superintendents.

The old custom of punishing the sluggard and not worrying if the slow student drops out no longer prevails, he said.

The sociologist and the psychologist are better able to help the child than they were a short time ago. The social adaptation of the child is growing more important, Cooper said, and is must be left to the tax payers until all are convinced of the value of the service and are willing to provide funds for it.

None but the educator, he said, sees the child as an important figure in society of which he is to be a member.

He does not propose to make a diplomat out of material that would be best as a butcher, but he aims at adjusting the child to a niche in life where his abilities will be best expressed.

In a questionaire sent to 54 cities with populations of 100,000 or more, 40 reported that they maintained some sort of psychological service, four psychiatric clinics and sixteen others reported having both. In 115 cities of over 30,000, 40 reported service of these types.

Mr. Cooper viewed with approval the increasing interest taken in the child by parent-teacher associations.

Looking Them Over

by
Browning Roach

The opening game with Springfield "Y" college Thursday brought to the front several new figures on the Carolina diamond. Starting the play with eight veterans, Coach Ashmore began to throw in the pinch hitters and substitutes as soon as a substantial lead was established. Of the twelve extra men used, only two, Fleming and House, had seen much varsity service before. Tom Edwards also worked out in several games last year but had a little too much competition to make the regular grade. The other nine are all sophomores or reserve men held over from last year's squad.

The right field position, which was shifted around among Jessup, Jackson, House, Sher and Paxton, seems to have drawn a pretty good man in McKinney, who is getting a taste of varsity play this season. This hefty outfielder gets in a good cut at the ball and shows promise of being able to put them well out in the garden. His long single gave him a .333 average for Thursday's game, being hit by pitcher once, taking a walk, striking out and popping up to shortstop in the other trips to the plate.

From the way Potter and Kushner held them down behind the plate it looks as though it will be a safe move to shift Maus to first and let these boys scramble over the backstop position. Both of these men covered the throws from the mound like veterans—and as is usual in early season frays, some of the balls were apt to come to them anywhere except over the plate. But as the saying goes, a wise ball knows its own catcher.

* * *

Most of the pitching staff got a chance in the box Thursday, with the veterans Wright and Fleming giving the other moundsmen a few lessons on delivery in the first five innings. These hurlers allowed only one hit apiece, and then turned the mound work over to their understudies. Longest came up in the sixth to show the Springfield bunch how he annihilated his freshmen batsmen last year. With the exception of the usual rookie wildness, Longest showed fair delivery, and allowed three hits in two innings. If he can learn to pay a little more heed to control, his speed may enable this boy to do things yet. The Edwards boys, Paul and Tom, still lack a little grooming to wear off grandstand consciousness and to get their delivery under control. A little more last inning practice and they will be ready to go in as regulars. Tom Edwards is playing his last year, while Paul has just risen from the freshman ranks.

Altho Springfield had already lost to Elon and Lenoir-Rhyne earlier in the week, the credit due for the Tar Heel victory is not diminished. Outside a little loose fielding and erratic throwing that may easily be ascribed to the earliness of the season and the coldness of the weather Thursday, the team functioned rather smoothly. Nap Lufty was seen to cast a wistful glance or two over toward his old first base position after juggling one or two hot grounders at third, but soon expects to be as much at home at third as at first.

Michigan Student Publication Says Prohibition Flop

Ann Arbor, Mich.—(IP)—prohibition, whether enforced by failure in colleges and the well-soused collegiate is casually regarded today whereas he would have been publicly ostracised before the enactment of the Volstead act.

This is what the Michigan Daily, student publication of the University of Michigan, thinks of the prohibition amendment and its affect on undergraduate life, as expressed in its editorial columns recently.

"It is a well known fact that Prohibition has been an utter federal, state or university officers, has not rooted out the stubborn drink tradition among college men." the editorial said

"Rather, indeed has the reverse been true; the fascination in doing something forbidden has proved irresistible.

"The very dangers of being drunk have added little-needed incentive to drinking, and college students in their sophistication have taken the feeble enforcement attempts so lightly that a thoroughly soused individual became a joke instead of a pity."

Repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment wouldn't solve the problem entirely, the editorial says, "but we feel that flagrant intoxication would no longer be a thing to parade as conspicuously as possible and certainly good wholesome beer would be restored to first place in the hearts of college students."

George Tilley, a senior in the literary college of the University, and a member of the editorial staff of the Daily, explained that the editorial represents general observations collected by the staff writers from personal and campus contacts.

STRANGE THREADS IN PLOT OF "THE FURIES"

What if your husband should be murdered?

What if you were accused of the crime?

What if the man you loved turned out to be a fortune-hunter?

Such are some of the story threads found in "The Furies," the screen version of Zoe Akins' play, which is to open at the Carolina Theatre today. It is a First National and Vitaphone picture, with Lois Wilson and H. B. Warner in the leading roles.

"The Furies" from start to surprising finish is a most unusual drama, altogether unlike the average film story. New York's high society forms the background against which the players act out their strange eventful destinies.

CAR SALES DECLINE SIXTY-THREE PERCENT IN STATE

The records of the North Carolina highway department show that the sale of automobiles in this state fell off more than 60 per cent between February of 1929 and February of 1930. The total of cars for which the department issued licenses last month was 2, 490; in February, 1929, it was 6,329.

Ford fell from 2,555 to 1,282, Chevrolet from 1,589 to 639, Pontiac from 219 to 55, Essex from 302 to 62, Buick from 153 to 55, and Chrysler from 123 to 49.

Dr. Miller Urges Less Attention To Scholarly Pupils

Philadelphia, Pa. — (IP)—Less attention must be concentrated on the "scholar" and more on those who are not primarily intellectual by the colleges, Dr. Karl G. Miller, professor of psychology and director of admissions at the University of Pennsylvania said recently in an address here.

Dr. Miller said that from his contact with the parents of boys seeking admission to the University he felt that the "proud father wants his son to go through a ripening process, to make many contacts, to become interested in many things, to have a good deal of fun and to do reasonably well in his studies."

"I do not mean to imply," he continued, "that the candidate or his father is unmindful of the academic values of the college career. The boy would not want to enter an institution with low scholastic standards, and his father would not foot the bill for a program involving no work and all play. Father and son both believe that the college will provide knowledge and training which will be of real benefit in later life.

"But, unless I am mistaken, the love of learning, the inspiration for research—these do not appear in the definitions of college education as it exists in the minds of prospective students and their parents.

"Certainly we are confronted with two almost diametrically opposed definitions of the purpose of college education.

"The college should, and I believe does, provide stimulation for the awakening of intellectual interests and for the fostering of true scholarship. But obviously, the college is serving a quite different function in response to the demand of the American people.

"It is furnishing an environment for the youth whose ambitions are not primarily academic; it is giving him the opportunity to acquire knowledge in varied fields of endeavor, which are practically inaccessible to men in later life; it is offering him treasured associations with his fellows; it is providing the stimulation for more complete mental and physical development for the prolongation of economic infancy."

FIVE WOMEN HAVE AN EXCITING TRIP

They Lose Suit-Case and Have Many Punctures and Are Halted by Officer

A DAY LATE IN ARRIVING

(From the Chapel Hill Weekly)

Five women of Chapel Hill—Mrs. Irl Summerlin, Mrs. J. P. Kenfield, Mrs. Jerry Slade, Mrs. F. O. Bowman, and Mrs. Claudius Murchison—set out for New York Monday of last week in Mrs. Kenfield's Hupp sedan. Mrs. Summerlin is also the owner of a Hupp and is familiar with all its habits, and so it was agreed that she and Mrs. Kenfield would divide the task of driving.

They spent the first night in Washington and arose at 6 o'clock Tuesday morning to resume their journey. The plan was to reach New York that evening.

All the suit-cases were strapped on the outside—behind and on the running boards—and whenever there was a stop for gas or oil some one of the five would get out and make a careful inspection to make sure that the baggage was still there. But at one stop, not far beyond Baltimore, they neglected the inspection. Pretty soon they heard a bumping. They halted, got out, and discovered that the top of the hood had not been made tight by the man at the filling station. And Mrs. Kenfield's suit-case, which was beside the hood, had been shaken loose and was gone.

It contained her entire wardrobe, including several new frocks in the latest style, and the loss of it cast her and her friends into despair. They turned around and rode back toward Baltimore, inquiring for the lost suit-case at stations and homes along the way. But there was no trace of it.

"We'll telephone to Gerald Johnson," said Mrs. Summerlin.

So in a few minutes, Mr. Johnson, who is an editor of the Baltimore Evening Sun, was hearing all about the disaster. They asked him to proclaim the loss in an advertisement in the Baltimore newspapers. "Put a lot of heart interest in it," Mrs. Summerlin implored him. "Make 'em weep when they read it." The appeal was so moving that when Mr. Johnson left the telephone he was on the verge of tears himself, and he put his emotion into his writing—with a result that will presently appear.

The women went on their way to New York. Mrs. Kenfield was so upset that Mrs. Summerlin had to do the driving. They had a puncture. When they were on the roll again, there came a downpour of rain. Then another puncture—and the tears of the women began to mingle with the rain from heaven.

At the Pennsylvania line they were stopped by a police officer who demanded to see a driver's license.

"But we don't have drivers' licenses in North Carolina," they told him. He shook his head and scowled and gave them to understand that he didn't believe this. "This is a fine car," he said, "and we've been having a lot of reports of the theft of fine cars."

Whereupon Mrs. Summerlin gave him a heart-breaking story of their expedition and of their troubles. They were five women leaving their husbands for the first time, she recited, and were going on a holiday to New York. And they had lost a suit-case full of new frocks, and had a puncture, and were hours late already, and what would they do if they were arrested? And, please, Mr. Policeman, couldn't they go on?

For the second time that day Mrs. Summerlin touched a man's heart. The officer relented and waved them on.

There were two more punctures. And two new tires had to be bought. And the women drove into Trenton, New Jersey, at nightfall, weary and desolate. They were to have been in New York, but they decided to pass the night in Trenton and telephone to the friends who were awaiting them in the metropolis. They got to New York next day. Mrs. Slade visited her sister, and Mrs. Summerlin visited the P. L. Elmores. All the five went to a show every night, and after the show gathered in a hotel to talk it over. They walked and rode up and down Fifth Avenue and Broadway and went about to the shops and art galleries. They had no mishaps on the way back and got home early this week.

Soon after her return a telegram came to Mrs. Kenfield from a man in Bel Air, Maryland. He said that he had found a suit-case, which, from the advertisement in the paper, was undoubtedly hers; that he would be happy to send it to her; that of course he would not accept the reward of $25 offered in the advertisement; and that if she came through Bel Air again he hoped she would drop in at his home.

O.U.A.M. Council Grows

In the last three months the membership of Davie Council No. 52, Junior Order of United American Mechanics has grown from 20 to 109. This increase has come about as the result of a vigorous campaign carried on by two communities, one headed by Councilor L. J. Phipps and the other by Vice-Councilor S. A. Nathan. The campaign is still under way.

The council has appointed a vocation committee composed of J. M. Foushee, C. P. Hinshaw, and J. Ralph Weaver. It seeks to find employment for all members who are out of work. It is asking every member who knows of opportunity for work to notify the committee at once.

Rev. B. J. Howard is chairman of a committee that is collecting clothes for the poor of Chapel Hill and the surrounding country. It is working in conjunction with other welfare agencies. Recently the council sent a cash contribution to the King's Daughters.

The council's officers are L. J. Phipps, councilor; S. A. Nathan, vice-councilor; W. M. McCauley, junior past councilor; J. B. Hocutt, chaplain; D. W. King, recording secretary; G. B. Hellen assistant recording secretary; J. M. Foushee, financial secretary; J. R. Weaver, Sr., assistant financial secretary; C. P. Hinshaw, warden; R. H. Varner, conductor; L. A. Parrish, inside sentinel; A. M. McCauley, outside sentinel; J. T. Lloyd, T. E. Best, Sr., and J. W. Huskey, trustees.

POST OFFICE TO STAY OPEN UNTIL ELEVEN O'CLOCK

Senator Simmons Telegraphs P. L. Burch That Change Will Be Made After Failing In First Attempt.

The recent agitation for keeping the post-office lobby open until 11 o'clock culminated, after what appeared to be a defeat, in the following telegram, received yesterday morning by Mr. P. L. Burch, superintendent of buildings:

"P. L. Burch, Supt. Bldgs.
Univ. Consol. Service Plants,
Chapel Hill, N. C.

With further reference to your recent communication am very glad to advise that Postmaster General has agreed to issue order to keep lobby of post-office at Chapel Hill open until eleven o'clock postmeridian. F. M. Simmons."

Senator Simmons apparently changed the mind of the Postmaster General for in a letter received Friday by Mr. Burch, Furnifold McLain Simmons says:

"My dear Mr. Burch:

I am sending you herewith a copy of a letter that I have received this morning from the Postmaster General, refusing the request to keep the lobby of the post office at Chapel Hill open until 11:00 p.m. You will note the reasons given by Postmaster General Brown.

"I regret the attitude on his part but I am not disposed to acquiese in his decision without some further efforts through another channel. Very cordially yours, (signed) F. M. Simmons."

Voting On Enforcement, Modification Or Repeal 18th Amendment Begins

Students Also To Indicate Whether They Drink or Not On Same Ballot.

VOTING TO BE IN Y LOBBY

Poll Similar To Those Conducted By Literary Digest and Yale News; Virginia Also Voting.

Appearing in today's issue of the Daily Tar Heel is a ballot seeking student sentiment in regard to enforcement, modification or repeal of the 18th Amendment and seeking to approximate the number of students who drink. The balloting opens today and closes noon Wednesday. Ballot boxes will be maintained in the Y.M.C.A. lobby until that time. Results will be announced Thursday.

Similar surveys have been conducted by the Yale News and other eastern collegiate papers, while at present the Literary Digest is conducting a poll on the question of the 18th amendment. Considerable sentiment regarding both sides of the question has been aroused by the Congressional hearings on bills introduced to repeal the amendment.

Editor Holder has received inquiries regarding sentiment here. Lacking any expression of student sentiment it was decided to conduct this survey through the Daily Tar Heel.

The ballots will be divided into two sections. The first will seek to determine the percentage of the student body which does not drink, drinks occasionally, and drinks frequently and the second part will duplicate the ballot of the Literary Digest.

A similar survey is now being conducted by the College Topics, University of Virginia paper.

In order to prevent duplication of voting students are requested to sign only their initials to the ballots.

TWO LAW STUDENTS GET SCHOLARSHIPS

Announcement yesterday of the appointment of A. K. Smith and Walter Hoyle, Carolina law students, to research fellowships at Columbia and Yale Universities for next year, is the latest of a number of high honors which have come the way of the University school of law.

J. B. Fordham, who graduated with honors last year, is the present holder of a Sterling Research Fellowship at Yale, but Smith's appointment marks the first time that a Carolina law student has ever been awarded a research fellowship at the Columbia University school of law.

Both fellowships carry substantial stipends for advanced research in the law.

Smith, who goes to Columbia, was the student editor-in-chief of this year's University of North Carolina Law Review, Hoyle was faculty research assistant to Professor M. T. VanHecke, and both men were among the leading students in the third-year class.

Nazareno To Be At United Chudch Today

Alfredo Nazareno will give the first of a series of talks at the United Church Forum tonight at 7 o'clock.

Esperanto To Meet Tuesday Afternoon

As there seems to be a number of students still interested in Esperanto, it was resolved to have a few more meetings of its friends during the spring quarter. Dr. E. C. Metzenthin has agreed to continue conducting classes in this international language, provided there is a sufficient demand for its study. Therefore a meeting will be held next Tuesday, April 1 in 109 Saunders hall at 5 p. m. for the purpose of deciding definitely whether and how long to continue the classes in Esperanto. A general survey of this world language will be presented with a review of the elements of its grammar and vocabulary, after which some definite practice in reading and translation will be given.

All those wishing to obtain information about the principles and aims of this universal language as well as the old friends who want to complete its study are urged to attend this meeting. Copies of the "Esperantoisto," the bi-monthly magazine, will be handed out to the subscribers.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

One life; a little gleam of time between two eternities.—Carlyle.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

"U. S. Senate has many problems," the head-line suggests. To be exact, it has just ninety-six of them.—Peking (China) Leader.

Some of the wets talk as tho they had had several drinks and some of the drys talk as tho they needed them.—Detroit Free Press.

"Mr. Borah," says a Washington analyst of the political situation, "is himself again." But that doesn't make it much clearer.—Detroit News.

Some of the wets talk as though they had had several drinks and some of the drys talk as though they needed them.—Detroit Free Press.

Tar Heel Topics

Add to similies of the season: As good as the Chi Omega dance.

Thoughts of a senior at the beginning of the spring quarter: "Just three more courses to go—only forty-five more class days—how beautiful is life in the spring-time, tra-la!"

The Missouri prison mutiny is evidence of the fact that even prisoners will kick up a devil of a row when their "vittles" aren't up to par. Chapel Hill boarding house proprietors and Swain hall authorities please note.

News item from the Press and Standard, Waterloo, South Carolina: "The whole community was made sad last Friday night—old man Jack Hartshorn had breathed his last at the supper table just after he had drunk too much buttermilk and fell over on the floor and never said another word except 'where is my hat?'—he will leave a large family with two mules and a mortgage—his loss was expected as his blood pressure went up when cotton went down last fall." Moral: don't become a cotton farmer.

Making Shakespeare Interesting

Last night's performance by the Shakespeare Players marked the first appearance of a professional dramatic organization on the University campus in many years. And the audience was delighted with the players and with their presentation of Julius Caesar.

High school courses in the drama have produced in most of us a decided prejudice against Shakespeare. The traditional pedantic methods of dull analysis and dreary lecture have destroyed all the beauty of Shakespeare and other dramatists for us: in its rightful place lingers memories of long, boring hours of dispirited class room discussion by teachers without enthusiasm for their subject and of wearying reports by students to whom the disinterest of the instructors had been transmitted.

It is not unnatural that these memories should produce in us an actual abhorrence for Shakespeare and other literary figures studied in a similar manner. Likewise the beauty and stimulating intellectual qualities of the works of the great poets have been effectually destroyed for most of us by faulty methods of instruction and incompetent teachers.

The organization which appeared here last night is making a praisewarthy effort to present the vital, stimulating works of Shakespeare in all of their artistic beauty to the high schools and colleges of the country. Theirs is a rather thankless task. Receiving very little financial remuneration for their work, they have been appearing at high schools and colleges throughout the country for the past three years. Attendance at a single Shakespeare performance by competent actors is more beneficial to the student than innumerable classroom recitations and lectures of the dull, academic sort usually included in high school courses in the drama.

Students over the entire country would profit considerably if formation of other organizations similar to the Shakespeare Players were encouraged and performances presented frequently by the mat every high school and college. These performances would do much to supplement courses in the drama and make them interesting and stimulating, rather than the painfully listless periods of scholastic drudgery that most of them now represent.

Oh, Ye Delicious Fables!

That the affairs of men are today governed largely by a knowledge of cold and scientific facts, rather than by beliefs in such half-shadowy things as fables and legends, is no doubt fully realized by all of us. Yet there is a great deal of this myth stuff still figuring in our lives. Which of us did not take pleasure in hearing our local Dromgoole legend for the first time? What a delightful book Dr. Odum has written about the story of John Henry's driving the steam drill down! Such things are everywhere about us, in some way affecting the life and beliefs of even the most sceptic college man. They make life more livable.

They still help make history, too. It hasn't been many years since the Angels of Mons made history. If you don't remember their story you might take time to brush up your memory on it, one of the most sensational of all the World War traditions.

It goes like this:

In the summer of 1914 the shattered British troops were falling back through Belgium and northern France before the invading Germans. The British were greatly outnumbered, there was no relief in sight, their artillery couldn't begin to cope with the German artillery. It looked as if the whole army would be chased into the English Channel.

Then a strange thing happened. The soldiers noticed that they had a new rear guard. Shadowy, gigantic figures appeared in the battle rack from nowhere to smite the advancing Germans with invisible arrows. The German pursuit was delayed. The ghostly defenders gave the British time to reform their lines, and a seemingly inevitable defeat was averted.

The story went all through the British army. The "Angels of Mons" were taken on faith by hundreds of Tommies, to say nothing of millions of people back home. Divine intervention was believed to have saved the British army.

Now Colonel Friedrich Herzenwirth, formerly of the Imperial German Intelligence Service, says it was only a trick of the German Intelligence Service, which miscalculated the results rather badly. He declares that German airplanes carrying movie projectors hovered over the British lines and projected their pictures on the cloud banks, in the hope that the ghostly apparitions would fill the British with terror and complete the route. The same stunt, says Colonel Herzenwirth, worked beautifully on the Russian front; but in Flanders it backfired, and instead of making the British run away it strengthened their morale enormously, making them feel that angels from above were fighting for them.

He may be right for all we know, and he may be wrong; but really, it doesn't matter very much. The truth of a legend, the mechanics of its origin, is never important. All that counts is the legend's effect. Men have lived by a great many strange stories; and we do not need to track these stories down to their starting points. Hard facts don't amount to so much as we suppose. It is what we believe that is important.

The Angels of Mons served their turn. It doesn't make the slightest difference whether they were caused by German movie cameras, simple hallucinations, or imaginative war correspondents. They lifted men's hearts for a while. That is all we need to know about them.

The Proposed Student Federation

For several months now the proposition of a North Carolina Federation of Students has been considered informally by the student body officials of Carolina, Duke, and State. Although no definite official action has been taken as yet in this or any other institution of the state, recent public statements made by the student body presidents of Duke and State indicate that these institutions are willing to cooperate with Carolina in organizing the federation in the near future.

The federation movement got underway definitely at an informal meeting Tuesday night, which was sponsored by Ray Farris, president of the student body, Ralph Greene, president of the senior class and John Lang, speaker of the Phi Assembly. The merits of the proposed intercollegiate organization were discussed at length, the decision being reached to call an organization meeting about April 28.

The proposed North Carolina Federation of Students grows out of a need which has been greatly enlarged by the phenomenal growth of the colleges and universities of the state in recent years. The federation will afford a medium for the discussion of problems which are common to all the collegiate institutions of the state.

Owing to the fact that the colleges of North Carolina are close to each other, it is quite natural that rivalry between them should be very keen. This is especially true of Duke and Carolina, which are separated by the short space of twelve miles. Both are leaders not only in the state, but in southern and national circles. The proposed federation would enable leaders of these and the other colleges of the state to get together and "thrash out" problems which would otherwise develop into hard feelings and bitterness. This is the prime idea in the proposed organization.

The success of the recent Duke - Carolina conference at Chapel Hill, which was sponsored by the literary societies of the two institutions, has lent considerable impetus to the idea of the federation. Similar meetings at which all of the colleges of North Carolina will be represented will, it is believed, solve the problem of undesirable rivalry. "A family of colleges working for the betterment of educational conditions in North Carolina" is the motto of the sponsors of the federation movement.

We heartily endorse the movement for a North Carolina Federation of Students and anticipate a resultant betterment of intercollegiate relationships.

Readers' Opinions

OPPORTUNITIES IN THE PRISON SERVICE

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Plans are being made to professionalize the Federal prison service by enlisting high grade officers and by establishing a system of professional training and promotion on merit. In the belief that college-trained men may be interested in this type of work the leading colleges and universities in the country are being circularized. Any undergraduate or graduate who wishes to consider the possibility of entering the service is requested to write the Superintendent of Prisons, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

Prison work has long represented a career for college-trained men in European countries. It calls for intellectual and moral qualities of a high order. It offers opportunity for advancement to positions which are better paid than most college professorships. There are numerous other important positions to which a man of ability can rise with experience and training.

It is the purpose of our present training program to prepare men for these positions as well as for that of guard. An officers' training school has been established in New York City. All men enter the service as guards and are sent to the school for a four months' course. Here they receive instruction in such subjects as the mental and physical characteristics of the criminal, the causes of crime, the operation of probation and parole, the development of modern penology, etc. They are also instructed in the use of firearms, boxing and Japanese wrestling.

The aim of the course is not only to give officers a broad socialized viewpoint on the theoretical aspects of penology but also to prepare them for the actual problems which they will encounter in prison work. At the conclusion of the training course officers are assigned to one of the Federal penitentiaries at

By H. J. Galland

Nowhere, said the professional troupe of Shakespearean Players after their performance of Julius Caesar here last night in the Playmakers Theatre, have they met a finer group of hissers, booers, and general members of the crowd than the supers enlisted from the student body for the production here. The Carolina extras hissed, they said, almost professionally. Is that, we wonder, news for the Duke Chronicle?

According to the genial Dr. Collier Cobb, Chapel Hill weather is about as variable as any you are likely to find anywhere. Last week the violets warily peeped out, and finding the weather warm and favorable, pushed aside their much-vaunted shyness and appeared in profusion in many parts of the campus. And then along came snow during the early part of this week. It's a tough life the violets lead in Chapel Hill.

Just about now is the time when freshmen are looking over their goods and chattels in search of something pawnable with which to pay their fraternity initiation fees. Let them follow the worthy example of an ex-President of the United States. One Calvin Coolidge, citizen, was initiated into a fraternity at Amherst. When his son followed him there and into the same fraternity, Cal wrote the boy not to get a pin. The President had put his away for just such a purpose more than thirty years ago. We are informed that the rumor that Mr. Coolidge was in danger of being evicted from his college because of having been found tight is not true—at least not the kind of tight you mean.

Mr. Louis Graves records the fact that Mr. Madry of the News Bureau has two hats exactly alike, one to be worn while the other is at the cleaner's. We have an item more important even than that—Professor Howard Mumford Jones electrified the campus recently by appearing in a new hat.

Commenting on the alleged hard-heartedness of Engineering professors, the Chapel Hill Weekly asks "Are these engineering teachers shot through with a cruel streak? Or is it that any young man, after becoming accustomed to the ordinary undergraduate course, which a half-wit can conquer with a fair degree of application, is overpowered by the discovery that when he enters a professional school he has got to buckle down to real work?"

No, Mr. Graves, it isn't that. Granted that any half-wit can conquer an undergraduate course, provided he isn't too half-witted, its the chain-carrying that breaks the engineer down. Ask any member of a chain-gang, Mr. Graves, whether he is working for University credit or "wukkin' fo' the State," and you'll find that the reason for the haggard looks lies there.

"Chapel Hillians Should Go To Bed Early," headlines this journal. If its early in the morning, we agree.

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

Sunday, March 30 — Topic of the day: "The Quiet Place." (Read Matthew 4: 1-11) Key verse: "Then was Jesus led of the spirit up into the wilderness."

Meditation: "We are in our annual observance of the six weeks which Jesus spent in the wilderness. It has been called the period of temptation. But it was more than that; it was a period of preparation—a time of concentrated thought and calm meditation. Never were quiet hours more nedeed than they are today! 'Whirl is king,' is truer than when Aristophanes uttered the words. Our minds have been likened to a railway waiting - room where people bound hither and thither are assembled. It is hard for our distracted minds to attain unity of purpose and to select a destination. There is an old Russian custom according to which a person before starting on a journey sat down and spent half a minute in silence. We need daily quiet times that we may reduce life to order, and reflect on whither we are going."

Prayer: "Eternal God, who dost reveal thyself to those who earnestly seek thee, let our hearts be still that we may hear thee speek and may discern thy wise and holy counsel for our lives this day. Amen."

A busy week faces Carolina athletic teams beginning tomorrow. The baseball team has five games scheduled while the trackmen meet the strong Georgia Tech team here Saturday.

Cornell will furnish opposition to the Tar Heels Monday and Tuesday on Emerson field. Thursday Washington and Lee will play here while Friday and Saturday the team goes to Georgia for two games.

The Cornell games will furnish the first real test for the varsity nine as the game with Springfield last Thursday proved a hitting contest with the Tar Heels winning 18-7. However, the Ithaca nine is reputed strong again this season despite heavy losses by graduation. Washington and Lee and Georgia are southern conference foes and the Tar Heels will be anxious to chalk up wins against them.

With good records made in the "seasoning" meet with State College here Friday the Tar Heel runners will be set for the invasion of Georgia Tech Saturday. Headed by Ed Hamm, southern conference record holder in the sprints and the broad jump as well as holder of numerous records in the broad jump, and Doug Graydon, national interscholastic record holder in the javelin throw, the Georgians will give the varsity team a good meet. Graydon while a high school trackman in Little Rock, Ark., was one of the greatest all-round athletes ever produced in scholastic circles. His pairing with Hamm, a fellow townsman, gives the Tech team a nucleus for a high scoring outfit.

No other athletic events are definitely scheduled for the week, but the intramural baseball season will open and the tennis players are likely to get a match with some club team during the next few days.

GOLFERS WIN OVER STATE TEAM 15 - 3

The Carolina golf team swamped N. C. State, 15-3, over the Hope Valley Country Club course yesterday in its first match of the season.

Captain Chatham, Goodes and Stewart accounted for three points each from Mott, Rion and White in the morning's singles matches, and willis won 2 1-2 to Murray's 1-2, to give the Tar Heels a 11 1-2 to 1-2 lead for the morning's play.

In the afternoon's doubles, matches, and Willis won 2 1-2 points and won but 1-2 point from Mott and Murray, but Goodes and Stewart fared better and took three points from Rion and White to give the Tar Heels their 15-3 lead.

Charlie Chatham, Tar Heel captain, had low score for the day on a 75 for the morning round and a 77 for the afternoon for a total of 152. Stewart ran a close second with a 79 and a 74 for a total of 153.

Tournament Results

In the tennis matches yesterday afternoon several of the freshmen showed up well. Hines played his usual fast game, defeating Blauman in the second round of the tournament and winning from Lansford in the third round. In the upperclassman matches Yeomans and Rhett exhibited good playing. The match between Hendlin and Liskin was a very interesting one. Hendlin found his opponent a very steady player, but outplayed him to win 3-6, 6-2, 6-1.

Mr. Kenfield feels that his men are in fine shape to meet the Davis Cup men. If any matches are arranged they will be played at Pinehurst. Practice has been held up for some time because of the weather and wet courts.

City of Panama Enlarged

Panama City, Mar. 29.—(IP)—The congestion of the city of Panama is expected to be greatly relieved by the completion of a fill on the water front which adds 26 acres to the city, allowing more space for the erection of buildings.

A method has been discovered in Europe of using electric current to probe miles into the earth to discover the elements there and the heat of the earth at various depths. One of the outstanding results of the process is the discovery that the earth in its lower regions is not nearly so hot as had been supposed.

The harbinger of Spring in the Northeastern and middle northern states—the robin—now remains in great numbers throughout the winter in these states, and comes out to chirp every time the sun brings a thaw.

Intramural Tennis Tournament To Be During The Quarter

Responding to the demand of a number of students, the Intramural department has announced that it will conduct both fraternity and dormitory leagues in tennis this spring, the leagues to be run similar to the football, basketball and baseball leagues. Mr. John F. Kenfield, varsity tennis coach, has volunteered to assist both in the coaching and administration of these two leagues.

It will be necessary for the dormitories and fraternities who enter to have at least a four-man team, as team matches will consist of three singles and two doubles. In addition to the regular eligibility regulations of the Intramural department, there will be the additional requirement that the first ten men on the varsity ranking board and the first six men on the freshman ranking board will not be eligible to compete in these matches.

Separate tennis courts will be reserved each afternoon for the use of intramural team matches only.

Gold madals will be given to members of the winning team, and in addition Mr. Kenfield is going to give a suitable trophy to the winning team.

Letters have been sent to all athletic managers of the dormitories and fraternities advising them of these leagues. Entry cards were enclosed. Managers are urged to return their entries as soon as possible so that schedules may be formulated and actual play begin.

SHAKESPEAREAN GROUP PRESENTS JULIUS CAESAR

Famous Roman Drama Presented Here As Part Of Playmaker Series.

(By Howard M. Lee)

James Hendrickson and Claire Bruce, and their Shakespearean Players presented Julius Caesar last night in the Playmakers Theatre before an appreciative audience. The main troupe was composed of the original Stratford Players, and several of the minor parts were taken by University students. The players were received with much enthusiasm by the audience.

This program was a special feature of the regular Carolina Playmakers season. The Shakespearean Players usually appear before colleges and schools, including some of the largest Universities in the United States.

The group is composed of seven experienced players of national fame.

Mr. Hendrickson has had ten years of varied experience, including two years with Mr. Fritz Leiber's Shakespearean company. More recently he had the honor of appearing with Mr. Robert B. Mantell in his last two seasons. Mr. Hendrickson played the part of Brutus during Mr. Mantell's illness.

Miss Bruce, also for two seasons in the Mantell company, has appeared in many New York companies, notably those of John Cort, Maurice Gest, and a season with the far-famed Theatre Guild.

A few of the minor parts were taken by University students.

While the performances have been correctly staged in every detail the emphasis is laid principally on the force of the acting, the quality of the reading and the dignity and clarity with which the age-old lines are enunciated.

Varsity Nine Meets Cornell Team Tomorrow And Tuesday

Tar Heels Expected To Show Good Hitting Strength In Games Here.

STARTING HURLER HAS NOT BEEN SELECTED

Probably Wright and Fleming Will Work Against Ithaca Team; Outfield Will Show Variety of Hitters.

With five games carded for the coming week, the Tar Heel baseball team will get its first real test against Cornell Monday and Tuesday. Washington and Lee invades Emerson Field Thursday for a game while Friday and Saturday the Tar Heels will play Georgia at Athens, Ga.

Although the varsity swamped Springfield Thursday 18-7, little was learned of the team except that it possesses terrific hitting power. Rand, Whitehead and Lufty are fixtures at second, short and third respectively. Captain Jim Maus was tried out at first after the first innings of play and looked good. However, whether he remains there or not will be decided on how well Kushner and Potter, reserve catchers, and Jackson, first baseman, show up against varsity competition.

The five games will give Coach Ashmore an opportunity to look over his hurling staff. Fleming and Wright, veterans, showed a good brand of pitching against the Springfield club while Longest and the two Edwards brothers also looked good. But the rookies are yet to step into a game without the big lead they had Thursday.

Outfield prospects look good. Seven men furnish the coaches with good hitting and fielding power. Henry House, whose long hits last season featured several contests, will be ready for regular duty from now on. He and Phil Sher, centerfielder, are the two veterans remaining over from last year. In addition to these there are Paxton, Davis, McKinney, Crouch and Branch who are likely to see much service in the outer gardens. McKinney was one of the stars on the freshman team two years ago. His heavy bat sent in many runs and this year he is again looking good.

Following the Cornell contests here tomorrow and Tuesday the Tar Heels meet Washington and Lee Thursday in their first defense of the Tri-State league championship. Another southern conference foe will be played Friday and Saturday when the team journeys to Athens for the contests with Georgia.

Johnson-Prevost Move To New Home

Johnson-Prevost Dry Cleaning Co., who for sometime have satisfactorily catered to the cleaning needs of the campus, are now in their new home in the McRae building immediately across from the Post Office on the corner of Main and Henderson streets.

The new quarters of the local concern are much larger and better equipped to carry on their increasing business to the satisfaction of their large clientele. Considerable new equipment has been added at the same time, according to the manager, Mr. Marks.

Football Notice

All varsity football men not participating in another sport are requested to meet at Emerson stadium at 3:15 Monday afternoon.

CAMPUS BASEBALL LEAGUES TO OPEN NEXT WEDNESDAY

Announcement has come from the Intramural department that the dormitory and fraternity baseball leagues will open Wednesday, April 2, continuing for about seven weeks.

It was also announced that entries would be held open until Monday. Several fraternities and dormitories have not as yet been heard from, and Intramural officials are anxious for them to enter. No more entries will be received after Monday, so athletic managers are urged to get their entries in by that time.

Schedules for next week's play will be published in Tuesday's Tar Heel.

RELATION OF MAN AND APE TO BE DETERMINED BY STUDY OF GORILLAS

New York, Mar. 29.—(IP)—How closely related are man and ape?

This question is about to receive an authoritative answer. Two scientists, sponsored by Columbia University and the American Museum of Natural History, have just returned from Africa with the embalmed bodies of two huge adult gorillas—the first ever to be brought into civilization's laboratories in such complete condition.

The bodies are to be dissected for a thorough anatomical comparison with the human body.

The leader of the expedition is still in Africa. He is Henry C. Raven, associate curator of comparative human anatomy at the museum. His associates, professors at Columbia, have returned to resume their class room duties after an eight-month absence.

Coach Crayton Rowe requests that all candidates out for intramural boxing report at the Tin Can at 3 o'clock on Monday. This will enable them to finish practice in time to see the ball game Monday afternoon.

ACTRESS ACCEPTS DARES

Ruth Chatterton's theatrical career has been a series of dares.

When she was fifteen years old she went to Washington, D. C., to spend a Christmas vacation from an exclusive southern finishing school. The vacation was spent in a round of matinees. She became stage-struck, and told her friends that some day she would be a great theatrical star.

The other girls laughed at her but failed to discourage her. Then they dared her to go on the stage. She answered by getting a job the very next night in the chorus of a show that was playing the national capital.

Five years ago a motion picture producer offered Ruth Chatterton a huge salary to desert the stage for the screen. She turned down the offer and word went around Hollywood that Ruth Chatterton would never appear in pictures.

But about 18 months ago she was in the film capital again. A prominent director asked her to take a screen test, "just for fun." She refused. He looked at her again and said, "You are afraid you won't make good on the screen, aren't you?"

That was a dare. She made the test the next day and it was pronounced a success. That test won her over to the screen as a medium for her art. A short time later she was signed by Paramount to play opposite Emil Jannings in "Sins of the Fathers."

Then came the talking films. Her first audience on the audible screen was in "The Dummy." Then came "The Doctor's Secret," "Charming Sinners" and "The Laughing Lady."

Her fifth all-talking production for Paramount is "Sarah and Son," based on the best-selling novel of the same name by Timothy Shea. It is a picture of a mother's struggle to regain her young son who had been lost to her through the circumstances of hardship and poverty.

"Sarah and Son" comes to the Carolina Theatre Monday.

HELEN PUGH TO GIVE RECITAL IN SWAIN APRIL 7

Young Pianist To Appear Here Under Auspices Student Entertainment Committee.

Helen Pugh, 22-year old pianist from Asheville, who has received wide recognition as being a young musical genius, will appear here on April 7th at 8:30 in Swain hall. She comes under the auspices of the Student Entertainment Committee as the next number arranged by them for this quarter.

Since the time of her first appearance in recital, when she was five years old, her genius has been recognized and acclaimed by such men as Walter Damrosch and Josef Hofman. The latter expressed the conviction, "That child will develop into one of the great musicians." Although she has given a number of concerts from the time she was a child it is only recently that she has been appearing regularly before the public. Her parents and her patroness, Mrs. Crosby Adams, of Montreat, preferred that she spend her time in studying and perfecting her talents.

Miss Pugh recently appeared at Ormond, Fla., as piano soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, one of the foremost orchestras in the United States. The following appreciative account of the evenings offerings appeared in the Daytona News Journal:

"A slender girl in her early twenties stepped to the front of the stage last night at Peabody auditorium, took her place at a grand piano behind which were ranged the eighty-five players of the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra under the direction of Henri Verbrugghen, and gave a flawless interpretation of a Grieg concerto, with full symphonic accompaniment.

"She was Miss Helen Pugh of Asheville, N. C., and Ormond, guest player with the orchestra, to whose youth and ability Conductor Verbrugghen graciously yielded not only his position in the front of the stage but all his skill and experience as a director.

Sartorial Sway

By Beau Gent

The dogma of art that beauty is a curve was laid down by Hogarth, the English painter. The eminent German, Mengs, went farther and declared that beauty is a serpentine curve. Fashion, however, seems to disagree with both of them. It maintains that the angle, by its very unconformity, is, in a rugged, masculine way, more pleasing. And this tendency toward angular effects one will find more pronounced alike in evening coats and evening waistcoats and in the spade-shaped tails instead of the shovel-shaped.

Waistcoats ore deviating from the orthodox sloping contour of the lapels. They are now cut with squashish or abruptly slanted lines at the bottom, lending a sharp cornered effect. The waistcoat thusly assumes a more characterful appearance. It is better looking than the set look of the conventional "U" or "V" cut.

Warbled a poet, "Oh, nose! I am as proud of thee as any mountain of its snows; I gaze on thee and feel that pride a Roman knows." The practice of wearing a white linen handkerchief with a white shirt is spreading. It is symbolic of the simplicity which underlies true fashion and sound taste. Yet, though in effects less bold, the colored handkerchief is as good form as ever.

Perhaps the smartest handkerchiefs are those of white linen with diminutive figures in offset colors, as black, green, blue, purple, tan, etc. Or these colors may be superimposed upon a white background.

The cap gave way to the general acceptance of the lightweight felt hat some years ago and has since been the drifter and ne'er-do-well of fashion. Yet, because of its nifty appearance, youthfulness, and undeniable kinship with sport it is coming back.

One must remember that the smartness of one's cap is all in the way it's worn, for the line of demarcation between sportsman and highwayman is thin. It should be swung on, rather than drawn on, and kept at an angle a bit devil-may-care.

It is extremely important that the cap be well made. It should be of soft-nap woolens and the visor should be neither too short nor too long.

We saw two very smart looking young Carolinians for the first time in two years. Try to spot them. One wore a suit of dark brown, plain, somewhat lighter brown overcoat, brown, shirt of wine red and white stripes with dicky bosom, white collar, tie of dark red satin, and muffler of dark brown with wine red all over the pattern.

The second Beau combined with a suit of navy blue, and dark brown overcoat, a dark tan shirt, collar to match, tie of dark blue striped with tan, and muffler of tan with dark blue figures.

We, too, thought we were a well-dressed man until we read in the Beaunash column of causerie that the National Association of Merchant Tailors through its annual bulletin of What's What and What's Not has decided that it takes three dinner suits to make a well-turned-out man. These are the single-breasted cut, the double-breasted affair, and the shawl-collar jacket and they are said to be the trinity necessary to draw the correct line of demarcation among the different degrees of formality.

TAKING OF CENSUS BEGINS APRIL 2ND

Enumerators, with Government Blanks, Will Seek a Variety of Iinformation

CO-OPERATION IS ASKED

The enumeration of the inhabitants of Chapel Hill for the 1930 census will begin next Wednesday, April 2. June L. Cheek is the enumerator here. He will go from house to house, equipped with the blanks issued to him by the government, and will seek information about every household.

The census bureau has for its task not merely the counting of the people in the United States. It is to collect data about racial origins, the relative numerical strength of various races, occupations, conditions of employment, the division of the population between the two sexes, immigration and emigration, migrations from state to state, and the growth or decline of industries in every region.

Success in this project depends largely upon the co-operation of the people. Everybody is asked by the government to give the desired information fully and freely, to the end that the canvass may be completed rapidly and that the final report may be as accurate as possible.

Atlanta, Leavenworth, and McNeil Island (near Tacoma, Washington), the Industrial Reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio, the Federal Detention Headquarters in New York City, or one of several prison camps in various parts of the country.

A man enters the Federal prison service as a guard with a base pay of $1,620 per year and allowances which bring the total remuneration to $1,860, the equivalent of a beginner's salary in the teaching profession. Within the guards' grade it is possible to reach a salary of $2,100 a year, and salaries in administrative positions for which one may qualify after experience range from $2,100 to $7,000.

College men with specialized training for prison work have their place in the progressive penal program laid down by the Attorney General and the Superintendent of Prisons and embodied in bills now before Congress. An urgent appeal is made to the undergraduates and recent graduates of American colleges and universities to consider entering the Federal prison service at this time.

Very truly yours,
SANFORD BATES,
Supt. of Prisons.

First Day Of Balloting Shows Non-Drinkers Favor Repeal Or Modification Of Dry Law

Less Than Sixth Voting So Far Indicate That They Use Intoxicants; Editor Urges Students To Participate In Poll

CLOSES WEDNESDAY NOON

Sentiment in regard to the prohibition law on the campus following the first day's balloting favors either modification or repeal of the 18th amendment with a majority of those voting the first day voting as total abstainers. The voting yesterday was light; however, the Tar Heel is expecting a heavier vote today and tomorrow. The balloting closes Wednesday afternoon. All students are urged by Glenn Holder, editor of the Tar Heel, to vote.

In the balloting yesterday less than a sixth of the voters expressed themselves as being in favor of enforcement of the prohibition laws. Despite the fact that the non-drinkers numbered more than half of the voters a majority of those favored repeal of the 18th amendment.

The repealers and the non-drinkers numbered exactly the same, while practically all of those voting as occasional drinkers favored modification of the laws.

Until Wednesday afternoon a ballot box will be maintained in the Y lobby for the voters. The three questions are whether the voter does not drink, drinks occasionally or does not drink at all; while the voting on the 18th amendment is the same as that in the Literary Digest; i. e., enforcement, modification or repeal of the 18th amendment. Ballots will be printed in today's and tomorrow's issues of the Tar Heel.

Chemical Engineers To Hear Students

The University student branch of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers will hold its regular meeting at 7 o'clock this evening in room 201 Venable hall. The program will consist of a series of talks by student speakers who will present subjects of interest to the chemical engineering students.

W. E. Eskew, senior chemical engineering student, will speak on "Bleacheries," and Lee Richardson will speak on current scientific events of especial interest to chemical engineers. In addition to these two speakers, there will be another short talk by a member of the local branch of the institute.

The local student branch of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers is composed of a group of chemical engineering students who have become affiliated with the national organization. The group meets twice a month, once for business and once for the presentation of a program. During the spring quarter the institute hopes to be able to have several prominent chemical engineers address them at their meetings.

All chemical engineering students are eligible for membership in the institute, and the officers of the local branch request that all students taking this course attend the meeting this evening.

DEBATERS MEET MARYLAND HERE

Third Home Debate To Begin In Gerrard Hall At 8:30 Tonight.

The third home debate of the year will take place in Gerrard hall tonight at 8:30 when the Carolina debaters meet the forensic artists from the University of Maryland on "Resolved, That the nations of the world should adopt some plan of complete disarmament of all forces, except those which are needed for police purposes." The local debaters, J. A. Wilkinson and G. P. Carr, will uphold the affirmative side of the issue.

In accordance with the method which has been used here for two years, the decision will be rendered by vote of the audience. All those present will be asked to vote both before and after the debate, the team changing the more people from one side to the other being declared the winner.

The question of disarmament is an important one in national and international affairs at the present time, and one which has been debated very extensively of late. Practically every college and university in the United States has participated in one or more intercollegiate debate on some phase of the disarmament controversy. The debate tonight promises to be one which will be very edifying to all who attend. The Carolina debaters are both experienced men. The Maryland outfit is reported to be exceptionally strong. In consideration of the wide range of appeal which the disarmament question has, it is expected to draw an audience not only from the student body, but from the ranks of the faculty and townspeople as well.

Phi Assembly To Discuss Dry Laws

The resolution, "Resolved, That the prohibition law should be enforced," will be discussed at the meeting of the Philanthropic Assembly tonight, according to an announcement by the speaker. The regular business will be brought before the assembly.

Di Senate To Hear Rector At Meeting

THREE NUMBERS ON SPRING CARD

Entertainment Committee Completes Program for Quarter; Helen Pugh Here on April 7.

The Student Entertainment Program for this year has three more numbers, the recitals by Helen Pugh, on April 7, and the Cincinatti Chamber Orchestra, on May 10, respectively, and the series of lectures to be given by Lorado Taft, on May 19, 20, and 21.

Helen Pugh is a young musical genius of this state. Since babyhood her talent has been recognized by great musicians such as Walter Damrosch and Seph Hofman. It is only recently, however, that she has begun to appear regularly before the public. At every appearance she has received unusually favorable press notices, considering her youth. Miss Pugh lives in Asheville and has received the greater part of her training in that town.

The second program for the quarter will be given by the Cincinatti Chamber Orchestra. This group of musicians under the direction of Walter Herrmann, is recognized to be one of the best orchestras in America. They have had numerous engagements all over the country.

Lorado Taft, who will give three lectures on the evenings of May 19, 20, and 21, is one of the great sculptors of the day. He is an easy and fluent speaker who never fails to interest his audiences. His lectures are interesting as well as educational.

Mr. Taft has been connected with the Art Institute of Chicago for 35 years. He holds the title of Professional Lecturer on the History of Art at the University of Chicago, and is a non-resident professor of art at the University of Illinois. In addition, he is a member of the National Academy of Design, and of the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

The best known of Mr. Taft's works are "The Solitude of the Soul," located in the Art Institute of Chicago, "The Blind," which was inspired by Maeterlink's drama by that name, and "The Fountain of the Great Lakes," which is in Grant Park in Chicago.

Mr. Taft has written two books, "The History of American Sculpture," published in 1904, and "Modern Tendencies in Sculpture," which came out in 1924.

Esperanto Club

The Esperanto Club will meet this afternoon at 5 o'clock in 109 Saunders hall. All interested in study of the language are asked by officers of the club to be present.

The vote stood 33 for Yarborough and 15 for Jones.

Yarborough has served since the fall of 1927 as reporter, editorial writer, associate editor, columnist, sports editor, and full time managing-editor of the Tar Heel for the past year.

Since 1926 the official nominees of the staff have been: J. K. Madry, 1926; Jud Ashby, 1927; Walter Spearman, 1928; and Glenn Holder, 1929.

SOPHS TO HOLD DANCE APRIL 11

Cooper Makes Statement Concerning Annual Class Affair; In Gymnasium.

The annual sophomore class dance will be held Friday night, April 11, according to an announcement by John Phil Cooper, of the class dance committee. Cooper states that plans are under way for the engagement of a widely known orchestra, and that definite announcement will be made at an early date.

The dance committee plans to have elaborate decorations, featuring the class colors, Cooper announces. The usual German Club rules of conduct on the floor will be enforced. A number of features are being planned for the dance, Cooper states, although the final arrangements have not been completed.

Several social affairs will be staged the week-end. The Grail will hold a dance Saturday night, April 12, and the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity will entertain Friday night. The sophomore dance will be held in the gymnasium. The dance committee, appointed by President Larry Johnson, is composed of John Phil Cooper, Haywood Weeks and Edward Yarborough.

Italian moving picture houses are showing mostly American talkies.

ALUMNI LOYALTY FUND UNDERWAY

Meetings To Be Held In Rocky Mount and Wilson This Week.

Two city-wide campaigns will be held this week in Wilson and Rocky Mount in behalf of the Alumni Loyalty Fund, it was announced yesterday at the office of the fund. A meeting of Rocky Mount alumni will be held tonight and a similar gathering will take place in Wilson on Thursday night of this week.

Following the two meetings an intensive campaign will be waged among the University alumni of the two cities under the direction of a committee of prominent alumni in an effort to obtain subscriptions to the Loyalty Fund. The Rocky Mount committee consists of Dr. I. W. Rose, K. D. Battle, F. E. Winslow, T. J. Pearsall, T. L. Simmons and S. L. Arrington. The Wilson committee is composed of Oliver G. Rands, T. H. Woodward and David Isear. Many present residents of Chapel Hill and members of the faculty remember these men during their student days.

Felix A. Grisette, director of the fund, will be the principal speaker at both meetings and will actively supervise the campaigns in the two communities.

Three Grail Dances

Treasurer "Red" Greene Announces Inauguration of New Ticket System.

In keeping with its usual policy in the past, the Order of the Grail will give three dances during the spring quarter. The dates for these entertainments have been set for April 12, April 26, and May 17. Since several other organizations are entertaining on these same week-ends, it appears that the spring quarter will again be the outstanding social season of the academic year.

"Red" Greene, treasurer of the Grail, has announced that a new system of selling tickets will be inaugurated on the occasion of the first of this series. A desk for ticket sales will be placed in the lobby of the "Y" on the Friday preceding the dances. Tickets may be purchased there anytime during the day. This system will do away with the unpleasant necessity of standing in line for tickets at the rear of the gymnasium before every dance.

Fires Extinguished

The Chapel Hill fire department was called out at 8:05 Monday morning to extinguish a fire at the home of Mrs. S. M. Pickard on McAuley street. The blaze was extinguished with destruction of but a few shingles on the roof.

Later in the morning the local department was summoned by Mrs. O. B. Tinny, of Tinney circle in the eastern part of the village. A barn at the rear of her residence was menaced by a grass fire, but was not damaged.

Farris Moves Date to Friday for Benefit of Students; Candidates for Student Body President To Make Talks.

Y. M. C. A. NOMINATIONS

With the nominations to be made this morning at chapel period in Gerrard hall and all elections set for Friday the political situation assumes a position of first importance on the campus. Class officers will be nominated at a meeting of the classes tonight at 8 o'clock in the following places: rising senior class, Gerrard hall; rising junior class, auditorium Murphey building; and rising sophomore class, Di hall, New West building.

Ray Farris, president of the student body, announced last night that the purpose in holding the elections Friday instead of Thursday was to allow the campus time to survey the field of candidates with the view of selecting the most qualified man for each position and to allow every candidate for president of the student body an opportunity to appear before the students.

Nominations by staffs were made Sunday and yesterday. With the exception of the Tar Heel nomination none of the others had been reported to the Tar Heel. Will Yarborough, managing editor of this year's paper, was nominated Sunday night by the Tar Heel staff. Other nominations are reported in the account of the Publications Union Board report.

Nominees for the four Y. M. C. A. offices were made during the latter part of the winter quarter. They are as follows: president, Ed Hamer; vice-president, Joe Eagles, Ike Manning and Claude Farrell; secretary, Sam Gorham, Harry Finch, Jack Dungan and John Miller; and for treasurer, K. C. Ramsay and F. M. James.

Candidates for the following campus offices may be nominated this morning: president of the student body, editor of the Tar Heel, editor of the Yackety Yack, editor of the Magazine supplement, editor of the Buccaneer, president of the Y. M. C. A., vice-president of the Y, secretary of the Y, treasurer of the Y, three members of the Publications Union Board, two members of the Debate Council, president of the Atheltic Association and vice-president of the Athletic Association.

In each of the rising classes nominations for the offices of president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and student council will be made.

Thursday morning the candidates nominated for the presidency of the student body will appear before the student body in Gerrard hall at chapel period to state their respective platforms.

The ballot boxes will be placed in the Y lobby and in front of Gerrard hall and will be open from 9 o'clock Friday morning until 5 that afternoon.

President Farris stated that he wished the students to aid him in conducting a clean election.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Allowing for climatic and other conditions, the most civilized nations are the best washed.—Dr. Thomas Oliver.

The Changing Attitude Toward Prohibition

A few years ago North Carolina editorial and ministerial sewing circles would have bedecked themselves in their most lurid war paints had the student newspaper at the state university conducted a poll on whether or not the Prohibition Amendment should be repealed. Armed with cudgels of righteous self-indignation, they would have gone gunning for the student editor's scalp—and very probably would have returned home in triumph to nail it upon their pulpits and typewriter tables.

But it is indicative of the changing attitude toward prohibition that not a single moralistic tomahawk has been whetted since the Daily Tar Heel announced its prohibition poll. And we have no cause for apprehension concerning the safety of our editorial top-knot.

The poll will continue through noon Wednesday, with ballots appearing on the front page today and tomorrow. Ballots will be filled out and deposited in the box at the "Y" lobby; the progress of the voting will be observed with considerable interest on our part. Similar votes are being taken at the University of Virginia, Wake Forest and other southern institutions, while student publications at several of the more prominent northern universities have already conducted prohibition polls. At the end of its third week the Literary Digest Poll shows a considerable majority of the more than a million votes cast in favor of repeal, and it is the subject of keen interest all over the world.

There is little doubt that the country is becoming weary of the farcial role prohibition has assumed. It has dealt a mighty blow to America in its most sensitive spot—the pants pocket. Conservative estimates place the loss of revenue from the abolition of taxes on intoxicating beverages at billions of dollars during the past decade, and the cost of prohibition enforcement has contributed a few billions more to the total. Besides, even the hypocrisy-dulled sensibilities of the American public have become nauseated with the prohibition sham.

Evidently public opinion will compel changes within the near future in the substance or application of the prohibition laws. Whether these changes will take the direction of repeal of the 18th Amendment, modification of the Volstead Law, or continuance and strict enforcement of both is a matter of conjecture. The Daily Tar Heel Poll should assist in a modest way to determine the present status of the changing attitude toward Prohibition.

Another Chance

Already the collegiate year is two-thirds gone. We are running the last lap of the annual curricular race. The charms of the winter quarter have passed away. The spring quarter is here and one week a thing of the past. Honor roll students and those who "aren't so hot" academically have the same chance to make good in this final part of the collegiate year.

At this season of the year there can be no doubt that 'hope springs eternally from the breast of mortal man.' Time and again when the darkest moments of despair visit the college man he sees, though not always clearly, better luck and greater opportunities in the dawning. Indeed, mortal man could not endure the dull, drear, drab realities of a life governed by natural laws of unchangeable consequence were it not for the balm of hope that comes to him in the darkest moments of his earthly pilgrimage. Regardless of the records which we made during the past quarter, there is still an open and unmolested opportunity to brace up, breathe the fragrant breezes of Spring, and make up for lost time.

To say the least, there is one advantage in this practice of dividing the regular collegiate year into three equal parts with recesses between each of the divisions. Reference is made here to the absence from the monotony of classroom work and extracurricular activities—the absence from humdrum duties which never fail to engender a monotony and a dread which is clearly of the ruinous variety. It is essential that the strain of student life be relieved periodically. The Spring recess of a few days ago, moreover, afforded both the occasion and the opportunity to ponder over the mistakes and failings of the winter quarter.

We all have time, and plenty of it; the length of the day is universal. Yet some accomplish great things, while others know not the satisfaction that comes from experiencing success. 'Tis all a matter of thoughtful effort.

To him who has let the past quarter slide by without accomplishing anything of note, anything to be proud of, a new quarter has opened her gateway of success just as wide as to him who has done great things in former days. There is still time to "get going." What is your choice for the spring quarter of 1930, fellow student? Time will tell.—J. C. W.

JULIUS CAESAR

By WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

Before a packed house James Hendrickson and Claire Bruce presented the Shakespeare Players in Julius Caesar at the Playmaker Theatre Saturday night. This is one of the few times that a professional group of actors has appeared in Chapel Hill and perhaps expectations were more than they should have been. However, the play was not badly done, and the audience came away apparently well pleased.

James Hendrickson himself, playing the part of Brutus, gave a good performance. Better than the other actors he gave his lines enunciation and force, bringing Brutus to full life. Though for the reviewer the opening of the play was somewhat marred by the overemphasis which Stanley Cobley gave to the lines of Caius Cassius, the powerful voice of Brutus with clear and strong accent set him at ease again.

Emmet Shields as Julius Caesar did not come quite up to expectations. He was too frail and awkward to portray convincingly the majestic and commanding personality of the great warrior and statesman. He was much better in the part of Trebonius. Neither was Webster Patterson much more convincing as Marc Antony, although his rendition of Caesar's funeral oration was passably well done. Claire Bruce, playing both the parts of Portia and Lucius, gave an admirable performance. In the former part she carried herself well and spoke her lines with none of the monotony and stiltedness which one always fears. As Lucius, she carried the part of the servant boy in good fashion.

The performance was well staged and the simplicity of the settings carried out the spirit of the Elizabethan stage. Several University students took parts in the street scenes and as conspirators, doing well with so little rehearsal.

The sincerity of the company was admirable and its purpose deserves praise. The truthfulness with which they rendered the famous tragedy was in good taste.

Readers' Opinions

BEAU GENT, THE CONNOISSEUR

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

There is, among the student body at this University, a reputable young gent known, thru the Daily Tar Heel as "Beau Gent." Of this young savant we know little: that is, of his past experience and learning which would qualify him to be a competent judge of the well-dressed man's attire, he has made no statement. Thus we can not ascertain the source of his knowledge; but this we do know: from some source he has acquired an adequate understanding to expostulate extensively upon his favorite subject to the student body of the University.

Now we do not wish to deprive the Tar Heel of one of its most reliable columnists, but we would like to request from Beau Gent, that he not be so dogmatically emphatic in his discourses on that which is proper and that which is not. Frequently it is quite embarrassing to the very students whom it is his purpose to inform. For instance, a few weeks ago he said, in his column, that it is absolutely wrong to wear tan shoes with gray trousers. In fact, they should NEVER be used in such a combination as this. This may be true, and far be it from us to disagree with the source of "correctness," but what is to become of the student who can afford only one pair of shoes? This, I admit, may sound absurd to those students who are termed the "best dressed," but it is a fact: there are many students who wear one pair of shoes incessantly because they cannot afford two pairs at the same time. Then how embarrassing it must be for them, should this pair happen to be a tan pair!

Now Beau Gent surely knows what is the proper thing to wear, and knowing as he does, he surely would not wear anything that is not correct. Nevertheless, we saw him a few days ago when his apparel looked, to one who knows nothing of proper dress except through the opinions that are prompted by observation, little better than he would have looked in gray trousers and tan shoes. This was his combination: a yellow sweater and a yellow tie that blended perfectly, but a blue shirt that formed a horrible contrast to the "reddish" brown suit he was wearing and the yellow sweater. We do not doubt in the least the competence of Beau Gent in judging proper dress, but we do wonder if he is immune to any slight error in his own dress.

Cornelius Williams

TWO VERY DARK HORSES

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

The friends of Shirley Carter, sophomore, and Anthony Buttitta, freshman, knowing they belong to no political rings, or fraternities, and not being swayed by Sartorial Sways, nor belonging to the literary cornupias, or the Student Council, the Elks, or the Moose, announce the candidacy of these two esoteric aesthetes, yet unknown for the joint editorship of the Daily Tar Heel.

The best plank in their platform seems to be without a gloomy shadow of a doubt that neither one has contributed to either publication on the campus, thus escaping the contamination of unoriginality, and leaving them free, if elected, to delete their supporters with brilliancy heretofore unhad. (A sample of this originality is hereby presented for the edification of the voters.)

Having contributed to the more successful magazines, viz. The American Mercury, New York Daily News, Vanity Fair, The New Masses, The Mercurie de France and others, these capable candidates will undoubtedly bring up the standard of the Carolina publication and burden them with their superfluity of experience and training.

It behooves us to impress upon the impregnated minds of our cheerful and asinine voters, that even if their minds have been made up by politicians, they should throw cff the yoke of the common herd and vote for the two experienced dark-horses that threatens to envelop this great institution of our glorious forefathers.

To further impress their qualifications upon the dense perception of the supposedly Gentle Reader the following toe-nail sketch is deemed fitting and necessary.

Mr. Carter was born (and so was Mr. Buttitta) on a tramp steamer near Marseilles, France, 1907. He has been respectively a vagabond, gentleman of fortune, Socialist, and conspirator against the U. S. Government in behalf of the coming Socialistic Regime, and gentleman and wanderer at large.

Mr. Buttitta is the illegimate son of the Prince of Nomania, adopted by Barnum and Baily for a series of Balloon tours to exploit the native taste for aviation. He respectfully, and has been, a parasite with Mr. Carter, living on his wit and the fruits of his ancestors and on the cigarettes he has purchased and dispenses during the Sunchurch hour.

Thus, dear voters, remember: "Freedom hath been hunted round the globe by these seekers after votes—so come! not like a quarry slave scourged to his dungeon, but as freemen of mind and soul and vote for those inimitable guardians of Liberty, Shirley R. Carter and Anthony J. Buttitta, Ltd., for the joint editorship of the Daily Tar Heel.

Inevitably yours,
Shirley R. Carter

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

Monday, April 1.—Topic of the day: "Using Difficulty" (Read II Corinthians 12: 1-10) Key verse: "I take pleasure in weakness."

Meditation: "St. Paul saw in his affliction an opportunity for finding joy. Sorrow and joy are inseparable. Lack of difficulty is not as desirable as we sometimes thoughtlessly assume. There is a story of a comfort-loving man who died and was borne to the other world, where he awoke to find his every wish gratified. He had a mansion suited to his taste, an unlimited wardrobe, a laden table, and boundless entertainment. There was no effort, no struggle, no pain. He became bored beyond expression and exclaimed to his private attendant, 'I can't stand this everlasting bliss. I want to want things I can't have. I want to go to hell. To which the attendant with a shrug of his shoulders replied, 'And where do you think you are sir?' To throw hardships out of life is to throw out likewise its zest and relish."

Prayer: "O Lord, help us to be master-builders with thyself. Let all the events of the day become material for our valiant spirits. Give us a robust faith that by thine aid we may convert all things to good and make all things work together for good."

Wilson To Sail For Europe In Few Days

Dr. Louis R. Wilson, University librarian, and Mrs. Wilson and other members of their family have returned from St. Petersburg, Fla., where they have been spending the winter months.

Dr. Wilson is on leave of absence and is to sail in about a week for Europe, to be away until next August.

Dr. Wilson recently received the sole nomination for the vice-presidency of the American Library Association, in the work of which he has long been prominent. He is among those who have been prominently suggested for the presidency of the University.

Tar Heels Defeat Cornell To Keep Clean Slate For Season; Carolina Outhit

Locals Bunch Hits In Sixth Inning To Count Three Runs; Ithicans Steady.

SCORE 3-2 AT END OF GAME

Burgess Whitehead Features Tar Heel Defensive Play.

Although outhit 10-7, Carolina kept her record clean and won the second game of the season from Cornell University 3-2 yesterday afternoon on Emerson field. The Ithacans were able to get at least one hit in every inning except the third, but tight fielding kept the men from rounding third more than two times. The Tar Heels, on the other hand, concentrated their attack in the fifth inning and brought in three runs on six hits.

The visitors made their first threat in the opening frame when Jackson dropped a throw from third and let the second man reach the sack. Cushman, the third man up for Cornell, drove one into deep left field to score Learn, but was caught at home plate in trying to stretch a triple into a home run. La France, next up, walked, but died on base when Kappler flied out to center field. The Carolina batsmen went down in one-two-three order in the first inning when Paxton flied out to center and Whitehead and Maus were thrown out at first.

Handleman, first up for Cornell in the second, singled to left field and beat the throw to second when Paxton juggled the ball. Moon drove a long fly to right field and Handleman took third after the catch. The chance to score was lost when Heye flied out and Boies hit to short and was thrown out at first. Carolina still failed to develop a taste for Boies' "submarine" ball and House, Rand and Jackson went down in short order in the Tar Heel turn at the bat. House managed to reach first on a walk, but was thrown out trying to steal second.

Four men faced Fleming in the third, but no one was able to get beyond first. Learn repeated House's performance by taking a walk and then getting caught trying to steal second. Sher, first up for Carolina, took first when Handleman juggled his grounder at short, and advanced to second when the pitcher threw the ball away trying to catch him off the sack.

The fourth was uneventful, with Kappler going out, short to first, Handleman singling, Moon popping up to second, and Heye fanning. Heye's strikeout was what might be called accidental. In attempting to dodge the ball on his last strike, de ducked and swung the bat around, while the ump called the strike. The Tar Heels pulled the one-two-three act again when Whitehead and Maus dropped long flies into the hands of the outfielders and House fanned.

Boies, first up for the Ithacans in the fifth, rolled a weak grounder to the mound and was thrown out at first. Mairana poled out a nice double, but remained on second when his two teammates, Learn and Cushman, went out by way of the strikeout and infield bingle routes. Carolina had been held hitless long enough, apparently, and in her half of the fifth the first five men singled. Rand led off with a single to short left field. Jackson beat out a bunt to first and Sher hit a hard one through the pitcher to advance Rand to third and Jackson to second.

FOUR SPORT EVENTS REMAIN THIS WEEK

The sports calendar for the week contains three baseball games in addition to the tilt with Cornell yesterday, and a track meet.

The baseball schedule for the rest of the week is made up of a game Thursday with the Washington and Lee nine on Emerson field. A two-game series will be played with the Georgia Bulldogs in Athens on Friday and Saturday, and then the Tar Heel nine returns here for a game Monday with the Maryland outfit.

The Tar Heel cinderpath and field men will meet the Georgia Tech aggregation on Emerson field Saturday in the second meet of the season. N. C. State was swamped last week in the opening engagement, but Tech is expected by the coaches to present a stronger aggregation.

Summary: Wednesday, Baseball, W. and L. here.—Thursday, Baseball, Georgia, there.—Saturday, Track, Ga. Tech, here. Baseball, Georgia, there.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE WILL HOLD GIRLS' TRACK MEET

Recent statements from High Point College announce the fourth annual girls' interscholastic track and field meet to be held in High Point on Saturday, May 17. The meet has been formerly held under the direction of Ralph Mulligan, the student track coach for boys and girls.

Up to the present time the meets have been very successful and have represented practically all the high schools in North Carolina. Last year 108 girls represented schools from all over the state, but double that amount is expected this year, according to recent reports. Application blanks will be sent to every high school in the state in order that they might be able to send a representative team.

The first three meets have been won by High Point high school, 1927, Alexander- Wilson in 1928, and Waynesville high in 1929.

Last year Mae Crawford of Waynesville high, won six first places and two seconds to win high score of the meet and to bring the state title to Waynesville. Miss Crawford was the only entry from her school, and her records last year have set a mark for the lassies of the state to shoot at this year.

Creditable showings have been made by some of the girls in former meets, but special attention will be paid on times and distances in the meet this year as some of the winners may be sent to the National Women's Athletic Association meet this spring.

Another Babe Ruth?

A certain freshman who lives down the hall from the writer, is in receipt of a letter, from his mother, which, beginning if not ending in the orthodox manner, follows:

My Dear Son:

I had hopes of making a scholar of you—a college professor or something of the kind, but I read yesterday that Babe Ruth signed a contract giving him about $80,000 per year as a ball player.

Please investigate and if they have any course at Carolina that will help you become a good ball player, you will, by beginning at once on such a course, please.

FENCING CHAMPS SELECTED TODAY

Zeta Psi and Beta Teams Meet For Title in Tin Can At 5:30.

The final match for the championship of the intramural fencing league will be held in the Tin Can at 5:30 this afternoon between the swordsmen of Zeta Psi, led by the brilliant Cooper, who has not lost a match to date, and those of Beta No. 1, led by Waugh, whose performances have been outstanding all year. The race for championship honors has been unusually close, six teams being closely bunched at the beginning of the last week of eliminations. Sigma Epsilon, Beta No. 1, Sea Hawks, Buccaneers and Zeta Psi being undefeated and the Beta No. 2 team being so close behind and having shown such fine form that it was still counted in the race. Sigma Epsilon fell before the thrusts of Beta Theta Pi No. 1 by a score of 6-3. The Sea Hawks dropped a hard fought match to Zeta Psi 6-3, and the Buccaneers, despite Urban's fine parrying and accurate thrusts, lost to Beta No 2 by 5-4. Zeta Psi drew a bye, and yesterday the Betas' No. 1 team defeated the No. 2 team 9-0.

This leaves the final match between Zeta Psi and Beta Theta Pi No. 1 to be fenced off for the championship today.

The teams are very evenly matched, as the past record of the individual members shows. Cooper of Zeta Psi has perhaps the best record, having won twelve bouts and losing none. Very few touches have been scored upon him, and he is regarded as a potential candidate for varsity honors. Valk has done well also, having won nine bouts and having lost but three. Pratt is also a dangerous swordsman who needs but to polish off the rough edges to become one of the best. He has won seven bouts and lost five.

For the Betas, Brown has the best record, having won, like Cooper, twelve bouts and lost none. However, Cooper has had fewer touches scored against him. Waugh, Beta captain, has won ten bouts and lost two, showing excellent form. Both of these men are future varsity possibilities, and should do well in the individual tournament. Fenker fenced in fine form all year but had some hard luck and succeeded in winning in half of his matches, finishing with six wins and six losses. From the above it is seen that both teams have won 28 bouts and lost eight, being exactly even as to past results.

The match today will bring to a close the University's first season of intramural fencing The season has been an unqualified success in every way. At first the Athletic Council and the major part of the student body thought that little interest would be shown in this new sport. However, intense interest developed which resulted in an intramural season rivaling that of any sport in intensity of interest and competition. Eight fraternities, four dormitory, and three independent teams were entered. The fraternities which entered teams were: Beta Theta Pi (2 teams), Zeta Psi, Sigma Epsilon, Sigma Phi Sigma, Sigma Zeta, Sigma Nu, and Theta Chi; the dormitory teams represented Old East, Manly, Ruffin, and Everett; the independent teams took the names applied to pirates and freebooters of old, and called themselves the Buccaneers, Sea Hawks, and Musketeers. In all about sixty or seventy men took part in some fifty matches, and this is regarded as a fine start.

An individual tournament will be held Wednesday among those ten judged to have the best all round style to determine Carolina's intramural individual champion. Cooper of Zeta Psi, Waugh and Brown of Beta No. 1, Urban of the Buccaneers and Whedbee of Sigma Nu are the favorites in this tournament, with Cooper having a slight edge because of his past record.

The lineup for today's match is as follows:

Zeta Psi	Beta No. 1
Cooper (C)	Waugh (C)
Valk	Brown
Pratt	Fenker

SPORT RAMBLES

Roulhac Hamilton

"The past basketball season was just one big scoring spree," says Les Gage in picking an All-American basketball team in the May issue of College Humor. "There were many great offensive machines, featuring a score of brilliant shooters. But there was a definite scarcity of stellar defensive players—especially in contrast to the large number of clever forwards and centers."

Of especial interest to North Carolina basketball fans is the selection of Johnson, N. C. State guard, to position on the first team. With the exception of McGinnis of Kentucky who was placed on the third team, Johnson is the only Southerner awarded a position on the selection.

"This honor roll is not the result of my personal views alone," says Gage, "but is based to a considerable degree upon advice tendered by prominent coaches in the countless athletic conferences throughout the country."

Gage's selections follow:
Forward—Hyatt, Pittsburgh
Forward—Ward, Montana State
Center—Murphy, Loyola
Guard—Wooden, Purdue
Guard—Johnson, N. C. State

Coach Ranson Wants More Out For Track

In spite of the excellence of the freshman track material uncovered up to the present, there is still a dearth of frosh track men. Coach Dale Ranson urges all men who have had previous experience in track and all men who think they have possibilities of developing into cinder path stars to report for the practices held every afternoon at 3 o'clock. All candidates for the team will receive training with new men getting special attention.

There will be a quadrangular freshman meet Saturday afternoon to be run off simultaneously with the varsity meet with Georgia Tech. In this contest the freshmen will oppose Charlotte, Wilmington and Greensboro high schools, all of whom have a wealth of material. Hancock of Wilmington, state champion high school sprinter, and Mullis of Charlotte, champion weight man, are both counted on to furnish opposition worthy of the freshmen.

The new union terminal development in the city of Cleveland, now nearing completion, is to have a rival in a Pennsylvania terminal in another part of the city, so that within a few years Cleveland will have copied New York with its Grand Central and Pennsylvania terminals, not far from each other.

University Press To Release Book Dealing With Mill Life

Oklahoma University Man, Native of Gaston County, Publishes Results of Impartial Study of Conditions in Mill Villages in State.

EIGHTH PRESS BOOK

With the release this week of "Some Southern Cotton Mill Workers and Their Villages," a study made by Dr. Jennings J. Rhyne under the direction of the University institute for research in social science, the University Press enlarged its list of books about North Carolina to eight titles.

The author is a native of Gaston county and is now in the sociology department of the University of Oklahoma. His study of cotton mill workers and their villages, including preliminary inquiries and historical readings, has extended over several years.

An announcement from the Press concerning the book says, in part, that the study is "particularly appropriate at this time since it was made in Gaston county, the scene of recent labor difficulties which have engaged the attention of people all over the world. Since the study was brought to a close before the development of labor troubles in Gastonia in 1929, it fortunately provides data gathered from an undisturbed setting. Its essential picture will be found in simple figures rather than in literary description."

Books previously issued about the state by the University Press are "Welfare Work in Mill Villages" by Harriet Herring, "County Government in North Carolina" by Paul W. Wager, "Public Poor Relief in North Carolina" by Roy M. Brown, and "The North Carolina Chain Gang" by Steiner and Brown.

Books scheduled for release this spring include "A State Movement in Railroad Development" by Cecil K. Brown, "North Carolina: Economic and Social" by S. H. Hobbs, Jr., and "The Democratic Party in North Carolina" by Clarence C. Norton.

Negro Sent To Roads

Pink Guthrie, middle-aged Chapel Hill negro, who, according to Judge C. P. Hinshaw, "has been in court more times than many young lawyers," was persona non grata at recorder's court Monday morning, receiving an aggregate sentence of seven months on the county roads for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Pink had been sentenced to 90 days early in the year, and, upon being released from custody Saturday, immediately celebrated his regained freedom, and was arrested on Cameron avenue. Saturday night, incarcerated in the local jail, Pink gave vent to obscene language with such vehemence as to be heard clearly for a distance of two blocks, within which radius several ladies resided. His picturesque eloquence continued, it is said, most of the night.

For having been drunk, Pink was given 30 days on the road, and for having been vulgar and boisterous, six months. Convinced of his own innocence, Pink appealed, and is at liberty under a bond of $300.

Religious Workers Wanted

J. P| H. McNatt '28 who is now studying for the ministry at Oberlin College is here today to talk to any students who are interested in religious work.

Any students who wish to see Mr. McNatt may get in touch with him through the bureau of vocational information or thru Mr. W. D. Moss, pastor of the Presbyterian church.

Board Nominations

Clyde Dunn, president of the Publications Union Board, announced last night that the following men had been nominated for next year's board: rising senior, Beverly Moore, K. C. Ramsay and Mary Price; rising junior, Holmes Davis, Robert Hodges, J. D. McNairy and Henry Anderson; and candidates at large, E. C. Daniel and F. J. Manheim. Of this number one rising senior, one rising junior and one from any of the candidates will be selected.

The board received the following nominations respectively from the editors of the Yackety Yack, Buccaneer and Magazine for the editorships next year: Clyde Dunn and Douglas Kincaid; Gil Pearson; Richard Chace and Jay Curtis. Will Yarborough had previously been nominated by a vote of the Tar Heel staff to run for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel. The board stated at the time it made the nominations public that it serves only as a clearing house for nominations made by the editors or staffs of the publications, and nominates candidates only in case of its own membership.

Y TEAM TRIP TO ROCKY MOUNT IS VERY SUCCESSFUL

Fifteen Hundred Persons Addressed and Sung To By Team of Six University Men.

After having appeared before approximately 1500 people, the Y deputation team returned Sunday afternoon from Rocky Mount where the team had rendered a series of programs over the week-end.

Arriving in Rocky Mount late Thursday afternoon, the team was the guest at a banquet given by the Hi-Y and A. R. E. B. clubs. A program consisting of songs by the quartet and two speeches was given by the team.

All day Friday was taken up with visits to the local schools, at which places the University boys gave their program of songs and speeches. At 6:00 P. M. that afternoon the team rendered a program at a banquet of the shop supervisors of Rocky Mount, and at 6:30 the Y boys entertained the Rotary Club at its usual weekly meeting.

A hike with the smaller boys had been planned for Saturday morning, but on account of the wet weather the team gave them iits program in the Y gym. After the program, games were played and refreshments served.

On Sunday morning the team sent one of its members to the several Sunday schools in the city to conduct classes and give short talks. At the morning service hour the quartet rendered sacred airs in the churches. The team was entertained in the homes at dinner, and returned late Sunday afternoon to the University.

This trip was the second of its kind that has been made this year by the team. The last trip was to Fayetteville during the latter part of last quarter. Several other trips are to be made by the team before the end of this year.

The team this time was made up of Jack Connelly, Fred Laxton, Woffard Humphries, and John Miller on the quartet, and Jack Dungan and Grady Leonard as speakers.

Tar Heels Defeat Cornell To Keep Slate Clean For The Season

Davis, pinch hitting for Johnson, singled, scoring Rand. Jackson tried also to make it home, but was thrown out, left fielder to shortstop to catcher. Fleming hit through short, beating it to the bag, and scoring Davis and Sher. Paxton hit to short, forcing Fleming at second and Maus hit to pitcher for the last out.

Neither side threatened again until the eighth, when Cornell loaded the bases, scored one run and had Fleming in a bad hole. Goodman, first up, singled, went to second when Cushman was thrown out at first, and came in on La France's single. Heming doubled, bringing La France to third, Handleman popped up to the catcher, Moon walked and the bases were loaded. Heye permitted Carolina to hold the one-run lead by hitting to short for the third out. Goodman singled again in the ninth, but died on first when his teammates failed to follow his example and went down for three outs.

Brief Speeches Made As Many Candidates Receive Nominations

"Red" Greene and Marion Alexander Running for President Student Body.

THIRTY-FIVE NOMINEES

Yarborough and Jones for Tar Heel Editorship; Hamer and Farrel for Presidency of "Y".

Since the nominations for student body offices held in Gerrard hall yesterday, the setting of the political arena has taken definite form. An array of nominees, portending a hotly-contested election, now stands on the records of the pre-election meeting.

For the highest office of the campus, that of student body president, R. C. "Red" Greene and Marion Alexander were presented as nominees. These men, already outstanding figures on the campus, were nominated in short, direct speeches by Mayne Albright and Bill Speight, respectively. Ray Farris, presiding, announced that the presidential nominees will speak in Gerrard hall Thursday morning at 10:30.

Nominations, in addition to those made by the various staffs and announced in yesterday's issue of the Tar Heel, were made for the editorships of the publications. Joe Jones received a nomination to the chief of these offices, that of editor of the Daily Tar Heel. For editor of the literary supplement, the Carolina Magazine, J. C. "Red" Williams was nominated, and of the Buccaneer, Kermit Wheary was named.

Additional nominations made for the Y. M. C. A. offices were Claude Farrell for president and Ellis Fysal and Sam Gorham for vice-president.

Nominations for the minor offices followed, being made by a long train of enthusiastic speakers. In spite of continuous requests for brevity, no word of the "praise for the worthy" went unspoken. Emphatic tones and very determined language set forth the qualities of "the man." Headed by Phi Beta Kappa keys and monograms, an interminable train of evidences of worth were dangled before the hearers. With few exceptions each speaker announced that he "would like to nominate a man" and proceeded to show it was a man he had in mind. The exceptions had desires of nominating "a real man" and took upon themselves the additional task of expounding the "real."

A complete list of nominees follows:

President of the student body, Marion Alexander and Red Greene; editor of the Tar Heel, Will Yarborough and Joe Jones; editor of the Magazine, J. C. "Red" Williams, Richard A. Chace and Jay Curtis; editor of Yackety Yack, Clyde Dunn and Douglas Kincaid; editor of Buccaneer, Kermit Wheary and Gil Pearson; president of Y. M. C. A., Ed Hamer and Claude Farrell; vice-president of Y, Ellis Fysal, Sam Gorham; secretary of Y, Harry Finch and John Miller; treasurer of Y, F. M. "Pardner" James and William Draper; president of athletic association, Burgess Whitehead and Jim Magner; vice-president of the

MISTAKE CAUSES DEBATE TURMOIL

Maryland and Carolina Teams Both Prepare for Affirmative Side; Disarmament Question.

Due to a misunderstanding, both the Carolina and Maryland debaters had prepared to argue the affirmative side of the question when the two teams met in Gerrard hall last night. Only after the first speaker for the Carolina team had been announced and had begun his argument was the mistake discovered.

Dr. George McKie, chairman for the debate, expressed his regret that such an unfortunate incident had occurred, and after a few seconds of consultation with the representatives of the two universities, he announced that, due to the fact that the question was of great current interest, all the debaters would present their arguments for the affirmative side of the subject, "Resolved, That the nations of the world should adopt some plan of complete disarmament of all forces, except those which are needed for police purposes."

G. P. Carr of the local team and Herbert Eby and Nicholas Janetzke, members of the University of Maryland team, presented speeches upholding the affirmative of the query. J. A. Wilkinson, the other member of the Carolina team, gave an extemporaneous talk in defense of the negative side.

WOODHOUSE TALKS TO LAW STUDENTS

At the second regular meeting of the newly-formed Pre-law School Association Monday night Professor E. J. Wodhouse of the department of government spoke to the group on the relation of government to the study of law. Dealing with the relations of government and law to sociology, psychology, history and other lines of study, he emphasized the importance of an active interest in politics on the part of all citizens of the country in order that the best and most democratic form of government may be instituted and retained. Professor Woodhouse expressed various preferences in regard to institutions of government such as conventions over direct primaries, two divisions of power as against three in federal government, etc. He expressed doubt as to whether the American form of government is as democratic as is generally thought. The talk was concluded with an endorsement of the study of law and of the Carolina school of law.

After the more formal address, the meeting was turned into an informal forum for the questioning of the speaker.

Vote Light In Prohibition Balloting Here; Repealers Leading Both Other Groups

Senior Notice

Several business concerns will have representatives in Chapel Hill within the near future to interview seniors concerning employment.

The Eastman Kodak Co. representative will be here on April 14, the Remington-Rand Business Service, Inc. man on April 16.

Representatives from the Proctor & Gamble Co. and S. H. Kress & Co. have promised to come, but no definite dates have been set for their visits. Besides these, there are a few other companies which may visit the campus later in the spring.

Seniors who wish to interview any of these men should make arrangements to do so through the Bureau of Vocational Information, 204 South building.

REUNION OFFICERS GATHER SATURDAY

Representatives of Reuning Classes To Gather for Arranging Alumni's Part at Commencement.

The Reunion Committee of the General Alumni Association will meet at the Carolina Inn Saturday evening at six o'clock, according to an announcement made in the central alumni office.

Dr. Hubert Haywood, '05, of Raleigh, Alumni Commencement marshal and chairman of the reunion committee, is expecting 12 or 15 class secretaries and representatives here for the gathering. The meeting is called for the purpose of arranging for the alumni part of the commencement program, and secretaries of the classes which hold reunions this June are members of the committee.

Commencement dates are June 7-10, and Alumni Day is Monday, June 9. This is a change from the custom of the past several years, which has been to have Alumni Day on Saturday. The alumni board of directors voted to make the change, believing that many alumni were kept away from Alumni Day because it came on Saturday.

The alumni will be guests of the athletic association at the Georgia Tech vs. Carolina track meet on Emerson field in the afternoon and will have supper together at the Inn. Dr. Haywood will preside.

Prohibition Ballot

(Ballot Box in the Lobby of the "Y")

Do not drink ☐
Drink occasionally ☐
Drink frequently ☐

Favor enforcement ☐
Favor modification ☐
Favor repeal ☐

Only 241 Votes Cast at End of Second Day; Non Drinkers Outnumbers Drinkers.

BALLOTING ENDS TODAY

119 Vote For Repeal With 68 For Modification and 54 for Enforcement; Repealers Leading at University of Virginia.

With 241 votes cast during the first two days of the prohibition poll being conducted by the Daily Tar Heel, the non-drinkers at the university outnumber the drinkers 123 to 118 while those favoring repeal or modification of the 18th amendment outnumbered those favoring enforcement 187 to 54.

The poll will be closed at 6 o'clock today and those planning to vote are urged to vote at the ballot box in the lobby of the Y. All students are urged to take part in this poll as the final tabulation will be taken to indicate the sentiment of the entire student body.

In tabulating the vote yesterday it was noticed that of those who do not drink only 52 favored enforcement of the law, while among those who drink frequently not one favored enforcement. The vote among the non-drinkers was as follows: for enforcement 52, for modification 32, and for repeal 39.

Sentiment favoring repeal was evinced among those drinking only occasionally as 42 voted for repeal while 34 voted for modification. In the class of those who drink frequently sentiment was almost unanimous against either enforcement or modification with only 2 votes being cast for modification and none for enforcement.

In a similar poll now being conducted at the University of Virginia almost half of the student body has participated in the balloting with those favoring repeal leading by a large majority. The vote for enforcement there through Monday was very light.

The final count of the vote will be announced in Thursday's issue of the Tar Heel.

Local Woman's Club Holds Clean-Up-Week

Ordinarily it costs 75 cents per month for garbage removal in Chapel Hill. This week those people who allow their rubbish to accumulate for a year are being rewarded, for the city is doing the work free.

Sponsored by the Chapel Hill Women's Club, Clean Up Week began Monday. The trucks engaged in rubbish removal started Monday working in the territory north of Franklin street, and are proceeding in a clockwise direction around the city. The work will be finished Thursday or Friday.

SET OF RENOWN BOOKS ACQUIRED BY THE LIBRARY

Copies of the Famous Egyptian Mathematical Volumes Are Brought Here Through Efforts of Math Department.

REVEAL EARLY MATH

The University library, thru the efforts of the department of mathematics, has acquired a set of the recently published Rhind Mathematical Papyrus, which is regarded by some as one of the triumphs of American scholarship.

The two volumes which were edited by A. B. Chace, chancellor of Brown University, comprise a photographic facsimile, hieroglyphic transcription, transliteration, literal translation, and mathematical commentary and bibliography of the Rhind Mathematical Papyrus which is in the British Museum.

The Papyrus, which dates from the twelfth dynasty of Egypt, about 1685 B. C., was found at Thebes in 1858. It passed into the hands of A. H. Rhind, from whom the Museum obtained it in 1864. For many years it could not be translated. When finally translated, the mathematical treatise threw much light on the condition of mathematics in Egypt during the early ages. It is thought that this papyrus was a copy of a still older one written about 1800 B. C.

The papyrus consists of two pieces, both of which are 33 centimeters wide. One piece is 206 centimeters long, the other, 319. When the papyrus had been translated it was found that there was one piece missing. This section was later found in the New York Historical Society, who had acquired it in 1907.

The recently acquired volumes are photographic reproductions of the papyrus together with translations and comments on the subject matter.

The papyrus consists of 87 parts, which were not numbered in the original but which have been numbered for easy identification. The first part of the manuscript consists of resolutions of fractions with 2 in the numerator and odd numbers from 5 to 101 in the denominator into others having unity in the numerator.

The second group of problems concerns arithmetic, and the third consists of problems in mensuration. There is a section of miscellaneous arithmetical problems and one section which has not yet been translated.

Through the translation of this papyrus, the condition of the science of mathematics at this early date, 1685 B. C., has become known and further proof is added to the statement that mathematics is the oldest of the sciences. This document also shows that mathematics of the early Egyptians was of a practical nature, which supports the contention of some Egyptologists that all science of these ancient people was of a kind that had a direct application in their life.

The University is fortunate to obtain this copy of the reproductions and translations of the papyrus, which is the oldest mathematical document in the world, and which makes available to the public the subject matter of this important document.

Tar Heel Topics

In the spring the young man's fancy turns lightly, very lightly, to the thought that there aren't enough co-eds at Carolina.

Nominations for campus offices were held on April Fools' day, which was as it should have been. And we haven't found anybody yet who was fooled by the nomination speeches.

At least the Chapel Hill post-office rumpus has convinced a lot of folks that University students want to be punctual about something—even if it isn't anything more than getting their mail the same night that it arrives.

The Department of Justice has sent circulars outlining opportunities in the Federal prison service to the leading colleges and universities in the country. Usually college graduates become interested in prisons and prison service from necessity rather than choice.

This clock in the office of the census director at Washington which "does everything but speak languages" may be a remarkable mechanism, but we bet that it hasn'e been responsibet for the invention of as many lurid adjectives as have Chapel Hill alarm clocks.

A Real Campus Election At Last

Everyone interested in the state of affairs on the University campus is gratified by the keen interest already exhibited in the student elections this year. For the past two years the elections have been perfunctory events, little more than mere formalities. Most of the major offices have been uncontested, with the single candidate encountering no opposition. But this year at least two strong nominees are engaging in a desperate struggle for every important office.

There are at least two logical explanations of the lethargic attitude toward campus elections here in recent years. One all-powerful political party has dominated the situation, and its candidates have had a tremendous advantage over the impotent opposition. But the most frequently advanced theory is that there has not been a sufficient number of prominent and capable men to provide two or more really qualified candidates for each office.

There is a modicum of truth in each of these explanations. Undoubtedly the existence of only one strong political machine has served to stifle opposition and prevent a few deserving men from becoming candidates. But in most cases it has been true that lack of interest in student activities has resulted in the development of only one strong contender for each of the big offices.

When there are a number of competent men in each phase of campus extra-curricular activities, it is virtually impossible to prevent the development of two or more strong political alignments, providing opportunity for these men to enter the contest for the offices in their particular activities. Such has been the case this year. Keen interest has been evinced in every major extra-curricular activity, especially the publications, and is was inevitable that at least two strong political alignments should be formed.

We are especially interested in the contest for the executive positions on the Tar Heel, of course. And it has been highly gratifying that two strong candidates have been developed for the editorship and several others for the managing editorship. We consider both of the nominees for the editorship to be well qualified for the position.

On a daily college publication, however, we believe that there should be a definite division of the field of activity between the upperclassmen on the staff who are to become candidates for the editorship and those who are to enter the competition for the managing editorship. Prospective candidates should have experience in both fields, that of writing columns and editorials, and that of writing headlines, reading copy and other activities connected with the managing editor's duties. But those who intend to compete for the editorship should specialize in the first field, while potential candidates for managing editor should perform the major portion of their work in the latter. We hope that within the next few years a definite division along these lines will take place on the Daily Tar Heel staff.

But we are well satisfied with the present candidates for the two chief places on the Tar Heel, and we are confident that the paper will be in capable hands next year. And the fact that all of the campus offices are being hotly contested this year indicates a healthy interest in worthwhile extra-curricular activities at the University.

Awful thought. Suppose the millennium, when at last it comes, is held up until ratified by the senate. —Los Angeles Times.

New Leadership — Our Crying Need

In a conversation with a number of students at the University of Virginia last week we were mightily impressed with Virginia's honor system and the esteem in which the average student there holds it. By way of contrast we compared a Virginia "gumming" session where the honor system was discussed to a typical Carolina "bull session" when the honor system comes up for discussion. The difference in attitude is striking to anyone acquainted with the two. It was our impression that Virginia takes her honor system far more seriously and considers an infringement of it as a far more serious thing than we do.

Admittedly our honor system is far from perfect; it is not cynicism and pessimism to frankly face the facts and say that it breaks down in many cases. There is not a strong student conscious for our honor system; too many feel that it is a thing wholly removed from them; it is not a vital and motivating influence in daily life; somehow it fails to impress the students as a reality.

However, we feel that our present system is far better than faculty control; we are not trying to sound the death note of the honor system. We need, not a new system, but a rejuvenation of the present one; we need vigorous and vital student leadership that will influence student opinion and student action; leadership is the crying need.

The secret of the success of the Virginia honor system lies in its simplicity; a man is on his honor not to cheat, steal, or lie and to conduct himself as a gentleman at all times, just as we are. But that is as far as it goes, and Virginia will not allow it to be encumbered and overloaded as ours is. As an example of overloading, the enforcement of the inter-fraternity rushing rules for the fall quarter was made a matter of honor; gambling has at times been considered a breach of honor. And so the list goes, until the system becomes top heavy and may crumble.

In the election of the new student body president we hope that a vigorous leader will be chosen who will give new life to the honor system and promote a more vital and more influential student government. We need a man intensely interested in student government who can swing great influence in the student body and who by his personality and leadership can impress the new and old students alike with a living, breathing, growing student government.

AN APPEAL TO THE FINER SENSIBILITIES

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

We have been informed through reliable authority that frequenters of Durham hotels and kindred places have been registering under names other than their own, and in several instances have been registering under the names of men of the various athletic squads.

An appeal should be made to the finer sensibilities of Carolina men to refrain from this practice.

It may be of interest to some to know that the W. C. T. This seems laughable to every sane person, but reasonable men scoffed at the possibility of liquor prohibition in 1900. A determined and ruthless minority always has the breaks on a good natured and careless majority, however.

Upon purchasing a text book a few days ago he discovered that it was the one stolen from him the quarter before, but the big jolt came when he discovered that they weren't using the book any more.

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

Wednesday, April 2—Topic of the day: "Exalting the Valleys." (Read Isaiah 40:1-8) Memory verse: "Every valley shall be exalted." (Isaiah 40:4).

Meditation: Life is a cross-country journey. It lies over valley and hill. Isaiah says that every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill shall be made low. The order of the phrases may indicate that valleys furnish the greatest problems in spiritual engineering. The mountains do not present so much difficulty. Men are not much intimidated by mountains. There is a challenge in the mountains that stirs one's spirit. It is the valleys that discourage. If we can only get our problem or difficulty into such shape that it will challenge us, as a mountain challenges, we can usually handle it. To conquer a valley, exalt it, make a hill out of it, and then climb the hill.

Prayer: O Thou, through whom we are more than conquerors, help us to face this day without fear. May every difficulty that arises be a summons to our spirits to disclose the vast divine resources that thou hast put within us. To him that overcometh thou dost give the crown of life. Amen.

Cornell Nine Evens Series With Varsity By Long Win

LaFrance, Cornell First Baseman, Leads Attack With Four Hits.

CAROLINA GETS 7 HITS

Davis and Wright Lead Tar Heel Batters With Two Hits Each; Errors Play Big Part In Loss Of Second Game With Eastern Nine.

Led by the superlative batting of La France, Cornell University's nine evened up a series of two games by capturing the last game 10-8 at Emerson field yesterday.

Both teams played ball more suited to high school than college. Walks were numerous on both sides, Cornell turning three passes into runs, while the Tar Heels garnered six runs via the same route. Errors also played an important part in the Cornell victory, the visitors playing errorless ball while the Tar Heels made no less than five misplays. The visitors again outhit Carolina, making 14 hits to the Tar Heels' 7.

The game inning by inning:

First inning—Cornell: Mariana walked. Habicht lined a single to center, sending Mariana to second. Cushman doubled to center scoring Mariana and Habicht. La France also doubled to center, scoring Cushman. Goodman grounded out, Whitehead to Jackson. Handleman went out the same way. Moon struck out. (Three runs, three hits, no errors.) Carolina: Davis walked. Whitehead hit into a fast double play, Handleman to La France. Maus and Lufty walked. Paxton grounded to La France. (No runs, no hits, no errors.)

Second inning—Cornell: Zahn grounded to Whitehead. Stevens shot a single to right and went to second on Mariana's single to center. Habicht walked. Cushman popped to Rand. La France doubled to right, sending Stevens and Mariana across the plate. Goodman grounded to Lufty. (Two runs, three hits, no errors.) Carolina: Rand grounded to short. Jackson walked and stole second. Branch lined to right. Wright hit a long fly over the left fielder's head for a triple, scoring Jackson. Davis doubled to left, scoring Wright. Whitehead flied to right. (Two runs, two hits, no errors.)

Third inning—Cornell: Handleman grounded to third. Moon grounded to second, and Zahn grounded to short. (No runs, no hits, no errors.) Carolina: Maus and Lufty walked and pulled a nice double steal. McKinney flied to left center. Rand and Jackson walked, forcing in Maus. Blythe batted for Branch and doubled to center, scoring Lufty and Rand. Wright beat out an infield hit scoring Jackson and Blythe. Davis singled to left, but Whitehead hit into a double play, short to second to first. (Five runs, three hits, no errors.)

Fourth inning — Cornell: Schultz, batting for Stevens, flied to right. Mariana walked and advanced to third on an error by Maus. Habicht singled to center, scoring Mariana. Cushman grounded to Whitehead, sending Habicht to second where he went to third on La France's third hit. Goodman grounded to Whitehead to end the inning. (One run, two hits, one error.) Carolina: Maus singled to left. Maus stole second. Lufty popped to left. McKinney popped to second. Rand rolled to the pitcher. (No runs, one hit, no errors.)

Fifth inning—Cornell: Handleman fouled to Maus. Moon singled to left. Heye, batting for Zahn, lined to Whitehead. Schultz flied to Blythe. (No runs one hit, no errors.) Carolina: Jackson walked and stole second. Blythe bunted to first, sending Jackson to third where he scored on Wright's sacrifice bunt. Davis rolled to short. (One run, no hits, no errors.)

Sixth inning—Cornell: Mariana flied to McKinney. Habicht struck out. Cushman singled to left. La France rolled to Whitehead. (No runs, one hit, no errors.) Carolina: Whitehead sent a long fly over the right-fielder's head for a triple, but was out trying to stretch it into a home run, Moon to Habicht to Heye. Maus fouled to Heye. Lufty walked and stole second. McKinney flied to left. (No runs, one hit, one error.)

Seventh inning — Cornell: Goodman flied to Whitehead. Handleman and Moon singled. Lufty fumbled Heye's grounder, scoring Handleman. Schultz flied to McKinney. McKinney made a beautiful running catch of Mariana's liner. (One run, two hits, one error.) Carolina: Rand and Jackson flied to left. Blythe rolled to first. (No runs, no hits, no errors.)

Eighth inning—Cornell: Rand went far to his left to turn Habicht's bid for a hit into another time at bat. Cushman went out the same way. La France doubled for his fourth hit. Errors by Lufty and Whitehead scored La France. Schultz flied to McKinney. (One run, one hit, two errors.) Carolina: Wright grounded to third. Davis walked. Whitehead flied to deep center. Maus lined to short. (No runs, no hits, no errors.)

Ninth inning—Cornell: Heye reached first on Rand's error. Schultz interfered with the batted ball and was ruled out. Mariana singled. Wright balked, advancing both men. Cushman walked. Longest pitching for Carolina. La France walked, forcing in Heye. Goodman lined to Whitehead. (One run, one hit, one error.) Carolina: House batted for Sher and flied to center. Lufty went out the same way. Schultz caught Rand's foul to end the game. (No runs, no hits, no errors.)

SIDELIGHTS

by Sports Editor

THE BIG FIVE is now led by the Wake Forest Demon Deacons after their defeat of the Davidson Wildcats who had previously won over the N. C. State aggregation. The Deacons played stellar ball to win in a one-sided 11-2 affair. The team that had eked out enough hits and runs to win over the Techs the preceding Saturday could do nothing with the left-handed hurling of Tom Lanning, Deacon Captain. The three pitchers used by the 'Cats in an endeavor to stem the winning tide of the Black and Gold showed little effectiveness, but McInnis was the most promising in spite of being chased after four innings. The first three innings proved to be the only doubtful part of the game as the Wake Forest outfit was leading only by a 1 to 0 score at the end of the third frame.

Wake Forest now has a clean slate in the Big Five, while Davidson is second with an even average of .500, and State follows with a .000 average. Carolina and Duke are yet to play any Big Five games.

THE OAK RIDGE nine are exhibiting one of the best teams of the prep school division this year, and have already taken the Wildcats in tow by a good margin.

THE FIRST REAL TEST of the Tar Heel track team will be on Saturday afternoon when Georgia Tech's Yellow Jackets visit Emerson stadium. The Jackets will probably furnish the first real test of the Carolina track team's strength as the win over State was somewhat one-sided except in one or two events.

In the S. I. C. indoor meet held here early in March, Georgia Tech, with a small number of entries, tied for third place with the University of Maryland. Ed Hamm, captain of the Tech team, and Doug Gradon are the "big two" from Atlanta. Hamm was the most outstanding individual in the indoor meet and will probably be Tech's best bet for individual honors when they meet here.

Asbury of Tech followed Lowery of Carolina to capture fourth in the indoor mile run, while the Georgians also placed in the mile relay, taking second position. Carolina was forced into the final place of third when the misfortune of slipping on the curves overtook two of the Carolina runners.

Brodie Arnold, Smith and Ruble were the three Carolina men placing in the indoor pole vault and this event should fall entirely to the Tar Heels.

Intramural baseball starts this afternoon, while the boxing and wrestling tournaments are close at hand. The fencing league ended yesterday afternoon when the Zeta Psi's bowed before Beta Theta Pi No. 1 in the finals. The Beta No. 1 team had previously eliminated Beta No. 2 on Monday night, while the Zeta Psi's had drawn a bye.

Lithuania will soon open a modern government medical clinic at Kovno.

BETAS WINNERS FENCING LEAGUE

First Intramural Tournament Closes With Zeta Psi Losing.

The intramural fencing league was brought to a close yesterday afternoon when Beta Theta Pi No. 1 team defeated the Zeta Psi fencers 6 to 3 in the Tin Can. The Beta team had previously defeated Beta No. 2 in the semi-finals.

Zeta Psi, Beta No. 1, and Beta No. 2 were the three teams to enter in the final race. The Zeta's drew a bye in the opening round of the finals and the two Beta teams fenced for the privilege of the finals.

Brown, of the Beta foils, won all of his bouts, while each Zeta Psi won one and lost two of his matches.

Waugh of the Beta team did not win all of his bouts, but according to Hendlin, director of fencing, he is considered as being one of the most outstanding individuals in the entire league, and will probably be the favorite to win the individual tourney to be held this afternoon.

Regular intramural points will be given to the winner, runner-up, and semi-finalists, as well as to the teams entered in the league.

The individual fencing tourney to be held in the Tin Can this afternoon at 4:30 will decide the most outstanding fencer of the campus, and the winner will probably be a leading candidate for the varsity team. Director Hendlin has extended invitations to twelve fencers instead of the ten as was previously announced. Four of these men have been seeded in the following order:

(1) Waugh, Beta; (2) Brown, Beta; (3) Cooper, Zeta Psi; and (4) Egan, Manly. The other eight men have been selected without attempts at ranking. They are: Pratt and Valk, Zeta Psi; Lynch, Uzzell and Fenker, Beta; Furchgot, Sea Hawks; Urband, Buccaneers; and Whedbee, Sigma Nu.

The participants have been requested by the intramural officials to wear white, sleeveless jersey shirts in the bouts.

The fencing officials announced last night that the past season has been unusually successful and that the campus has heartily supported the league. A large gallery has followed fencing throughout, and several varsity fencers are expected to be developed from the material discovered in the league just ended. Harry Galland, manager of the varsity fencing team and a promising candidate for the varsity, with Herbert Estep, member of last year's fencers and conqueror of the 1927 Southern Conference champion, and Alfred Nazareno, outstanding Philippine fencer, and Bob Linker have been acting as officials in the meets of the league and their support has largely accounted for the great interest of the campus in fencing.

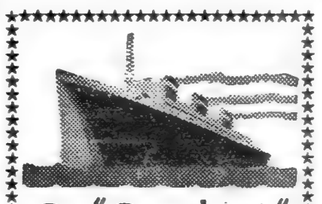
Coach Crayton Rowe Wants More Boxers

Coach Crayton Rowe announces that he would like to have as many more men come out for the intramural boxing tournament as possible. Several came out when the first call was issued and Coach Rowe urges them as well as the new men to report for practice today. He points out that this tournament presents an excellent chance to break into the boxing game gradually, and boxing is now a major sport on an equal par with football, basketball, baseball and track.

Rumor Links Wallace Wade With Duke Job

According to an Associated Press announcement yesterday, Wallace Wade, coach at the University of Alabama, will become head coach of football at Duke University September 1931. The report released from Tuscaloosa, Ala., stated that the Alabama coach had tendered his resignation there and would assume his duties at the North Carolina institution next year.

From Duke no comment was expressed. Coach Dehart had nothing to say while Dean Wannamaker could not be reached at the time.



Since last fall there have been rumblings from Duke alumni meetings throughout the state, but up to the present no statement has been issued by University authorities there.

Eight-Thirty Class Figures In Tragedy

The men were roommates, having become so after the beginning of the winter quarter.

Jack's first class was 9:30, and Dick's was 8:30. After a few days, difficulties developed. Dick became sleepy and retired at midnight, or shortly after. Jack's day's end was postponed for another hour, and there were many arguments. Dick believed Jack should turn in and let him sleep.

In the morning Dick's alarm clock and his subsequent stirring about wakened his roommate, greatly to the latter's annoyance. In vain Jack tried rising early. It couldn't be done. He lay abed and suffered, but not silently.

Jack returned late from spring vacation. His roommate, who had left Chapel Hill a few days early at the beginning of vacation, returned on time.

"Well, Dick, glad to see you. I'm registered o. k., too. Registered just after you left."

"Glad to hear it, boy. I registered Monday. And here's some good news for you. I dropped my 8:30 this quarter and now we can sleep simultaneously. How's that for thoughtfulness?"

"Why, you danged fool! I signed up for an 8:30."

Dr. Snook, former Ohio State University Professor, put to death February 28 for the murder last summer of Theora Hix, co-ed at the Ohio State Medical school, argued that he should not be put to death because it would create a waste of the money the state spent to educate him.

Noted Figures In Theatrical World Visitors To University

John Emerson and Susan Glaspell Speak Informally To Playwriting Class Tracing History of The Drama In America.

Two nationally prominent people in the theatrical world, John Emerson and Susan Glaspell, visited the University of North Carolina today and in particular found kindred interests in the Playmakers department. Each came to Professor Koch's playwriting class and made informal talks in which they traced the development of the drama in America and heralded a rich future for it.

Susan Glaspell, wife of George Cramcook, is not only one of the founder of the noted Provincetown Playhouse as well as a playwright herself, but is also author of the novel, "The Road to the Temple." Among her best known plays are "Suppressed Desire" and "Trifles."

Mr. Emerson, former well known actor and past president of The Actors' Equity association, has in recent years been prominent as a motion picture director. Following periods of directing for Schuberts and Frohmanns in New York City, Mr. Emerson was with Famous Players of Hollywood. Later he became an independent producer. He is the author of the plays, "The Whole Town's Talking," "The Fall of Eve," "The Conspirator" and the dramatization of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" as well as 50 other successful movies. Mr. Emerson is the husband of Anita Loos.

Susan Glaspell in her talk outlined the early fortunes of the Provincetown Players and how they discovered Eugene O'Neill. Mr. Emerson told of the present healthy status of the theater in New York City which in spite of the beliefs to the contrary is enjoying its greatest year, the "Talkies" notwithstanding.

The husband of Anita Loos praised the work of Professor Koch and the Carolina Playmakers, saying that the greater theatre in metropolitan centers like New York depend so much on the little theatres such as this for their future fuel and materials.

The "Talkies" which were so much feared by the legitimate theatres when they first appeared, are helping instead of hindering the staged drama, according to Mr. Emerson. "People in the outlying districts are seeing shadows talk for the first time. Then they get the desire to see the chadows revealed in the actual person with the result that the legitimate theatres in New York are kept filled and the box office smiles in accompaniment," he said.

"There is the greatest opportunity in the world today right here in America for new playwrights," Mr. Emerson said. He recalled that a few years ago the cry was that there were no audiences for the good plays, adding that just the opposite is true today; there are not neough good plays.

However, Mr. Emerson hastened to say that Broadway this season is enjoying its greatest year in a long time in the number of fine successful plays on the boards.

Susan Glaspell in her talk told of the informal inception of the Provincetown Play house group in 1915. She likened the activities of the Provincetown group with those of the Carolina Playmakers because each attacked their work from the same angles. In 1915 a group of writers in Provincetown decided to put on some of their own works following refusals from producers, she related. The first play produced was written by herself and her eminent husband who after his death in Greece became the central figure in Susan Glaspell's book, "The Road to the Temple."

In the group at Provincetown was Mrs. Steele, wife of the author and playwright, who now live in Chapel Hill, and Mrs. Steele offered the use of her studio for the production, dramatically located as it was at the end of the wharf. O'Neill was living in a shack at Provincetown at that time and a friend of his informed the group that O'Neill had a whole trunk full of plays. Consequently, O'Neill was invited to read one of his plays before the group of writers, its intrinsic value was recognized, and the play was produced.

From that time on, according to Susan Glaspell, O'Neill's rise to fame was steady and sustained. O'Neill took parts in some of his first plays but was always self-concious and nervous on the stage although he came from a family of actors.

She narrated how the original group of Provincetown Players disbanded and a new personnel later took it up again; of the struggles of the Provincetown Players to establish themselves in New York City in the "barn-theater," her husband and Robert Edmund Jones doing the directing; and many other intimate details of the struggle to bring the group up to its present high standing in the American Little Theater world.

Susan Glaspell is in Chapel Hill visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Steele, while Mr. Emerson in visiting at the home of Dr. and Mrs. George Howe, Mrs. Howe being a lifelong friend of Mr. Emerson.

Negro Boy Seeks Excitement Here

Lurking in the life of Chapel Hill are sinister appeals less worthy than the simple educational opportunities that attract most youths to this vicinity. The existence of this situation is shown in an incident that will end in the next session of juvenile court in Hillsboro.

This case concerns a colored adolescent who saw in Chapel Hill a possibility of affording excitement to which the surrounding country does not attain. This lad had for some time been living in a home about four miles out of town where he was placed by the superintendent of public welfare. Finding this life much too dull, the boy sought a short-lived season of enjoyment in town.

Arriving in town Saturday afternoon, the adventurer's first act was to possess himself of a bicycle which he seemed to thiink was waiting for his use. His ideas, however, came into definite conflict with those of Chapel Hill's busy police force, into whose toils the unfortunate wanderer fell within an hour. The result of this misfortune was the prompt separation of the boy and the bicycle and the placing of the boy in jail.

When inquiries from the boy's former home made known his identity and his age was determined as 15, the case was remanded to juvenile court. The superintendent of public welfare took charge of the matter and will soon escort the young gentleman of color to Hillsboro for his appearance in court. If the miscreant's lust for excitement has been satiated and he is able to convince the judge of his penitence, he will be permitted to return to the peaceful life of the country. Otherwise he must taste of life such as is found in the State Reform School for Negro boys.

PRESS RELEASES VOLUME POEMS

Anne Blackwell Payne's Book, "Released", Contains Lyrics, Sonnets and Childrens' Poems.

A book which is to be the first volume of verse both for its author and for its publishers is to be issued by the University Press within the next ten days. The book, Released, is the work of Anne Blackwell Payne.

The author is a native North Carolinian, having been born in Washington, N. C. She has previously had several poems published in numerous national magazines and newspapers. The coming volume has its contents divided into three parts, according to type and subject matter: light lyrics, sonnets, and poems for children.

The following is the title verse from the book, Released:

"I think, could I have kept you
here with me,
I would have walked the world,
preoccupied;
Forests and clouds and islands and the sea,
I would have passed them over absent-eyed—
Without the homage of a quickened breath.
April, October, neither wings
nor flame,
Nor resurrection, nor a radiant death—
Only your halo and your golden frame.
Undreaming now, and loosened
from your words
I have found beauty; quivering
in the sound
Of fluent poplars and impassioned birds;
Hung in the heavens, springing
from the ground,
You were a mist, a cloud, on every day,
O, it is better that you went away."

Carl Clemans Reminiscenses On Religion

(By John Patric)

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth of a series of anecdotes told the writer by his friend Carl Clemans who, despite the difference in spelling of his name, was related to Mark Twain. Clemans had been a football star, had graduated from college on his 18th birthday, and was, at 55, more interested in college, if possible, than his undergraduate daughters were. Although this tale appeared two years ago in Vanity Fair, the writer heard it from his friend, in its essential details, much earlier.

"Western State," remarked Clemans, "was always strong for religion. Compulsory chapel, and all that. Well, one day old Dr. Lewis bequeathed his fine theological library and his not inconsiderable fortune to the college, with the stipulation that Bible I and Bible II, his courses, were to be made compulsory henceforth.

"The old gentleman became nearly deaf, and his vision, too, was impaired, but he continued to teach Bible I and Bible II to what cannot have been very appreciative classes.

"Every day Dr. Lewis called the roll, and he asked questions of the alphabet's representatives in their order, so that about once a week—the day upon which its section of the alphabet was to be exposed, was it necessary for any particular part of the class to attend. The rest of the week someone else answered names at roll call.

"One day, as a semester began, Dr. Lewis inquired if he had missed any one, and a youth named Stevens arose. 'Kelley, sir. Robert Kelley, with an "e."'

"'Thank you. Any others?'

"Aloysius McGook and Herman Grabbenheim announced their respective fictitious presences as well, and were duly enrolled.

"And, since we had created that trio, Kelley, McGook and Grabbenheim, it was necessary that we support them. We resolved to make of them star Bible scholars, and to that end those of us most learned in Bible lore sometimes almost fought for the honor of upholding the glory of the now immortal three.

"It wasn't long before Kelley, McGook and Grabbenheim were the pride and joy of the old man, for they could always be counted up for the most perfect recitations, and the doctor never noticed that he was being fooled.

"At mid-semester examinations Stevens hurried through his own paper, flunking it, to write an 'A' paper for his protege, Kelley, and McGook and Grabbenheim won honor, too.

"But the three fell into bad ways. One week there was much activity of a social nature, but Aloysius McGook, Sr., providentially died way out West, and McGook, Jr., took with him his friends Kelley and Grabbenheim to Albuquerque, New Mexico, to act as pall-bearers.

"After they returned, Grabbenheim's mentor miscalculated, one day, and Grabbenheim would have been marked 'unprepared,' had there not been presence of mind enough about him to rush from the classroom, groaning loudly, and later to send, under the signature of 'Isadore A. Grabbenheim' a word to the effect that his 'son Hermon had suddenly contracted acute appendicitis.'

"Herman never returned to Western State, and for a time Kelley and McGook recited with all their oldtime perfection and fervor, gladdening Lewis' heart.

"One day the old man came into class smiling beautifully, but with a tear in his eye, for all that. 'Students, I have here a letter, signed jointly by your classmates, Robert Kelley and Aloysius McGook. I will read its concluding paragraph. . . . "In short, sir, we have been so fired with religious enthusiasm by your course that we cannot wait even the few weeks which must elapse until school is over. We are leaving this very morning, for China, to become—missionaries."'"

Campus Sentiment Favors Repeal Of Prohibition Laws

Candidates For President Student Body Speak This Morning In Gerrard Hall

Red Green and Marion Alexander Expected to Outline Policies for Coming Year.

FARRIS WILL PRESIDE

Mass Meeting of Students to Be Held to Hear Addresses of Candidates for Highest Office On Campus.

According to the announcement of Ray Farris, president of the student body, the two candidates for presidency next year, Red Greene and Marion Alexander, will outline their policies for next year in Gerrard hall this morning at chapel period. The election, both of campus and class officers, will be held tomorrow from 9 until 5 with booths located in the lobby of the Y and in front of Gerrard hall.

In the past all candidates for the highest office within the gift of the student body have addressed the students at mass meetings during the campaign preceding the election. Candidates for other offices as a rule do not issue statements officially but indications are that this year both candidates for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel, Will Yarborough and Joe Jones, will state their positions on campus matters before the election.

The nominations were made during the early part of the week. The Daily Tar Heel nominated its candidate Sunday night, the editors of the Yackety Yack, Buccaneer and Magazine presented their nominations to Publications Union Board (these were passed on to the president of the student body) and the board nominated its candidates Monday night. Tuesday morning during chapel other candidates were nominated in a general meeting of the entire student body.

CHILDREN TO GIVE CLEAN UP PARADE

A juvenile Clean Up parade, which, if it is equal to past affairs of its kind, will be interesting both to spectators and participants, is to be staged at 10:30 Saturday morning, starting from the high school.

Chapel Hill schools and women's clubs are sponsoring the event, hoping in this way to inculcate habits of cleanliness and feelings of civic pride in the minds of the rising generation of citizenry.

Three prizes for original costumes are being offered, and those taking part in the parade plan to dress in a manner suggestive of cleanliness. Two years ago, at the last event of the kind, Professor Murchison's twins, black-faced, represented the Gold Dust Twins. Mrs. Logan's children won the grand prize for their representation of a garbage can being carried along by two children. Dean Hibbard's little daughter, now five, then three, is expected to duplicate her pleasant role of diminutive scrubwoman. Red Devil Lye's sensational dirt chaser will vie for honors, it is expected, with the lady on the Old Dutch Cleanser can.

Saville and Brown Inspect Farm Dikes

Thorndike Saville, professor of hydraulic and sanitary engineering, and J. T. Brown, assistant engineer of the water resources division of the state department of cnservation and development, visited the state prison farm in Halifax county Tuesday to make a preliminary inspection of the dikes protecting the farm from the overflow of the Roanoke river.

The inspection Tuesday was a preliminary survey to a detailed survey and report of improvements and repairs to the dikes which will be made at a later date by the department of conservation and development. This later survey will be in charge of Mr. Brown.

The present dikes, which are about ten miles long, were built prior to the Civil War with slave labor, and they are now in a weakened condition, badly needing repairs to safeguard the lands of the prison from the flood waters of the Roanoke river.

Billy Arthur Sells Tar Heel Bookings

Billy Arthur, as the director, is rapidly becoming a trade mark for the Tar Heel orchestra. To outsiders, the organization is known as "the orchestra with the little director." Billy never fails to make a hit with his "bucket song," written by the drummer, Freddie Clark, former drummer with Ross Gorman's orchestra. One of his favoriite tricks is standing on top of the piano to sing.

The Tar Heels are engaged to play the German Club Dances at the University of Georgia this week end. They played the mid-winter German dances at Sewanee and have a return engagement to play there for the finals in June. They also played for the mid-winter German dances at V. P. I. and Staunton Military Academy.

The orchestra has played this year at Hampton-Sidney and has a return engagement there. They have been engaged to play for the next Grail dance here, and the Theta Chi dance.

Ex-Scouts to Meet

All University students who are ex-scouts and who are interested in the newly organized chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, national scouting fraternity, are requested to meet on the second floor of the Y at 9:30 this evening.

At this meeting, which is the second of the local chapter, officers of the local organization will be elected.

Assembly Favors Modification

The Philanthropic Assembly held its regular weekly meeting last Tuesday night. Quite a heated argument developed over the discussion of the bill before the assembly, "Resolved, That the Phi Assembly go on record as favoring enforcement rather than modification or repeal of all prohibition laws now existing. The proposition was defeated.

DRAMA CLASSES PRESENT PLAYS

Studio Productions of One Act Plays to Be Given in Playmakers Theatre.

The class in play production taught by Hubert Heffner will give studio productions of one-act plays Friday and Saturday nights in the Playmaker theatre. The performance will be open to the public without charge.

These plays are being presented once each year with entirely new actors chosen from outside the play production class in the hope of stimulating more interest in acting and training new actors for the regular Playmaker production; those who have experience in these studio productions have excellent opportunity to break into the cast of regular productions. A majority of the new actors in "Romeo and Juliet" were in the studio production last year.

The plays to be presented, the casts, and directors are: Friday night, The Man in the Bowlder Hat by A. A. Milne with cast of: Mary, played by Mary Marshall Dunlap; John, George Frederic Cole; Heroine, Kate Graham; Hero, Claude Ballard; Badman, William Dike; Chief Villain, Lucas Abels. Community Club To Hold Flower Show

The April Bulletin of the Chapel Hill Community Club has recently been issued, and announces the most spectacular event of the club year, namely the Flower Show to be held in the Tin Can on May 1, from noon until midnight.

A request has been made by the club treasurer for members to pay their dues as soon as possible in order to finish this year's account.

The Sketch Club will meet for outdoor work on April 9, 16, 23 and 30. Members are requested to have their exhibits for the Flower Show ready by April 28.

On April 16 at 3 o'clock Mrs. F. H. Edmister will have charge of a Garden Club program at her house.

The home department will feature a lecture on weaving some time this month, while the health department will meet on Friday, April 11, at 3:30 at the home of Mrs. Otto Stuhlman.

On April 15 at 7:30, the literature department will meet in the social rooms of the Methodist church, on the first floor, when Mrs. D. D. Carroll will review "The Great Meadow," by Elizabeth Maddox Roberts. At the second meeting, to be held in the same place, Mrs. R. H. Wettach will review "The Tragic Era" by Claude Bower.

Due to the necessity for extra music programs in May, in connection with National Music Week, there will be no meeting of the music department this month.

Dr. Collier Cobb Says There Is No Oil In North Carolina

Dr. Collier Cobb, head of the geology department, headed a list of four prominent speakers at a dinner meeting of the Sigma Xi, national scientific fraternity, in the Carolina Inn here Tuesday night.

The University chapter of the Sigma Xi is the only one in the state. Tuesday night's meeting was the largest yet to be held. Cards had been mailed to all local and southern members with the result that approximately 75 places were set for the dinner.

Dr. Cobb, speaking on "Dome Structures in Coastal Plains of North Carolina," explained why he so often repeats that "if there is any oil in North Carolina, there is no geological evidence of it."

"In spite of the fact that so many people have seen oil on the surface of our swamp lands, the lakes in North Carolina are in no sense oil domes," Dr. Collier Cobb pointed out, "but are old sounds closed up by the growth of vegetation after the inflowing rivers had leached out the salt. Such rapid changes have been in progress in Albemarle Sound since the closing of the inlets. The inflowing Northeast river leached out the salt and fresh water vegetation began a rapid growth which would soon have closed up the sound."

The Dismal Swamp, Dr. Cobb said, had gone through exactly the same process. Lying on a hillside and sloping from the west to the east, it receives streams from the east and discharges water north, south, and east. "Many large conifers grow over these areas," the geologist explained, "and their exudations furnish the 'juniper tar' and 'cyprus oil' often seen on the surface."

These swamps furnish examples of the first stage in the formation of oil from plant forms. Dr. Cobb illustrated by referring to certain Russian bogs and swamps, fields of Karafuto in Japan, of Niigata, and of Louisiana. He was of the opinion that "it may be many millions of years before the 'oil' in North Carolina swamps becomes petroleum."

Following Dr. Cobb were Dr. W. F. Prouty, who spoke on "The Structure and Characteristics of the Triassic Deposits of This State"; Dr. J. H. Swartz, who

ENGINEER SOCIETY TO ATTEND PARTY

The local student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers has received an invitation to attend a birthday party in Raleigh next Tuesday evening in honor of the 50th anniversary of the founding of the society. The party, to which the student branches at both Carolina and State have been invited, is being sponsored by the Raleigh section of the society and the Raleigh Engineers Club.

The meeting will be in the nature of a joint meeting of the two professional organizations and the two student groups. All students wishing to attend this meeting are requested to see E. M. Lowery in the mechanical engineering senior room before Saturday afternoon so that reservations may be made.

At the dinner, W. C. Olsen will speak on the history and development of the society, and slides will be shown illustrating events of especial interest in the history of the organization.

In addition to the talk by Mr. Olsen, the group will hear phonograph reproductions of speeches that are to be made at the national birthday party to be held in Washington at the same evening.

Gas Installation For Town Probable

Representatives of the Durham Public Service Company were in Chapel Hill last night, conferring with members of the board of aldermen at a special meeting relative to the installation of gas in Chapel Hill.

It is expected that the company will concede requested concessions of the local board, one of which is the laying of 100 feet of main from the principal street main toward the residence of the user, without cost to the user. A rate of about $1.80 per thousand cubic feet of gas is expected, as against a rate of $2.40 contemplated by a Chicago concern which sought entrance here.

Additional details of the meeting will be published in a later issue of thetedetaoinshrdluetaoi Tar Heel. Gas installation is very probable here, since there are already a score or more families using tanked gas.

Of interest at this time is an announcement by the University Consolidated Service Plants, setting forth a new rate for electric current used in cooking and heating water, with reductions up to 25 to 30 per cent.

Sketch Club Meets

The Sketch Club held its first meeting of the month yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. W. E. Caldwell.

The first part of the afternoon was spent in making posters for next month's flower show, and at 5 o'clock Mrs. Frank D. Mosher read a paper on James McNeill Whistler.

At the same time chairmen of the sections of the flower show representing the Garden Club, met in Davis hall to make plans.

944 Take Part in Balloting Conducted by Daily Tar Heel; Polls Closed Yesterday.

658 WOULD TAKE DRINK

Only 380 of Voters Stated That They Did Not Drink; 142 Favor Enforcement of Prohibition Laws.

Evidently the students at the University are either uninterested in the prohibition law or they are satisfied with conditions just as they are for out of a student body of more than two thousand less than half voted in the three-day poll conducted by the Daily Tar Heel. However, of 944 who voted 658 wanted repeal of the 18th amendment, 144 favored modification and 142 favored strict enforcement.

Among the drinkers and non-drinkers the count stood 564 for those who drank and 380 for those who did not drink.

The poll was started last Sunday by the Daily in an effort to determine among students here as to modification, repeal or enforcement of the 18th amendment and other prohibition laws passed in pursuance of the amendment. Although the vote was light the first two days of the poll yesterday a flood of votes cast by the campus "wets" indicated that sentiment here was for repeal of the prohibition laws.

Even those who professed not to drink desired some change in the laws with a third favoring enforcement, more than 80 favoring repeal and 44 desiring modification.

The heavy voting for repeal came among those who drank frequently, almost half favoring absolute repeal, and none desiring enforcement. The count among the occasional drinkers favored repeal or modification with less than one fifth voting for enforcement.

Kiwanis Club Holds April Fool Meeting

The Chapel Hill Kiwanis Club held its regular weekly meeting Tuesday night at 7 o'clock in the basement of the Methodist church. At this April Fool meeting the members played all sorts of jokes on one another. The dinner was even served backward. The members expected Crawford Biggs of Durham to be there and help out with the fun making, but he was unable to attend. The initiation of Frank Graham, C. O. Hoyle and John Umstead was the feature of much enjoyment.

The program was arranged and carried out by Rev. Eugene Olive, after which the president read a letter of invitation from Burlington. The members of the club, along with their wives or lady friends, were invited to attend a meeting of the four clubs from Burlington, Graham, Mebane and Chapel Hill. The motion to accept the invitation was passed. Instead of their regular meeting on March 21, they will go to the tenth anniversary meeting in Burlington on March 24.

The "Anti-Religious" Campaign in Russia

During the past few weeks the campaign of protest against reported anti-religious "atrocities" in Russia has gained considerable momentum, and at present it seems to have assumed world proportions. But many thoughtful persons, including some of the most prominent leaders in the Christian church, have expressed the opinion that the protest movement is a colossal mistake.

A statement issued several weeks ago by Bishop Nikolai of the Russian Orthodox church was the inception of the protest movement. He declared that the Russian government was waging an anti-religious campaign, and that several members of the clergy had been tortured and murdered. In an interview with a representative of the Manchester (England) Guardian about two weeks ago, however, he admitted that the atrocities he mentioned had occurred in 1918, and there was no evidence that they had been committed by the soviet government. On the contrary, a mob had murdered the men during the Russian civil war.

Rev. Donald Grant, general secretary of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation, returned to England a few days ago after a visit of three weeks to Russia. He reported that the soviets were conducting an anti-religious campaign, but that he had come across nothing that could be described as an atrocity. The campaign has been conducted for the past ten years, according to the minister. It is carried on chiefly by propaganda, of which the Anti-Religious museum is an example. It contains exhibits illustrating the Darwinian theory of evolution and so forth; while lecturers discuss and demolish certain beliefs of the orthodox church-beliefs, for the most part, not held by educated Christians in other countries.

Mr. Grant was in close touch with several Christian people in Russia, people who knew the religious and political situation very well, and were themselves bearing the brunt of the anti-religious campaign. He reports that they believe that protests to the Russian government from people in other countries would be quite ineffectual, and would only increase the spirit of fear. The only thing that outsiders can do, according to these Russian Christians, is to persuade their countries to recognize the soviet government.

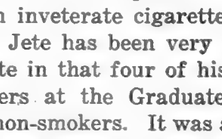
Personally, we believe that the protest campaign is ill-advised at the present time. The anti-religious movement in Russia was initiated as a protest against the repressive policies of a church which imposed harsh restrictions upon the lower classes, and extorted money from them which they could ill afford. It is significant that the two great capitalistic nations, Great Britain and the United States, are the promulgators of the protest campaign, and there are many indications that it is directed against the soviet system for political rather than religious reasons. We hold no brief for the soviet system as such, but we do not believe that it should be attacked under the hypocritical garb of a religious protest.

According to what appears to be reliable evidence, the protest campaign is not based upon facts accurately ascertained. It has already stirred up passions and fears both in and out of Russia, and it is likely to prevent a calm and intelligent consideration of the situation. Obviously the effects of the protest campaign are primarily political, whatever its aims may be. At any rate, it cannot be accepted at face value by thoughtful observers.

The Savage Tendency In Modern Education

In the current issue of Scribner's magazine there appears an article by a prominent English educator on both the savage and civilized phases of modern education. This article, in addition to stressing the inadequacy of our schooling methods when it comes to imparting knowledge, discusses the more physical side of youth's education.

By the physical side is meant the anachronistic tendencies still latent among undergraduates, here and in England, to haze and to indulge in tests of strength and "courage" of a particularly violent sort. While hazing is slowly dying out, in the more civilized institutions at least, a virulent expression of the other tendency is still very much in evidence, among the students of this country, in the initiation rites of fraternities and similar organizations.



Much of this horseplay which fraternity men seem to consider necessary for the neophyte to pass through, before he becomes a full-fledged "brother," is of an amusing and harmless sort. But even the harmless kind has a ready facility for degenerating into practices seriously dangerous. Human ingenuity can conceive of extraordinary feats for victims to perform, feats which often bespeak the savage impulse in mankind that has never been well buried. In the article referred to the author calls to mind a certain sorority in a well known institution whose idea of the proper ceremony for initiation was to keep a girl, clad only in the thinnest apparel, confined for an hour to a room, the temperature of which was zero.

Examples of the unnecessary roughness and risk of many fraternity and sorority initiations can be mentioned indefinitely. There was the case of the boy killed by a live wire while undergoing initiation at a leading southern university. Such cases are unpleasant but very evident reminders of the inhumane streak still preserved in human nature, in spite of all the efforts of civilization.

Another characteristic of the same brutal and unnecessary species of humor is exemplified by the vulgarity often attendant upon the "sacred" rites. Rotten egg throwing, the enforced singing of bawdy songs in public, and numerous other actions, many of them unprintable and all of them severely censurable, —to all this must the victim submit.

When the brutal and the violent is removed from the sporadic fun occasioned by fraternity horseplay every one concerned will benefit, and the general atmosphere of college life will be more wholesome.—R. H.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

Have you ever heard of Jete, who is a pot-walloper in the Graduate Club kitchen? He is a dwarf, but his heart is big. The top of his head is bald and black and shiny. His grin, and he grins easily, discloses teeth which appear white between such dark lips. His arms, shoulders, and his hairy chest are bravely muscled, and he can carry heavy loads on his back. Coming down the basement steps and through the low doorway with a great bag of meal on his back he is like some quaint gnome bearing loot into his enchanted cavern. He never comes in with the groceries on his shoulders but that I peep at him from the corner of my eye and remind myself to hunt up a fairy book and reacquaint myself with dwarfs and goblins.

Poor Jete must all his days forego the pleasure of books, for he can neither read nor write. He is able to recognize a can of salmon only if it has the picture of a fish on the outside, or a can of peas if their likeness is on the wrapper, but all unillustrated tinned goods are a mystery to him until he can lay hands on a can-opener.

An inveterate cigarette bummer, Jete has been very unfortunate in that four of his eight waiters at the Graduate Club are non-smokers. It was at first a bitter blow for him, but he now consoles his smoke appetite at the expense of Generous Jim, the baker's boy, who daily visits the kitchen. I have promised to bring him a cigar wrapped in silver foil, and I really intend to do so, but somehow I never think of it when I am down town. Only yesterday he asked me about it again.

Jete likes to borrow dimes and forget it. One day he inquired about my financial health, and I, happening to be flush with a laundry refund, said quite readily, "How much do you want, Jete?" He was so heartened by my manner that he couldn't resist the temptation to try to raise me above the usual dime. He said that he needed fifteen cents, and added quickly that he really ought to ask me for a quarter, but that he reckoned twenty cents would do.

As a builder of air castles, Jeter, for that is his real name, is somewhat like the young wastrel in Professor Green's No 'Count Boy. He will elaborate about things he wants us to do together some day, but nothing ever comes of it. Last fall he was forever telling me about a place not far from Chapel Hill where there were plenty of rabbits. He promised to take me there and show me some good hunting, but when Saturday came Jete would always have some excuse for not going. Just before spring holidays he got me wrought up with stories of a fine fishing place he knew 'way up Morgan Creek. I agreed to stay on the Hill a day and try it out with him, but he didn't show up—said his wife was sick, I believe. I wonder if he really does know of a fish hole up Morgan Creek.

I wish Jete and I had gone fishing together that day. I should like to sit and talk with him on the creek bank. I don't believe we'd get a nibble, but I like to think that Jete would have something interesting to say, there in the spring sunshine, something he hasn't said in the kitchen. But perhaps I would be disappointed. Perhaps he would inquire about the cigar wrapped in silver foil.

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

Thursday, April 3.—Topic for the day: "The Evil of Brooding." (Read Phillipians 2:12-18). Key verse: "Work out your own salvation."

Meditation: Work it out! Brooding over trouble is the surest way to hatch a new brood of troubles, or to speed growth in the existing brood. We can rear troubles as we can rear children and chickens. Attention enough will make bugaboos out of bagatelles. Trouble dies only of neglect and inattention due to preoccupation with constructive activity. Courage to keep a helpful task helps one gain the mastery over trouble and to keep it from building a nest in one's mind. Work is one of God's handmaids.

Prayer: O thou, who dost lift up the heavy hearts of men, keep us from vain and wasteful brooding over our troubles and losses. May we hear the bidding of good cheer and have the grace to keep our minds at peace amid all the labors and conflicts of our lives. Amen.

There have always been flappers. They have always been scolded. And 99 per cent of them become lovely, wholesome women. We wonder why there is so much scolding in the world. The young folks always turn out well. And nearly every obnoxious condition soon blows over. We believe humanity criticises itself too much—Atchison Globe.

Here is no bashful cereal

THIS is Kellogg's Rice Krispies speaking — the cereal that tells the world how good each golden mouthful is! It's a fact! When you pour milk or cream in a bowlful of Rice Krispies, these crunchy rice bubbles actually crackle out loud. And what a delicious flavor!

Eat Rice Krispies for breakfast — great for a quick lunch with fruits or honey added. And what could be better for a late bed-time snack at the campus restaurant? The world's most different cereal! Have you heard it yet?

Kellogg's RICE KRISPIES

The most popular cereals served in the dining-rooms of American colleges, eating clubs and fraternities are made by Kellogg in Battle Creek. Washington And Lee Meets Carolina Today

Infield Play Of Carolina Team To Be Feature Of First Tri-State Contest

Three Veterans Will Perform For Carolina Infield Positions.

FLEMING LIKELY HURLER

First Southern Conference Opposition to Be Met on Emerson Field This Afternoon at 4 O'clock.

Opening their Tri - State League season against Washington and Lee here this afternoon at 4 o'clock, the Tar Heel baseball team will show one of the snappiest infields put out at Carolina in years.

Last year's splendid infield was one of the big reasons for Carolina's Tri-State title. Captain Maus, Marshall Rand, Burgess Whitehead and Nap Lufty are veterans back for four of five infield posts, and Phil Jackson is coming along nicely at first, to give prospects of another fine combination.

The select quintet started the season with a bang when it pulled a snappy triple play in its opening 18-7 game with Springfield. The combination worked brilliantly again in two games with Cornell, Whitehead's work in accepting 15 chances without a flaw in the first game proving an especial feature.

The Tar Heel pitching force seems fairly well settled also. The veterans Wright and Fleming have both looked good in opening games and will probably carry the brunt of the season's hurling. Supporting them will be a corps of rookies, any one of whom may come through, including Longest, Tom and Paul Edwards, Park and Hinton.

A galaxy of talent is out for outfield posts, including four right-handed batters and three outstanding left-handed hitters, so that Coach Ashmore will probably juggle his outfielders considerably to meet different brands of hurling.

The Tar Heels came through their opening 18-7 win from Springfield and through their two-game series with Cornell in fine shape, and are well set for today's Tri-State opener with Washington and Lee.

Frank Fleming, who worked the splendid 3-2 victory over Cornell on Monday, will have had two days of rest, and will probably draw the important hurling assignment for the Tar Heels.

Golf Tournament Begins Saturday

The third of the series of spring golf tournaments will begin Saturday afternoon at 2:30, according to an announcement made by the golf committee of the Chapel Hill golf club.

Each entrant is to play 16 holes—twice around the present eight-hole course—and subtract his handicap as posted on the bulletin board at the club house from his total score, turning in the score to the chairman of the golf committee.

Merchants of the village have contributed prizes to make the play worth while, and the golf committee will determine by the number that enter the play Saturday whether or not to continue the tournaments. Stetson "D" offers a sweater to the one making the lowest score on Saturday, the Student Supply store a dozen golf balls to second lowest scorer, and Pritchard Patterson Co., a pair of golf hose to the third lowest scorer.

Intramural Notice

Crayton Rowe, boxing coach, requests all entries in the intramural boxing tournament to report at the Tin Can today at 3 instead of 4 o'clock.

BETAS AWARDED FENCING HONORS

Brown, of Beta Theta Pi, Campus Champion; Teams Selected.

The fencers of Beta Theta Pi won the honors in the individual intramural tournament in the Tin Can, four of their five entries reaching the semi-finals, with Brown coming out on top as the campus champion. The Beta team also won the team tournament championship match with Zeta Psi yesterday by a score of six to three.

The results of some of the matches were quite unexpected, especially in the case of Cooper, Zeta Psi swordsman, who was generally regarded as the favorite to win the championship. In the first round of the tournament he met Poindexter of the Buccaneers and was defeated after a hard bout, three touches to two. Poindexter, in turn, met defeat in the next round at the hands of Brown, losing by three touches to none. The semifinals found three members of the Betas' first team and one from their second team still remaining in the competition, Waugh, Brown, and Fenker being the members of Beta No. 1, and Uzzell being the representative of Beta No. 2 still in the "Beta party." Brown won his way into the finals by defeating his teammate, Waugh, in a bout replete with fancy thrusts and sensational parries, and Fenker won over Uzzell in a hard fight to gain the final round.

The final bout was decided on a basis of the first five touches instead of the first three out of five. Brown started off brilliantly, performing as if he were about to complete the match without being touched. He touched Fenker three times without a return, but then Fenker rallied to even the score at three all. Brown fenced daringly to win with difficulty the next two touches and the individual intramural championship.

After the tournament, all-campus teams were selected as follows: first team: No. 1, Brown, Beta Theta Pi; No. 2, Waugh, Beta Theta Pi; No. 3, Cooper, Zeta Psi, and Fenker,

Looking Them Over

by

Browning Roach

Dissatisfied Duke alumni are beginning to pat themselves on the back now that Wallace Wade of the University of Alabama has signed the five-year contract to direct the Blue Devils in their athletic affairs. An unsuccessful football season always elicits dissatisfaction from grid fans, and as soon as the Alma Mater drops two or three games in succession alumni begin to set up a howl for another coach. The responsibility for the success may or may not rest largely with the coach, but invariably he gets the lion's share of the blame, and only a small portion of the credit.

Lack of cooperation between the coach and his players and a hostile attitude on the part of team supporters does much to mar the smoothness with which a football team carries out its part on the gridiron, but the comparatively poor showing made by the Blue Devils last fall may be attributed in a large measure to the over-ambitious schedule undertaken by a squad somewhat deficient in veteran material. To take on such outfits as Pitt, Villanova and the U. S. Naval Academy and expect to get anything other than a sound drubbing denotes superlative optimism in an eleven that has yet to establish its supremacy, or even prestige, in Southern Conference circles. Intersectional games are all right for a team striving to build up a name for itself if that team is able to put up a good enough scrap to justify a clash with an ostensibly superior opponent.

Bringing with him a record such as Wade has for building up championship teams, and given a year's advance notice to get out of a slump, future prospects for Duke on the gridiron take on a more hopeful aspect. Through a period of seven years, Wallace Wade has coached the Crimson Tide to the Southern Conference gridiron title on three successive years, won one and tied one Rose Bowl game, went through a Southern Conference schedule undefeated and unscored on one year, and in 65 games played lost only a scant dozen. In his first year at Alabama, 1923, Wade's proteges lost only two games, one to Florida and one to Syracuse, and in the next three years came through victorious in every contest except one with Centre in 1924—the same Centre college eleven that was hailed as national champion. If Wade can turn in anything like such a good record at our sister university, we are ready to grant that the impossible has been accomplished.

Since the anti-DeHart element has manifestly accomplished its purpose in putting DeHart on the shelf—that is, he will be replaced after the coming season—it is not too much to expect that he will be granted a little more cooperation next fall. The Blue Devils are taking on a slightly less difficult schedule this year, and should be able to come through with a better showing than they made in 1929.

Georgia Tech Is Expected To Bring Strong Track Team Here For Carolina Meet Saturday

Freshmen to Hold Quadrangular Meet With Wilmington, Charlotte and Greensboro.

HAMM IS TECH LEADER

Loud Speaker Being Installed For Use at Track Pageant on Emerson Field This Week-End; Hamm and Graydon Tech Stars.

Simultaneously with the Carolina-Georgia Tech track meet here Saturday afternoon will be held a meet between the Carolina freshmen and the track teams from Wilmington, Charlotte and Greensboro high schools, it was announced here.

Three high school teams against whom the Carolina frosh will compete regularly present the leading high school cinder teams in the state. The freshman meet is an annual affair. Its scheduling in connection with the Carolina-Georgia Tech varsity meet assures a continuous program of action, promising a rare treat for the epicurean track fan on Saturday.

Field events will begin at 2:30, track events at 3 o'clock. The whole meet will be run off on definite time schedule of 1 hour 45 minutes. The University's loudspeaker set is being added to make the meet doubly enjoyable for spectators.

Georgia Tech, led by the redoubtable Ed Hamm, who holds three southern records and a world record in the broadjump, is this year regarded as one of the strongest teams in the south. The Techmen, too, will be shooting to break the enviable record of no defeats in dual meets for eight years.

Carolina was weakened considerably by the graduation last year of such stars as Cowper and Harper, who placed first in the vault and discus at the Southern Conference meet, but still has another strong team. There are 11 veterans on the Tar Heel roster, covering every event but the javelin, and a number of fine youngsters. These include Brodie Arnold, who has already this spring set a new University vaulting record, and Charlie Farmer, who beat the south's best sprinters at the recent Southern Conference indoor games, and Theron Brown, high-point man in the last meet here.

Both the varsity and freshman-high school meets are expected to produce their thrills, but the forecasters are expecting one of the biggest from the Hamm-Farmer race.

Tennis Finals To Be Held Friday

The finals of the varsity and freshman tennis tournaments will be played off on the Carolina courts Friday afternoon at 2:30. The varsity finals were postponed from yesterday afternoon until Friday afternoon and will immediately follow the freshman meet to be held first.

Yeomans and Hendlin will meet for the varsity title, while Hines and Grant will contest for the freshman laurels. Yeomans defeated Graham in the semi-finals in straight sets, and Hendlin trimmed Merritt in two straight duced sets, 7-5, 7-5. Hines won over Abels by an easy margin in the freshman semi-finals and Grant trimmed Wright to advance.

Unemployment is increasing rapidly in Australia.

Postal savings in Japan now total nearly one billion dollars.

Frosh Subs to Report

All freshmen desiring to try out for sub-assistant track manager are asked by the manager to report at Emerson field this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Frosh Tennis Team To Enter Tournament

The Tar Babies will represent Carolina in the North and South tennis tournament to be held in Pinehurst beginning April 14 and lasting through April 19. At present there are five leading freshman netmen contending for positions on the team to make the trip. The fourth position on the freshman squad is the most hotly contested of any with Burnatt and Abels the two leading candidates for this position. The other three men that will probably make the trip are Grant, Hines and Wright.

The varsity will be unable to make the trip to Pinehurst because of other meets that interfere. The season for the varsity will begin with the Alabama meet here on April 15 and the Davidson match on the following day. The state intercollegiate tournament will be held at Carolina beginning April 17 and lasting through the 14th. Yeomans, Hendlin, Merritt and Graham will probably be the Tar Heels entered in these meets.

Pi Kappa Phi's Win

Pi Kappa Phi doubled the score on Kappa Alpha yesterday afternoon, 8-4, in the first day of the intramural baseball season. There was no accurate box score kept, but the feature of the game was the pitching of Barker Williams, Pi Kappa Phi freshman. Only seven men faced him in the first two innings, six striking out and one getting a walk. After the third he began to tire, and the K. A.'s garnered four runs.

Daniel, K. A., called to the first two innings, six striking box after two disastrous innings, pitched well for the remainder of the game. Davis, Martin and Oliver led the hitting.

Penn Boxing Captain Dies Result Injuries

Oliver Horne, captain of the University of Pennsylvania's boxing team, died Saturday night as a result of injuries sustained when he was knocked out in his bout in the middleweight division of the national intercollegiate tournament at Philadelphia March 22nd, by William Struble, member of the Penn State team. Horne never regained consciousness despite the administration of all medical aid possible, but seemed to be holding his own until the 28th, when he began to weaken under the effects of the concussion, and died Saturday night. His fraternity brothers in Lambda Chi Alpha acted as pall bearers at his funeral.

Struble was ordered to appear in magistrate's court to answer a formal charge of manslaughter immediately preferred against him, but it was stated that this charge is a mere formality and has been lodged only to carry out the law and to establish testimony on the records as to how the youth met his death.

It will be remembered that Struble is the boxer who defeated John Warren here in a four round bout in the light-heavyweight division on the Penn State-Carolina match held in the Tin Can February 22, exactly one month before the accident at the intercollegiates.

Graduate School Announces Choice Of Teaching Fellows

409 Applications Received This Year for Research Work At University; 27 Chosen; 90 Applications from Women Turned Down Because of Ineligibility of Appointment.

Dr. W. W. Pierson, Jr., acting dean of the Graduate School, announces that there has been an unusually large number of applications for teaching fellowships this year: 204 from men and 90 from women. In addition to these there have been received 50 applications for appointment by the Institute for Research in Social Science and 65 applications for appointment to University graduate scholarships. In other words, the acting dean pointed out, the Graduate office has received 409 applications from persons who thereby expressed their desire to do research work and graduate work at the University of North Carolina.

There are 26 fellowships and 204 applications. Nothing at all could be done for the 90 women who applied, since women are ineligible for this class of appointment. There are 15 University scholarships and 65 applicants. Thus, it was further pointed out, there is a greater need now than ever before for a larger number of fellowships and scholarships.

DEBATERS CHOSEN

The recent debate tryout on "Resolved, that the principle of the chain store is detrimental to the best interests of the American public" resulted in the selection of Bill Uzzell, McB. Fleming-Jones, W. W. Speight, and J. A. Wilkinson.

Uzzell and Wilkinson will represent the University against Northwestern here April 15 in Gerrard hall. Speight and Fleming-Jones will meet Maryland at College Park, April 11.

BETAS AWARDED FENCING HONORS

Beta Theta Pi. All of these men will be awarded with gold tie pin foils as a reward for their aid in starting intramural fencing off right and for their ability at the sport. The second team is: No. 1, Uzzell, Beta Theta Pi; No. 2, Egan, Manly; No. 3, Valk, Zeta Psi. Those who received honorable mention were Urban, Buccaneers; Poindexter, Buccaneers; Pratt, Zeta Psi; Lynch, Beta Theta Pi, and Furchgott, Sea Hawks.

This brings intramural fencing to the close of a most successful first season, in which fifteen teams comprised of some seventy men took part in over fifty matches, and in which a great deal of interest and keen competition developed both spontaneously and through the efforts of Hinkey Hendlin, fencing director, Harry Galland, varsity manager, Bob Linker, faculty advosor, Herby Estep, Fred and Dig Wardlaw, members of the varsity team. Especial credit should be given to Hendlin, who gave a great deal of his time and effort to this project, and to the Wardlaw brothers, who, because of their constant coaching, were responsible to a large degree for the success of their fraternity's team, the Betas. Fencing as a regular university sport is here to stay, and the campus has these men to thank for it.

Varsity fencing will begin soon, the opening match being scheduled for the Tin Can on April 19 with Georgia Tech. A match with Georgia has been arranged and will follow soon after the Tech match, but as yet no definite date has been set.

The grade of fencing shown in the intramurals has not yet attained that of the varsity, but as several substitutes will be used in the matches with Georgia and Georgia Tech, those intramural fencers thought to have the best possibilities of future development on the varsity will be invited to try out for varsity competition.

Summary of the tournament results:

FIRST ROUND

Waugh, Beta No. 1, bye.

Pratt, Zeta Psi, defeated Furchgott, Sea Hawks.

Poindexter, Buccaneers, defeated Cooper, Zeta Psi.

IF YOU RECEIVED THE LETTERS you write

Would you be proud of them or just a bit sheepish? What about the appearance of the envelope—the paper? Would they make you want to read the letter itself?

Old Hampshire Stationery has that ability—it impels one to read the message. It is aristocratic, rich, substantial. It makes a letter stand out of the crowd.

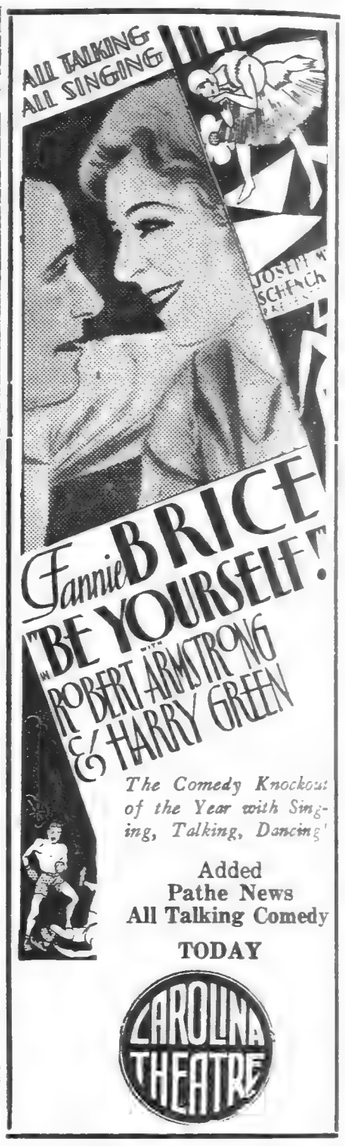
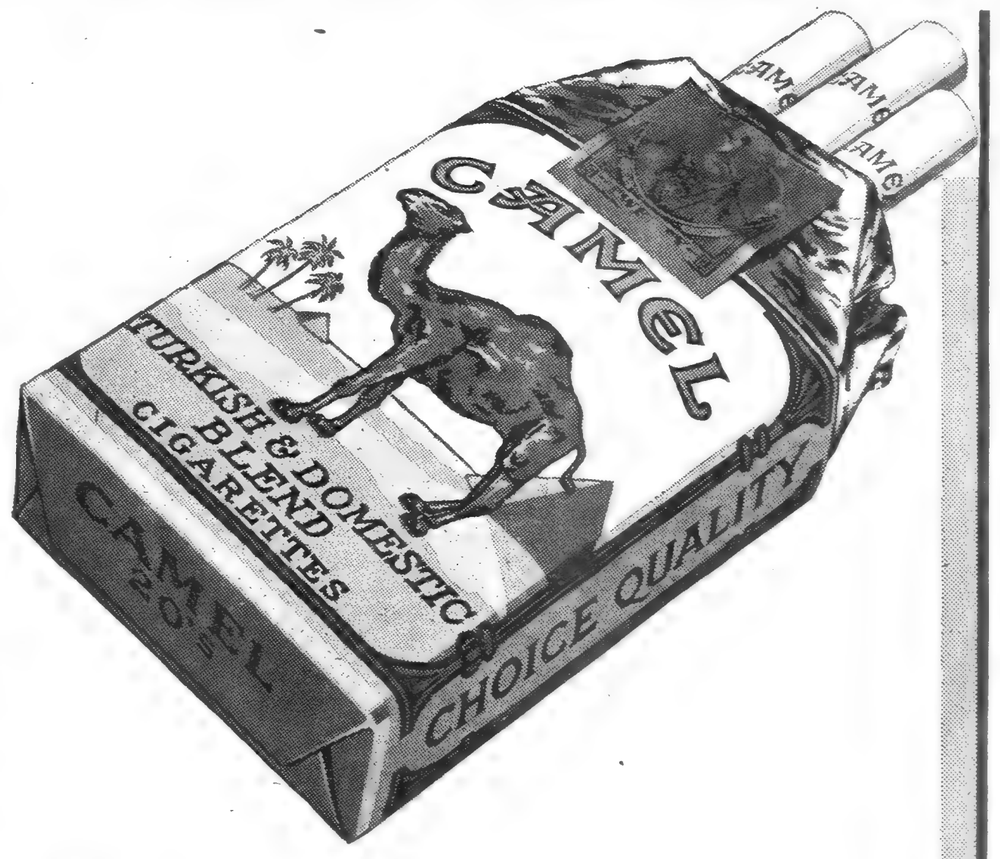
"BE YOURSELF" SHOWS AT CAROLINA TODAY

Two of the principals in "Be Yourself," the United Artists all-sound, musical and dramatic picture which shows today at the Carolina theatre, were former lawyers, who turned to the state because the future promised them greater wealth.

Robert Armstrong, Fannie Brice's leading man in this lively story of the midnight cabarets and the prize-ring, is a graduate of the law school of Washington University. Harry Green, who portrays a fledgling lawyer, was similarly graduated from New York University.



By a strange coincidence, both men used the stage to pay their way through school. In Armstrong's case, he wrote a school play which was so successful that he toured the country with it for three years. Green made his theatrical debut singing between reel changes in the old-fashioned nickelodeons of twenty years ago.



"Be Yourself," which stars Miss Brice in a lively musical story, is an excellent vehicle for the noted vaudeville and revue artist, who sings six songs in the picture.

Others in the cast are Gertrude Astor, G. Pat Collins, the New York actor; Budd Fine and fourteen-year-old Jimmy Tolson, who makes his screen debut as a singer of "blues" songs.

Judging from the number of voters with sore backs and candidates with recently-calloused hands, there will be physical relief in all quarters when the campus elections are over.

Standing out
as the better cigarette

THE SINGLE IDEA of superlative quality was the inspiration for Camel Cigarettes.

From the time when the first Camel Cigarette was made that one idea has set Camel apart.

A policy of better tobaccos, combined in an incomparable blend, manufactured with the most exacting care—all to assure the utmost pleasure in smoking. That is the ideal and the practice back of every package of Camel Cigarettes.

It has made Camel the most popular cigarette ever known. More millions have chosen Camels for smoking pleasure than ever accorded their patronage to any other cigarette.

Annual Dramatic Festival Meets Here Next Week

Almost Every Section of the State Will Be Represented; Final Contests To Be Held Friday Afternoon.

Several hundred representatives of college, high school, and community dramatic clubs will come to Chapel Hill next week to take part in the seventh annual dramatic festival of the Carolina Dramatic Association and the State Dramatic Tournament, held under the auspices of the bureau of community drama of the extension division of the University.

The pilgrimage this year is expected to set a new high record for attendance. Many dramatic clubs, from schools and other organizations representing nearly every section of the state, staged plays in the statewide contest this year. Virtually all the 100 or more clubs that are members of the Carolina Dramatic Association will send delegates. Visitors and contestants will begin arriving Wednesday for the program that gets underway the following day.

Registration of the delegates will take place at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon. The program proper will be initiated by the final Community Club contests in original plays and in play production, to be staged at 7:30 and at 9 o'clock, respectively, Thursday night.

The greater part of Friday's program will be taken up by an Institute on the problems and tendencies of the Little Theatre movement. Discussions will be led by such authorities as Frederick Koch, director of the Carolina Playmakers; W. R. Wunsch, of the Asheville Little Theatre; Luther Greene, of the Universi-

HELEN PUGH TO APPEAR HERE ON MONDAY EVENING

Youthful Pianist Comes To Chapel Hill After Successful Performance In Florida; Set For Methodist Church.

Helen Pugh, young pianist from Asheville who has become nationally famous, will be the next artist on the student entertainment program, in the Methodist church Monday evening at 8:30 o'clock.

The Asheville Citizen on March 23 carried an interesting detailed story of the triumph of Miss Pugh in the recent concert at Daytona Beach, Fla., when she captured the attention of the country. Aside from the musical importance of being soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra under the direction of no less a celebrity than Henri Verbrugghen and the news interest of flowers sent her by John D. Rockefeller, her success was the more interesting because, due to the fact that the orchestra is constantly traveling from point to point and therefore has no time for rehearsals, Miss Pugh played without a rehearsal of any kind with the orchestra.

Miss Pugh has a perfect tech-

PREPARE PLANS FOR COMING OF HERBERT AMES

Committee Chosen To Formulate Three-Day Program During Visit of Distinguished Englishman.

RAY FARRIS IS CHAIRMAN

A meeting of all students interested in international affairs will be held Monday night in 214 Saunders hall to make plans for the coming of Sir Herbert Ames, first treasurer of the League of Nations, the latter part of next week. From this meeting a student Forum on International affairs is expected to be organized.

Ray Farris, president of the student body has been selected as chairman of the committee composed of Fleming Wily, Red Greene, Marion Alexander, Travis Brown, Will Yarborough, John Lang, Bob Graham, Herman Schnell and Mac Gray to begin organization of the forum and to promote interest in the visit of Sir Herbert Ames.

The visit of the distinguished Englishman will be under the auspices of the Carnegie Endowment for Internationa Peace. He arrives here Thursday afternoon and will remain until Sunday. Thursday afternoon Sir Herbert will discuss the "Promise of Peace" and on the other days he will discuss the league and peace conference.

A round table discussion of the afternoon's talk will be held that night. During two class periods Friday "The Mandate System" and "Protection of the Minority" will be discussed while that afternoon "Social Work of the League" will be the topic of Sir Herbert Ames' lecture. Before he leaves Sir Herbert will talk upon "Territorial Results of the Peace Conference."

Full details of the visit will be worked out by the committee and by those attending the meeting Monday night. President Farris states that this visit should be of particular interest to all students here both because of the accomplishments of the visitor and because of the interest among the students in the efforts of the United States to promote international peace.

Election Notice

The Orange Printshop always welcomes visits from students, but because of the unusual situation of the election today, and because crowding interferes with the work of the printers, I want to request that students do not visit the Printshop tonight (Friday) after 7:30.

P. U. Board Notice

The student body should be advised that the Publications Union Board never nominates candidates for editorships of campus publications. The board does make nominations for membership on the group which will succeed it. Being purely impartial in the matter of the election of editors, the board requests all candidates for these editorial offices to refrain from claiming Publications Union Board nominations. The board serves solely as a clearing house in order to present staff nominations to the campus.

HIBBARD HELPING TO SELECT BOOKS FOR WHITE HOUSE

Dean of Arts College on Committee To Choose 500 Volumes For Presidential Library.

Addison Hibbard, dean of the school of liberal arts, was one of the committee of ten recently appointed to aid the booksellers of America in the choice of a library for the White House in Washington. Among the others on the committee were Nathan Van Patten, librarian of Leland Stanford University; George B. Utley, librarian of the Newberry Library of Chicago; Alice Roosevelt Longworth; Ruth B. Pratt, member of congress from New York; Gilbert Grosvenor, head of the National Geographic Society; John C. Eckel, a private collector; Douglas S. Watson; John Howell, and Frederick Melcher, who is chairman of the committee.

Dean Hibbard submitted a list of fifty books that are more or less representative of the best work of the south. The committee of ten is to choose 500 representative, readable books that are to be placed in the library of the White House, which has heretofore been bare. The 500 books are to form a permanent collection which is to remain in the White House despite the fortunes and change of political currents. All the booksellers of the country have been asked by the American Booksellers Association to contribute two or three dollars to make up the required fund with which the library is to be bought.

Each book is to have a bookplate designed by D. B. Updike and inside the back cover a small label with the words of presentation and each individual donor's name and city.

Dogs Minus Muzzles Will Not Be Killed

Warrants are being issued by the village of Chapel Hill for the appearance of dog owners who allow their animals to roam at large without muzzles.

Although police sometime ago announced their intention of shooting on sight all dogs found without legal biting impedimentary equipment, this order has been modified.

Those friendly dogs which can be approached readily are caught and impounded. Bullets are used only for "wild" dogs, a procedure which gives the dogs a sporting chance.

Student Body Will Choose Officers For Next Year Today; Presidential Candidates Speak In Gerrard Hall

Candidates For Presidency Of Student Body Issue Statements

(By Marion Alexander)

Appreciating the request of various voters for a statement of my policy in regard to the important position of President of the Student Body, I am glad glad to make herewith, for publication in the Daily Tar Heel, the following statement.

Two questions, it seems, are paramount in interest to the student body. First, Why am I a candidate? Second, What will I do, or expend my best efforts toward doing, if the student body sees fit to confer this high honor upon me?

These questions I shall attempt to answer as briefly, frankly and openly as possible.

I.

In the 1929 elections, 19 of 31 places, including the bulk of the major offices were filled without a vote cast. Candidates feared and refused to buck the one gigantic political party on the campus. The same party in the balloting that followed carried the other 12 places for a clean sweep of all offices.

The politicians responsible had had a great day, but what of the student body?

It is my contention that self-government has always and MUST ALWAYS be as strong, and no stronger, than the interest the voters take in their government, the part they play in it.

Such interest and participation is impossible when three politicians in a back room can so juggle offices between different cliques and so bargain for support that it is impossible for the student body to defeat the politicians' will, and for it to select the officers which it wants.

I say nothing against the 31 men elected that day. I know them all, like them all, and have a sincere respect for them. Some were the best men for their places, some were not, but be that as it may, ours is a government of the student body, and the student body should have the right to decide who is the best man.

Three years of being a student and three years of being in the closest touch with every phase of the University through my publicity work in the News Bureau made me feel that a crime had been committeed against the student body in that election, but I had no more idea than any of the other helpless bystanders that I should get a chance this year to fight such conditions.

A number of fraternity and non-fraternity campus leaders concurred this year in my sentiments, agreed that the student body should select its officers, not the politicians, and that the non-fraternity men should have just representation, and pledged their support if I would run on such a ticket.

Under such conditions, and with the express understanding that I should go in office, if at all, unbound by pledges to any

(By R. C. "Red" Greene)

To the student body of the University of North Carolina:

The editor of the Daily Tar Heel has agreed to print in his columns statements made by the two student body presidency candidates in regard to their attitude toward student and campus questions.

1. If elected president of the student body, I will demand of all classes and all student organizations, collecting and disbursing student funds, audited and certified statements as to the collection and expenditure of all such funds.

2. In the past there has been altogether too little representation of every element of the campus. It is my sincere hope that, regardless of who is elected, the next administration shall inaugurate a system of greater representation; viz., the election of representatives by each and every student unit on the campus to a central advisory council, formed solely to advise and aid student officials in carrying out administrative policies.

3. I believe in a square deal for every Carolina man and in the event of my election the the event of my election the student council would consider each individual case, ignoring precedents, thus guaranteeing that each case handled would be judged upon human values alone.

4. The presidency of the student body should guarantee individual liberty of speech, action, and thought. The position is a dignified one and not that of a hired detective, whose sole unhealthy purpose is to ferret out any so-called violations of the student code.

5. I believe in the integrity of the Carolina honor system as a system and would pledge myself to its full and sane application.

6. I believe that the student body presidency should foster the logical development of intramural athletics, guaranteeing an opportunity to every student to develop his physical ability to its fullest extent.

7. In order to enjoy the full benefits of reciprocity among various colleges of the state, which reciprocity aims at the mutual exchange of student rights such as free admission to athletic games, and of all other phases of student life, I am interested in the establishment of a state federation of students.

8. Any regime which I should be connected with would be consecrated to the task of knitting together whatever factions may be in existence. The Carolina spirit of cooperation and friendship must be preserved.

In closing, I am under no pledges, promises, obligations, or ties to any one man, clique, or organization, and I stand for free expression of the will of the student body and their inviolable right to direct the administration of student government here.

Sincerely,
"Red" Greene

Polls Will Be Open At 9 This Morning and Closed at 5 This Afternoon.

TO BE IN Y. M. C. A. LOBBY

Hottest Campaign In Recent Years Close With Elections Today; Heavy Vote Predicted By All.

Climaxing a campaign such as is seldom witnessed on the campus will be the elections of class and campus offices from nine this morning to five this afternoon. Two parties have published complete lists of their candidates while one man is seeking office on an independent ticket.

The elections will be presided over by Ray Farris, president of the student body, while the only poll will be maintained in the lobby of the Y. M. C. A. Under the Australian system the names will be rotated on the ballots.

Yesterday morning the two candidates for the presidency of the Student body gave short talks in Gerrard hall during chapel period. Further statements were expected from the candidates.

The nominees for the student body presidency, "Red" Greene and Marion Alexander, presented their respective platforms before a small but enthusiastic audience in Gerrard hall yesterday morning. Both candidates outlined briefly their understanding of the office's requirements and their plans for their fulfillment.

"Red" Greene, speaking first, gave as the main planks of his platform an increase of the spirit of cooperation between students and officers and of mu-

MEDICAL COURSE OFFERED DOCTORS

Clinic To Be Conducted In Four Sections of State During Month of June.

The medical school and extension division of the University, in cooperation with the North Carolina Tuberculosis Association, the State Medical Society, and the State Board of Health, will offer a course in diagnosis of diseases of the chest, emphasizing the detection of incipient tuberculosis, at four clinical centers in the state during the month of June, according to R. M. Grumman, director of the extension division, in charge of arrangements.

Goldsboro and Rutherfordton are to be two of the class centers, the others yet to be selected.

Dr. F. M. McPhedran, of the Henry Phipps Institute, Philadelphia, is to be the instructor. He will spend a week at each of the centers, meeting the classes daily for lecture and clinical instruction.

The negro doctors of the state will be invited to a clinic to be held at A. & T. College, Greensboro, at some time during Dr. McPhedran's stay in North Carolina.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Old things are always in good repute, present things in disfavor.—Tacitus.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

If Cal had known what hard work it is to write for a living, he might have chosen to run in 1928.—Arizona Producer.

"Mr. Borah," says a Washington analyst of the political situation, "is himself again." But that doesn't make it much clearer.—Detroit News.

There's a new disease scare prevailing throughout the nation called "parrot fever." If a habit of talking much and saying little started it, congress had better look to its defenses.—Akron Beacon-Journal.

Tar Heel Topics

The question of the day: who are you gonna vote for?

A word to the wise: don't wear your new suit today. The politicians are likely to do plenty of vote-snatching around the polls.

"Additional details of the meeting will be published in a later issue of the tedetaoinshrdluetaio Tar Heel'—extract from story in yesterday's issue of the S. L. C. D. As if the Tar Heel isn't cussed enough by persons not on the staff!

Before the beginning of the Carolina-Maryland debate in Gerrard hall it was announced that both teams had prepared the affirmative side of the question, due to a misunderstanding. The officials should have kept quiet—the audience wouldn't have known the difference.

Although 658 of the 944 who voted in the Daily Tar Heel's prohibition poll favored repeal of the 18th Amnedment, the real news in the results is that 358 professed that they did not drink. Guess Dr. Horace Williams was right when he said that there aren't honest men in the student body.

The True Import Of Elections Day

Elections day always provides a colorful spectacle at the University. When the elections are as closely contested as they will be today, a vital human drama is enacted around the polls. Rival candidates and proselytizing priests of all political faiths rub elbows in the throng about the polls, haranguing prospective voters in an attempt to convert them to "the true light." Ebbs and flows in the tide of votes bring exuberant joy and heart-rending disappointment out of all proportion to the importance of the contested offices.

Usually campus elections are entirely devoid of real issues. The candidates must conduct their campaigns for votes on the basis of their personal qualifications rather than upon their attitudes on questions of importance to the constituency; student officials decide very few genuine issues during their tenures of office, and the attitudes of candidates are usually identical on these issues. Therein lies an explanation of the vast amount or personal slander and petty muck-racking which accompany all campus elections.

Although today's elections will be an exception inasmuch as there appears to be at least one clearly defined issue at stake, victory for one or another of the two parties is of very minor importance to the welfare of the student body as a whole. The only important aspect of the elections from a campus-wide viewpoint is that the results should represent the concensus of opinion of the entire student body rather than that of two or three small cliques within it. And the entire body politic, especially the inert mass of students who are not affiliated with fraternities, must vote if this end is to be attained.

Amercans are notorious for their indifferent attitude toward the election of their public officials. Reliable estimates place the percentage of the electorate casting votes in the last presidential election at not more than one-half. This disinterest is a decided reflection upon the American public. The present undergraduate generation will control the political and governmental fortunes of the nation within an amazingly brief space of time, and it is of great importance that it develop while it is in college the democratic ideal of representative government, which can be attained only through a keenly interested and voting body politic.

It is the privilege and duty of every University student to cast his vote at the polls today.

Reward or Opportunity?

Today the campus will decide who shall lead all the major activities next year; two men are up for every office and a lively fight is certain. The strongest backing point for each candidate that is being used is his long, illustrious, and noteworthy career; the voters are asked to reward him for three years of faithful service. "So and so really deserves that office" is the most frequently heard phrase.

But what will Mr. X do when he is elected? That is a more important question for the voter. Will he sit back and enjoy his honor, accepting the office as a fitting reward for the work he has done, or will he take the office as his golden opportunity to do something and show the best that is in him? That is the most important question. Often a man who has been "priming" for a major office will consider that his work is over when he attains it; often he does exert his best abilities in the attaining of the office rather than the administering of it.

In the election today let us consider the man with the greatest potentialities and the man with the greatest ability, rather than the man with the most ballyhooed record. Let us consider how the man will respond to his opportunity and give him the position on his abilities alone, and let us not necessarily reward him for work already done.

—J. D. McN.

TO BE FRANK

The recent appeal for information concerning the cooling drink that has been termed at times "Tom" Collins and "John" Collins elicited a number of replies. The most interesting is from a faithful reader who signs himself Park Winslow. The letter is:

My dear Fizz,

The delectable beverage of which you spoke is one of my favorite tipples. It has always been called Tom Collins by your ancestors and mine as they planted their feet upon the brass rail, and I cannot see why we should break up a custom of years and call it John Collins. John is doubtless a fine name, an admirable name, but it is not the name of a drink.

Tom Collins was an old time barkeeper (may he forever rest in peace) whose claims to immortality rest not only in the drink upon which he bestowed his name. I believe that he was also the co-author of the incomparable "Tom and Jerry," the making of which is fast becoming a lost art.

I am very glad to have earned your undying thanks, dear Fizz, but am afraid that it will do me little good. Nothing will afford me greater pleasure, however, than to take of the other part of the reward, as concocted by yourself, as soon as possible.

To longer and stronger Tom Collins,

(Signed) PARK M. WINSLOW.

Which is a very delightful letter. Except for one thing. Our ancestors, we are quite sure, never drank a Tom or a John Collins.

Now that the campus is overwhelmingly wet in sentiment (as if one did not know that before) if Mr. Winslow will meet us in the lobby of the Y. M. C. A., we will make and drink a Tom Collins, together.

The best story that comes out of the political fervor that preceded today's election was caused by yesterday's downpour. A lady in distress wanted a ride from the Alumni building to the Co-ed Shack. A helpful person called up one of the more politically-minded fraternities and advised them that if they sent over a covered conveyance immediately, they would secure votes for the ensuing elections. And the story ends with the arrival of a luxurious car, ably cnauffeured by an experienced driver. We wish we could add that the young damsel did arrive home in a dry condition but the truth is that her conscience smote her heavily and she did not wait for the taxi to arrive. And the taxi, with its driver, returned to the center of political schemings, a bit crestfallen, we know.

The Greater Chapel Hill Business Men's Association unofficially is in favor of more and greater political campaigns. More sandwiches, cigars, cigarettes and soft drinks have been sold during this past week than any other.

It is hoped that the campus will take an active interest in the movement that is growing to have such positions as Editor and Managing Editor of the Tar Heel, as well as other publications, removed from politics. After all, it is quite apparent that that which is required of a good editor is not political influence or popularity with the student body but ability and expertness in his exacting and important work. A group of informed, as well as impersonal, men ought to constitute a permanent executive board which would have the power to choose an editor and other officers on basis of merit only.

FIZZ.

Tar Heel Candidates' Policies

(By Will Yarborough)

The editor of the Daily Tar Heel has agreed to publishing statements of policy on the part of the two candidates for the editorship next year, and I submit the following items which I pledge myself to inaugurate, provided the student body should select me at the polls today:

Believing in the joint control of the Daily Tar Heel by the editor, the board, and the student body, I pledge myself to return the paper into the hands of the student body. Too long, competition for the editorship has been a matter of stifling opposition; too long, the selection of the editor has been controlled by a few; I believe that every man enrolled in the University has the right to run for the editorship.

If elected editor, I should require that no advertiser be granted favors denied to others.

A larger and more efficiently operated staff should be maintained in order to insure full coverage of all student events.

I favor free expression of all student opinion through the Open Forum columns.

Through the editorial columns of the Daily Tar Heel I should demand publication of financial statements by all classes and organizations which collect and spend student funds, or audited financial reports of money disbursed at least once a year.

I believe that the editor should show a greater personal interest and contact with the reportorial staff.

And I further pledge to keep the paper on a sane, understandable level but to eradicate all errors in grammar and fact, working toward the ideal of making the Daily Tar Heel one of the five best daily college papers in the United States.

(Signed) WILL YARBOROUGH.

(By Joe Jones)

During my three years on the editorial staff of the Tar Heel I have been impressed with the remarkable improvement in the paper. I believe that the Daily Tar Heel plays an important role in student life, and I have an earnest desire to work for its further improvement.

Since I am under obligations to no one for my present position on the staff, and since I have no fraternity affiliations, I shall, if I am elected to the editorship, be in a position to champion without reservations the best interests of the entire student body.

If elected I intend to follow Editor Holder's precedent of personally writing six editorials each week, and I shall strive at all times to maintain a vigorous and fearless editorial policy. My foremost aim will be to support student sentiment and all general movements arising from the student body. The Open Forum columns shall be devoted to free expression of student opinions at all times, if I am elected.

I have made absolutely no promises concerning staff positions or promotions to any member of the staff or to any one else, for if elected I shall award positions on the basis of merit alone. My freedom from all fraternity and political obligations will enable me to do this.

Having frequently been tormented by having my own stories butchered up in the Tar Heel, I contemplate a more careful editing of copy. I likewise have plans for improvement in the makeup and content of the editorial page.

Running as a non-fraternity man on a non-fraternity platform, I take this means of clearing up a question about which there seems to be some misunderstanding: Not only have I had no intentions whatsoever of joining a fraternity, but my pledges to my non-fraternity supporters precludes all possibility of my becoming a member of a fraternity now or at any time in the future!

Sincerely

JOE JONES.

Readers' Opinions

FOR INTOXICATED PROFESSORS

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Can't something be done about those instructors in lecture courses who drone away the entire hour, never rise from their chairs, never address the class, but glance from their notes to the windows, and back to their notes? Is it only in the commerce school where such men secure positions, or is their type prevalent throughout the University?

The only method I can think of to fill these near-dead instructors with some semblance of life is for the University to furnish each department with a little fire-water, which in turn could be disbursed to the above mentioned instructors before they enter their class-rooms. I believe this plan would be agreeable to all, and would make at least two courses I know of more bearable.

Yours for intoxicated professors.

BILL O'. WRIGHTS.

Lenten Season Daily Devotion

Friday, April 4—Joy Through Service. (Read Acts 20:32-35.) Memory verse: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Meditation: To the immature this is nonsense. They have not yet discovered the mechanics of joy. We make much use of the phrase "getting a kick" out of life. Those who use a gun know that a "kick" is the rebound that comes from release of pent-up energy. "A kick out of life" comes as a part of a similar process. The child jumps up and down and laughs. The student bends to a problem and finds joy in it. The loving heart pours itself out joyfully. No man is happy for long in merely receiving things. It is nature's protest that he is not the center. Happy people are those who put the center of life outside themselves. In spending, not in getting, in realizing their noblest hidden energies, they find life's greatest and most enduring happiness.

Prayer: O God, we pray thee that we may exercise this day the noblest capacities that thou hast implanted within us. Give us wisdom and courage to put into daily practice our best thoughts and dispositions, and the things we most sincerely believe. Amen.
